What is the burden of their charge? The gentlemen will correct me if these points do not cover, in the main, their principal contentions. They are taken directly from their recent speeches on this subject.

First. They say that the consumers of electricity in the United States are being overcharged $1,000,000,000 annually; they have been known to raise the ante to a billion and a half, as in the Seven T. V. A.'s hearings. They arrive at this figure on the basis of rates charged by T. V. A. as compared with rates generally charged throughout the country. Then they go on and prove additional overcharges on the basis of comparison of rates charged by the publicly owned plant of Tacoma, Wash., and by the publicly owned systems of the Ontario Hydro Commission in Canada.

Second. They assert that the so-called Power Trust charges "are so high"—here I quote from a March 28 speech—"that it virtually amounts to the consumer paying rent to the Power Trust to get to live in his own house or do business in his own establishment." They purport to show, further, that the dead weight of these alleged overcharges constitute a deterrent to recovery and reemployment as an added cost burden to industry.

Let us examine the facts.

They set up the T. V. A. rates as standards upon which the fairness of rates charged by private industry shall be judged. All above the T. V. A. rate level constitute a piratical overcharge, according to their thesis.

T. V. A. OVERCHARGE ON UNITED STATES TAXPAYERS

In the first place, the sum of the difference between the average rates for the Nation and the average rates for a town like Tupelo represents not the overcharge on the consumer but T. V. A.'s overcharge on the Federal taxpayer.

By the yardstick of T. V. A. rates, the Federal taxpayers would be overcharged a billion dollars annually to make up the losses if the Nation should be T. V. A.-ized, as the gentlemen have so often advocated.

This statement can be proved very simply. Let us suppose that the private utilities enjoyed the same immunity from honesty that T. V. A. has. We can quickly determine then whether T. V. A.'s rates are fair by the yardstick of honest bookkeeping.

At the end of the fiscal year 1940 T. V. A. will have an investment of $343,000,000 in dams, and so forth. Congress appropriated that money. In its annual report showing "net income" T. V. A. makes no deduction whatever for interest on any part of this sum. The average cost of capital to private companies now is about 6 percent, including bonds, preferred stock, and common stock. Under congressional authorization of last year T. V. A. has also issued $45,000,000 in bonds for the purchase of private electrical systems. On these bonds T. V. A. pays to R. F. C. 2.5 percent interest.

If it were a private concern, T. V. A. would have to pay interest at 6 percent to its financial backer—the United States Treasury—totaling $21,600,000 annually. It actually pays 2.5 percent, or about $1,125,000, on a small fraction of its total investment, and no interest at all on the rest. In other words, T. V. A. is paying 5.2 percent of the amount of interest a private concern would pay—a 94.8-percent subsidy in interest alone, paid by the people of the United States everywhere, for the benefit of the T. V. A.'s Tupelos.

In 1938 the private industry paid out $715,000,000 to meet its interest and dividend requirements. This is the figure for operating companies and has nothing to do with the holding companies and their so-called write-ups. Had they enjoyed the advantages of the free backing of the Federal Treasury to the same extent that T. V. A. enjoyed it, they would have had to pay out for the use of money only $37,200,000. They could have passed on to their consumers $677,800,000 in rate reductions from interest savings alone. But the utility industry does not have a Santa Claus. It has to go to the public and borrow the money and sell the stocks with which to operate the business. And the public, unlike Uncle Sam, will not put up the money without a definite prospect of return on the investment.

T. V. A. A PROPRIETARY BUSINESS

It is not my contention that T. V. A. should pay the Federal Treasury interest at the rate of 6 percent, the same as private companies must pay for capital. I merely contend that if we are going to use the rates of this Federal agency as the yardstick of the fairness of private rates, then those rates should be predicated on comparable capital costs. I further contend that T. V. A., as a proprietary business, should pay interest on all of its investment and not on one-seventh of its investment only. The amount of that interest rate should be at least as much as the money costs the Government to borrow, and the interest payments should be actually made to the United States Treasury. T. V. A. is millions in arrears to the Treasury now on interest payments.

Then there is the matter of taxes. The utility industry paid $325,000,000 in taxes in 1938 to Federal, State, and local taxing units. That is 15.9 percent of its gross revenues. T. V. A. pays out 5 percent of its wholesale revenues in taxes. It sells at wholesale. The utility industry sells at wholesale and at retail.

I can hear T. V. A. proponents moan with anguish at the suggestion that T. V. A. pay equal taxes with private companies. Let us waive that point. Let us just assume that private companies are assessed the T. V. A. 5 percent of their gross sales, whether wholesale or retail. That would still give them a $222,000,000 reduction from their present tax level.

Thus, on taxes and the cost of capital alone, if the private industry enjoyed identical privileges with T. V. A., it would have been able to pass on to consumers rate reductions amounting to $890,000,000 annually—within $110,000,000 of the billion dollars the advocates of T. V. A. claim to be overcharged to American consumers. Government freight rates, the franking privilege, and other immunities and privileges accorded a Federal agency, plus normal private fixed charges, such as insurance, if extended to the private industry, would more than account for the remaining difference. The fact that a number of the cities distributing T. V. A. power are using systems financed by P. W. A., supplemented by 45 percent Feredal donations, may have an important bearing at that point.

Let us put it another way:

T. V. A.'s friends say the utilities are charging a billion dollars more than they should be charging. The total private power bill of the Nation in 1938 was $2,050,000,000. Let us wipe out every cent available for interest and dividends. That amounts to $715,000,000. Half of it goes to insurance companies to support 65,000,000 life-insurance policies. Life-insurance policyholders get no consideration from the New Deal anyway. Let us forget about them. Let us wipe out the payments in dividends and interest to the holding companies and destroy the equities of their 4,000,000 investors.

Still there remains $285,000,000 of the alleged overcharge yet to be located.

SHALL IT BE TAXES OR WAGES?

We cannot take the money out of purchases of coal and oil and gas; nor can it be taken from necessary repairs, maintenance, and other fixed requirements.

Where, then, can we find the additional money for this overcharge of a billion dollars? There are just two possible sources: Wages or taxes.

I leave it to any fair-minded man whether they would cut the $430,000,000 private operating utility pay roll to $145,000,000 or cut the $325,000,000 tax yield to $40,000,000. They will have to do one or the other, or a good deal of both, to make their "billion-dollar overcharge" hokum stand up.

There is weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth in the Tennessee Valley these days. All because T. V. A. gobbled up the private power companies and left a score or more of counties broke for lack of taxes.

We have legislation pending before us now which would relieve them of this pitiable condition. They want Uncle Sam to force T. V. A. to pay these counties for the taxes lost when it took over its private competitors. But they want this money taken out of T. V. A. revenues first before any other expenses of the agency are deducted. That would leave the Federal taxpayer holding the bag. After T. V. A. pays its local taxes, pays its operating expenses, sets aside its depreciation reserves, pays interest on its R. F. C. bonds, then and only then would the Federal taxpayer get a possible break. If they should set up regulations by which T. V. A. would pay the Federal Treasury full interest and amortization charges first on the Federal investment, then took care of all legitimate expenses, and after that reimbursed the counties for tax losses, there might be more appeal in their present plea.

So the only place to reduce power costs is in salaries and wages. The Department of Commerce national income study states that the salaries of executive officers of operating utility companies amount to six-tenths of 1 percent of the total gross sales. According to the T. V. A. propagandists, these Power Trust executives are milking the public with their excessive salaries, so let us fire them all. The utility industry then will get along without any executive direction and the customers will be saved how much? A good deal less than 2 cents per residential customer per month.

WAGE CUTS TO MISSISSIPPI LEVELS?

So you will have to go after the wage earner and cut his wages if you are going to obtain any reductions in rates to justify the frequently heard "billion-dollar overcharge."

In fact, to get it all from wages alone and nothing from taxes, you would have to cut wages in the electrical industry from $430,000,000 to $145,000,000. That would mean cutting wages 66 percent from an average of about $1,700 per year to about $550 per year for a quarter of a million wage earners.

T. V. A. makes a virtue of the fact that it pays prevailing rates of wages of the surrounding communities. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in a survey of entrance rates of pay of common laborers in 20 industries in July 1939, the T. V. A. States had the following hourly rates:

Mississippi	$0.322
Tennessee	.322
Georgia	.262

Compare that with the average of 57.6 cents per hour paid, according to the official figures, in the State of Ohio. On that basis Ohio had a "labor overcharge" of 78 percent over Tennessee and Mississippi and a "labor overcharge" of 55 percent over Alabama and a "labor overcharge" of 119 percent over Georgia.

Of such are the prevailing labor wages with which T. V. A. conforms and which are a controlling factor in electric rates.

A byproduct of these figures is the obvious conclusion that if we in Ohio do pay a few cents more directly for our current, at least our wage scale is sufficient to compensate for the difference many times over.

According to the Consumer Market Data Handbook for 1939, the number of individual income-tax returns per thousand of population showed: For Mississippi, 7; for Tennessee, 16; for Ohio, 38.

Could it be that this might explain the advocacy of such reckless Federal waste for projects like the T. V. A.?

From March 4, 1933, to June 30, 1939, the Internal Revenue Bureau collected $1,541,000,000 from the State of Ohio, and from the State of Mississippi $27,884,000, 1.8 percent as much as from Ohio. In that period the State of Ohio received back in Federal expenditures of all kinds $381,735,000 less than it contributed to the Federal Government. This amount would have paid for T. V. A.'s investment to that date and leave $38,000,000 over. Meantime the State of Mississippi received Federal contributions totaling $343,686,000, or $315,800,000 more than it contributed to Uncle Sam. The story for Tennessee is similar.

Small wonder at the saying that the Tennessee River flows through five States and drains the Nation.

The State of Tennessee is in the throes of a tax nightmare because of taxes lost by the taking over of the private utilities by public nontaxable bodies, either the T. V. A. or its subsidiary municipal and cooperative agencies. Real-property taxes must be increased from 40 to 100 percent to replace such losses.

TAXES, NOT POWER COST, MORE IMPORTANT

I have been informed of several Tennessee industrial concerns which, unless relieved of the intolerable tax loads forced upon them by T. V. A.'s power policy, must either go out of business or move to new localities. Instead of attracting new industries, unemployment and distress are following in the wake of T. V. A.'s conquest of private enterprise.

In Ohio I have made an examination of the relative costs in manufacturing as between the cost of power and the cost of taxes as elements in the value of the finished product.

In Cincinnati there is an excellent tool-manufacturing concern, employing 400 skilled artisans. It has a county tax rate of $1.998 per hundred. This compares with rates as high as $4 per hundred in Tennessee, as disclosed in the recent hearings before the Military Affairs Committee and before the Independent Offices Appropriations Committee. The element of power costs in relation to total value of sales for this company was 1.2 percent. Taxes loomed twice as large, 2.9 percent.

A valve manufacturer, employing 600 in the same city, found his power costs 1.66 percent of his total costs, and taxes were almost three times as much, or 4.48 percent.

An Ohio rubber company, with a pay roll of 1,200, and with a county tax rate of $2 per hundred, found its power costs 1.27 percent of its gross receipts; tax costs were 2.11 percent of gross.

I made inquiries in my own city of Cleveland. I found that in 1938 three representative textile companies in my home city, with a total pay roll of 1,964 persons, paid $95,750, exclusive of the Ohio sales tax, the intangible-property tax, the corporate-franchise tax, the unemployment-insurance tax, the Federal capital-stock tax, or the corporate-income tax—real-estate and tangible-property taxes alone were $95,750. And the same companies had a power cost for the year of $34,600—about a third as much as taxes.

Real-estate and tangible-property taxes of three representative Cleveland automotive and parts manufacturers, with a pay roll of 2,150, amounted to $305,670 in 1938, while they paid $235,740 for power.

According to T. V. A.'s own announcement, power rates have been cut to its new customers $4,000,000 annually. By its own figures, it has displaced by purchase of reservoir lands or purchase of private companies $3,690,000 of local and State taxes, to say nothing of an annual $1,000,000 Federal tax loss. This amounts to robbing the tax Peter to pay the power Paul. But the burden of this exchange will fall heaviest on the heavy taxpaying industrial concerns. Before the T. V. A. show is over Tennessee and affected T. V. A. areas will be among the heaviest taxed areas in the country—except and unless, of course, the T. V. A. beneficiaries manage to browbeat Congress into forcing the Federal taxpayers of Ohio and elsewhere to assume the rightful burdens of the localities benefited.

"CHEAP POWER" BALLYHOO LOSES LURE

Before we examined these facts, chambers of commerce outside the T. V. A. area were alarmed by T. V. A. ballyhoo, fearing that the lure of cheap power would attract industries away from established locations to that area. Examination of the case shows that taxes more than counterweigh subsidized power rates. The Blue Book of Southern Progress issued last year tells the story of the T. V. A. blight on Tennessee industry in cold figures.

Telling the story of new industries attracted to the South in the year 1938, 5 years after the T. V. A. was created, the State of Tennessee was listed last. Its nearest rival for cellar honors had won two and a half times as much new industry. Of a total of $143,775,000 invested in the South that year, T. V. A.'s dominion of Tennessee was only able to attract $548,000—or a mere three-tenths of 1 percent of the total. On a population basis, Tennessee's share should have been $8,626,600, or 15 times as much as it actually obtained.

In Tennessee, the displaced private utilities paid in taxes more than 17 percent of their gross revenues back to the Federal, State, and local taxing agencies in taxes. This amounted to about $4,500,000 annually, including Federal taxes. Ohio, more conservative in taxation, gets 13.4 percent of the electric utilities' gross revenue in taxes. This amounts to $17,000,000—or did in 1938.

In my home county the electric, gas, and telephone utilities are included in the list of the first 10 taxpayers of Cuyahoga County. The electric company leads all the rest with $1,383,515 annual tax bill, according to our county auditor. Next is the telephone company, and further down the gas company.

Dun's Review for July 1939 clearly demonstrates that: First, compared with other manufacturing industries, the electric utilities bear from 3 to 12 times as great a tax burden; and, second, the cost of taxation is from 50 percent to 3 times as much as the cost of power in manufacture, which averages 2 percent of the final cost. Only gasoline, distilling, brewing, and tobacco products are taxed more heavily, and all of these by the Federal Government through excises. The electric industry is the biggest single taxpayer in the States and local taxing units.

Rather than remove from the tax rolls the richest single source of revenue, we Ohioans would be saving money even if we had to pay a few cents more each month on our light bills.

Although the national average cost of power in relation to finished manufactured products is 2 percent of final cost, it is true there are certain electrochemical and electrometallurgical processes in which this cost runs as high as 30 to 40 percent, although it might be noted pay-roll costs are far below par. For such business we see the Bonneville Administration vying with the T. V. A. to offer lower and lower rates—whoever wins, the Federal taxpayer must lose.

The fat cats, great corporate industrial organizations such as the Aluminum Trust, admittedly benefit by T. V. A.'s industrial power rate.

But how about the little fellow in business, the small independent merchant and manufacturer whose power needs are small, yet are larger than those of the domestic consumer and smaller than the big manufacturer? How does he fare under T. V. A. rate? Apparently the small-business man is the forgotten man in this New Deal rate set-up.

Too few in number to make his voice heard politically, too small financially to make his protest felt economically, tied to local conditions by personal and financial ties, the small-business man in Tupelo and Tennessee helps pay the way for the popular political rates of T. V. A.

Here is the statement of W. C. C. Winfrey in the Morning Tennessean at Nashville, a small-business man of that city. After figuring out his rates before and after the great boon of T. V. A. descended upon him, Mr. Winfrey decides he is worse off than before. Hear his statement:

> I wish to call attention to the fact that commercial rates are higher instead of lower. That is, an industry of any importance and using current for more than 500 kilowatt-hours. I am on this rate, and last month my bill was $16.69 for 959 kilowatt-hours. Under T. V. A. this will amount to $18.49, an increase of $1.80. If I continue to use current until I reach the lowest step, then my bill would be $30.48, where, under the Tennessee Electric Power Co., it would be $26.73. At this point, however, I would begin to save the enormous amount of 0.003 kilowatt per hour, and at 14,500 kilowatt-hours my bill would be $145.48, under either. In other words, I must have a bill under $11.50 or over $145.48 to save.

But the point is urged that it is the residential consumer whom T. V. A. rates are supposed to chiefly benefit. We can thank the W. P. A. for illumination on this point. In 1937 the Division of Social Research, W. P. A., issued a study of Intercity Differences in Costs of Living for March 1935. At this point I shall insert into the RECORD the results of that study, based on the 59 American cities:

Percentage required—Maintenance level

Food	35.6
Clothing, clothing upkeep, personal care (total)	14.6
Housing, including water	17.6
Fuel	4.6
Ice	1.8
Household supplies, furniture, furnishings, equipment, etc	4.3
Medical care	4.2
Transportation	4.3
School attendance, church, contributions, taxes	1.9
Electricity	1.5

Average annual cost, 59 cities, $1,260.62.

This shows the cost of living for a laborer's family to be $1,260.62 a year. Food, clothing, housing—these are the major items of expense. Of the 10 listed items, electricity comes last. This item amounts to but 1½ percent of the total budget. It could be doubled or eliminated without materially affecting the whole.

This is the figure for a common laborer's family whose total income is $1,260.62—below the average for Ohio, I am glad to say.

But, according to the census of manufactures, where the average wage in manufacturing labor in Ohio is $1,379 annually, the annual wage in the State of Mississippi is a meager $573 annually. Suppose the Mississippi workman gets his electricity rate cut in half, what good will that do him? Chances are that unless he works and his wife and children work, too, he cannot even afford electricity. Can a man making $573 afford $100 for a refrigerator? And if Uncle Sam will sell him one on time payments, should he buy one? Is not the best way to spread the blessings of electricity not by reducing the price of it by Federal subsidy but by raising standards of living—wage levels—to a point where honest workingmen can afford to pay an honest unsubsidized price for it?

After all, what is all the shouting about? Has the price of bread dropped consistently each year for the past 50 years? The price of electricity has. Have the prices of food, of clothes, of rents, of medical care, of all the other necessities of life taken a step downward each year for the past 50 years? They have not. Electricity has. Here they stand, political power propagandists, screaming ever for cheap power when power is cheaper today than any other necessity of life on the market, and getting cheaper ever day despite increasing tax burdens.

T. V. A. advocates have many times made a great point that since T. V. A. rates were introduced in 1933, electric rates of the Nation, under fear of competition, have been so reduced as to effect savings of hundreds of millions of dollars to consumers. Examination of the records shows that the rate reductions have been continuous and regular since the industry was organized. Their argument there is on a par with their "billion-dollar overcharge" hocus pocus.

The drop in the price of electricity to homes in this country has been no more rapid under the New Deal than before. The most recent pamphlet of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics backs up this statement with convincing figures. I refer to its pamphlet, Changes in Retail Prices of Electricity 1923–38. At page 2 is an index of retail prices of electricity covering this period.

Indexes are shown for the cost in each year during this period for monthly consumptions of 25, 40, and 100 kilowatt-hours.

UNITED STATES DATA PROVES T. V. A. NO RATE BOON

The period under the New Deal as covered by the pamphlet would embrace the 6-year period from 1933 to 1938. During this 6-year period the combined average index of these three consumptions decreased from 81.9 at the beginning of 1933 to 71.6 in December 1938. This was a drop of 12.6 percent. In the immediately preceding 6 years covering the period from 1927 to 1932, the combined index dropped from 95.9 to 81.9 or a decrease of 14.6 percent.

While the index for a consumption of 25 kilowatt-hours per month decreased more rapidly under the New Deal 6-year period than the preceding 6 years, the reverse situation existed as to the consumptions of 40 and 100 kilowatt-hours. For 25 kilowatt-hours per month the index decreased 9.7 percent for the period from 1927 to 1932 and 14.1 percent in the New Deal period from 1933 to 1938. For 40 kilowatt-hours per month the index in the first period decreased 13.9 percent and in the later period 11.3 percent. For 100 kilowatt-hours per month the decrease in the 1927–32 period was 24 percent as against only 12.1 percent decrease in the New Deal period.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics index of the national cost of living had risen to 144.2 in December 1938 from the 100 for 1913. And at the same time the downward curve of residential electric costs has dropped to 48.4. In other words, the general cost of living, housing, heating, lighting, food, all weighed together, had risen 44 percent since 1913, while at the same time the one commodity which has at the same time dropped 52 percent from the 1913 level—a spread of 96 percent—is none other than residential electricity, the cost of which now stirs the crocodile tears of demagogs and rabble rousers.

Before electricity, come the down-to-earth necessities of life, proper food, proper clothing, and proper housing. These problems are not solved by a reduction of a few cents per month on the electric-light bill. They can be solved only by lifting the earnings of the ill-clad, ill-clothed, ill-housed lower third. T. V. A. and T. V. A. rates dodge the real issue.

Eloquent and unbiased testimony of the social and economic contributions of the electric industry to the welfare of the consumers and the wage earners is found in a study released April 8 by the Brookings Institution on Productivity, Wages, and National Income.

Searching for factual basis for decisions of national policy, the information as to the electric industry is developed, incidentally to the main purpose of this disinterested study, an element which renders the conclusion doubly valuable.

GIVES MORE FOR LESS MONEY

This careful study shows that on the basis of man-hour wages and efficiency of the industry as of 1923–24 the consumers of 1936–37 would have had to pay for the volume of actual consumption for those years $1,603,000,000, but actually paid $462,000,000 less. The author states that for a given money outlay the consumer of electricity received 40 percent more for his money in 1936–37 than in 1923–24.

At the same time the industry increased its pay roll 35 percent while increasing man-hours but 4 percent. This was accomplished by an increase of the total number of workers 23 percent. Salaried workers—about 44 percent of the total employees—received 67 percent more in the later period, although man-hours increased only 29 percent. Meantime, the number of salaried workers increased 58 percent.

Meanwhile, while consumer was receiving 40 percent more for his money and wage earners were receiving more money for less work, and while pay rolls and jobs jumped, the owners of the industry, the investors, were receiving less return for the money they invested in the business. While capital investment increased 98 percent, the aggregate earnings increased only 87 percent.

No other industry in manufacturing, mining, or transportation showed anything like so favorable a record as this one which now is the victim of political witch burners who aim to seize it for political operation and control.

The real issue is to relieve industry of its artificial tax burdens which carry such wasteful projects as T. V. A., to remove artificial regulatory obstructions by a bureaucracy dedicated to the belief that capitalism is finished. Then by the normal processes of economics, the salvation of the lower third will be found in jobs and honest wages.

Would it be fair to suggest that the true motive behind all this blather about cheap power is not sincere concern for the welfare of the workingman but the greed for bureaucratic power of politicians who wish to create a great Federal political machine by T. V. A.-izing the Nation?

But they also make the overcharge claim on the basis of Tacoma, Wash., rates, and the rates of the Ontario Hydro Commission. T. V. A.'s rates may be subsidized, a drain on the Federal taxpayer and so on, but what about Tacoma?

I promise it will not be necessary to deal so lengthily with these propositions, since many of the statements applied against T. V. A.'s rates are equally effective in both instances.

Let us take Tacoma first.

Tacoma has had a municipal light plant for 47 years. Admittedly, it has some of the lowest rates in the United States. But does it follow that if the company in your home town sells electricity less cheaply than Tacoma does that your company is overcharging you? If that be so, then T. V. A. is overcharging the citizens of Tupelo, because Tacoma's rates are below Tupelo's. And remember that Tupelo had a municipal plant long before there was ever a T. V. A.

ARE 1,800 MUNICIPAL PLANTS OVERCHARGING TOO?

There are over 1,800 municipal electric plants in the United States, every one of which is overcharging its customers just as much as your private company back home is overcharging you—if you take Tacoma as a criterion. Instead of taking one lone exception to the rule, an average of all municipal-plant rates would have proven that the municipal plants either are overcharging, the private companies are undercharging, or that the municipal plants are charging taxation rates, not political rates, or rates based on sound economics.

The facts about Tacoma are simple. It had available cheap waterpower sites and has enjoyed unusual nonpolitical management. So the money from those rates was not wasted by a corrupt city-hall gang. This money was plowed back into retirement of debt as rapidly as possible. Oh yes, the Tacoma plant now makes a contribution in lieu of city taxes, but not so for many long years, and today bonded indebtedness represents only about 20 percent of the city's investment in power.

But the whole story of Tacoma's rates is not yet told.

Back in 1890 Tacoma had a population of 36,000. It was situated on one of the finest deep-water sounds on either coast, with a rich back country to draw upon. It was blessed with enormous resources of lumber and water power. At that time, back in the semiarid jack-rabbit country of Washington, 300 miles and a range of mountains from the sea coast, struggling young Spokane had a meager population of 19,992. Today Spokane has outstripped Tacoma with all of its natural advantages, and has a population of 115,514, while Tacoma, once twice its size, now boasts but 106,817 population. Tacoma for the past 47 years has had the glorious benefits of public ownership. Spokane has been served by a private company. The private company pays 18½ percent of its gross in taxes and still sells its power at an average of 2.1 cents per kilowatt-hour for domestic consumers and sells a third more power to its average consumer than does T. V. A.

In 1935, Tacoma had bank clearings of $304,000,000 and Spokane of $445,000,000. In 1936, the net public debt was $127 per capita in Tacoma while Spokane's debt was only $33 per capita. The total Spokane tax rate, 1939, was $44.70, while Tacoma's was $57.72, both with the same assessment ratios.

And mark this: Tacoma's average residential use of power—despite its slightly cheaper rates—was 1,900 as against Spokane's 2,200 kilowatt-hour average use per customer.

TAX DIFFERENTIAL TELLS THE TALE

At a rate hearing before the Oregon Public Utilities Commission at Portland recently, uncontested evidence was produced showing that Northwestern Electric Co., serving part of Portland and suburbs, with a fixed capital of $21,000,000, had paid $8,868,000 in taxes since formation 25 years ago. Alongside that record was Tacoma's $24,000,000 plant account on which it had made tax contributions totaling $2,678,788 in 47 years. On the relative basis it should have contributed 16 to 17 millions of dollars over that period. Last year the smaller Northwestern Electric paid $731,000 in taxes, Tacoma about one-third as much or $248,000.

What happened is obvious. While the private company was paying taxes, Tacoma's managers were diverting revenues that a private company would have paid in taxes to the retirement of bonded debt. And the taxpayer footed the difference. The trouble with that system was that they had cheap power and high taxes.

Taxes being more important in the growth of a city than power, Tacoma lagged behind while Portland, equally favored by nature, but with private ownership and lower taxes, leaped to a dominating position in the Pacific Northwest with a population of 300,000.

And that's the Tacoma story in a nutshell. In a region abounding in cheap power, its rates are comparable, taxes discounted, with rates of nearby private companies in Portland, Seattle, and Spokane. But the towns with privately owned companies, enjoying cheaper tax rates, have gone forward in population, wealth, and industry, while tax-ridden Tacoma has lagged behind. Again the story of power "overcharge" versus tax "overcharge." Which would you prefer for your town?

And now to unmask the final bugabco of the billion-dollar overcharge fable—the rates of the Ontario Hydroelectric Commission. In the light of our T. V. A. and Tacoma experiences, I shall be brief lest much of the discussion become repetitive.

Here again is a case of Government subsidized power. The influence of escaped taxes and, as in the case of Tacoma, but not in the case of the T. V. A., the availability of cheap power sources.

The city of Toronto gets its power through the lines of Ontario Hydro from Niagara Falls. The city of Buffalo gets its power from a private company from Niagara power, generated on the American side, and also from steam plants. The source of power is identical. The populations of the two cities are nearly comparable: 573,000 for Buffalo; 623,000 for Toronto.

Comparison of Buffalo and Toronto rates

	Toronto, 12 months ended Oct. 31, 1935	Buffalo, 12 months ended Dec. 31, 1935
Population	623,582	573,076
Cents per kilowatt-hour (domestic)	1.35	3.27
Cents per kilowatt-hour (commercial)	2.27	1.75
Cents per kilowatt-hour (industrial)	.83	.66
Cents per kilowatt-hour (total average)	1.36	1.39
Taxes paid	$38,041	$1,921,162
Cents per kilowatt-hour (total average excluding taxes)	1.35	1.18

Again we find the residential customer living in a fool's paradise of political rates below cost, while commerce and industry pay the higher rate, and the consumer in his role as taxpayer foots the balance of the bill. The annual light bill of a family in Toronto would be about $7.50 less than the same family would pay for the same average amount of current in Buffalo. But if the family lived in a $4,000 house, the differential in city and school taxes in favor of Buffalo would be $22.60 annually. The tax Peter robs to pay the power Paul in Canada as well as in T. V. A.

One reason the Tacoma and Ontario hydro figures show to advantage, in comparison with American private figures, is that in both areas competition from fuels for water heating and for cooking is negligible. In Tacoma and in Ontario gas or coal are relatively so expensive as to put electricity in a competitive position. But if one were to combine the water heating, cooking, and electric bills of comparative customer groups in the three areas the story is different.

In spite of the low rates in Tacoma and Toronto, the combination gas and electric bill for the domestic customer using electricity for lighting and small appliances, and gas for cooking and water heating, is substantially less in Buffalo and Cleveland, for instance, than the equivalent all-electric bill in Tacoma or Toronto; 500 kilowatt-hours in Tacoma cost $5.30, and in Toronto cost $5.04. In Buffalo, the equivalent on the combined gas and electric bill is $4.63, and in Cleveland is $4.78. That accounts for the fact that the use of electricity for domestic purposes is not as high in Buffalo and Cleveland as it is in Tacoma and Toronto.

The Organic Act which created the Hydro Commission on May 10, 1906, fixed the responsibility of the Commission to set up an annual sum sufficient to form, in 30 years, a sinking fund for the retirement of the securities issued by the Province; that is, the cost of operating, maintaining, renewing, and insuring works. In other words, the entire debt should be retired in 30 years, and a depreciation fund set up sufficient to install a new system. But at the end of 30 years, the debt of the Commission was still 91 percent of its total investment. Even Tacoma has a far better record than our Canadian neighbors.

Again the deadly parallel of debt and taxation under public and under private ownership of utilities.

The per capita expenditures for 1901 in the Province of Quebec, were $2.74, in Ontario, $1.85. Ten years later, after 5 years of public ownership, Ontario had a government cost of $3.92 per capita; Quebec, $3.20. Taxation has risen in both provinces since. But in 1937 government costs in Ontario were almost double Quebec's; $14.02 for Quebec, and $26.35 for Ontario.

The same story is reflected in the debts of the two Provinces. Until 1904, Ontario had no bonded debt, while at that time Quebec was carrying a debt of $20.40 per capita. In 1906, when the Hydro Commission was created, the Ontario debt was $3.85 per capita; Quebec's, $16.12 per capita.

Each year until the World War, Quebec's per capita debt declined, Ontario's rose. With the war, and later with the depression, the indebtedness of both Provinces rose rapidly. But Ontario went three times as fast as Quebec; from $11.29 in 1914, to $163.15 for every man, woman, and child in the Province—including the Dionne quintuplets. That was in 1936, the latest figures I have. In the same year the Province of Quebec had a public debt of less than one-third as much, or $53.21.

One more word and I will be finished with the Canadian power story. At this point, I wish to insert into the RECORD a comparison of wages paid in Toronto and in Buffalo for similar work, showing a 10- to 25-percent differential in favor of the man who works in a town having private enterprise in charge. It demonstrates that he does not require an artificially distorted political rate to meet his electricity bills, that he makes enough money to pay an honest rate.

Bricklayers	$1.25	$0.90
Glaziers	1.00
Carpenters	1.00	.80

[3] Electrical workers.

The dead hand of public ownership, with its artificially high industrial power rates, tending to discourage industrial development, is reflected in the story of population growth of the two Provinces. From 1911 to 1931, while Quebec gained 43 percent in population, its sister Province, Ontario, gained 35 percent. Quebec, the oldest Province, was holding its own in relation to the population of the entire Dominion, despite the population drains of the new Provinces. But Ontario, which in 1911 had 35 percent of the entire Dominion population, had slipped to 33 percent by 1931.

And now I am done. Never again do I intend to discuss this silly "billion-dollar overcharge" bunk. There is nothing more to be said about it. I have proved it is sheer, unadulterated, manufactured political baloney. Advocates of T. V. A. have spent thousands upon thousands of taxpayers' dollars spreading this fable as the gospel truth. And now it is proved to be a snare and a delusion. Let us hear no more from them—but I am not sanguine enough to expect as much. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the close of the special orders of the day I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter addressed by the Governor of New Jersey to the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from a book written by a United States Ambassador to Russia under the Czar, David R. Francis, entitled "Russia From the American Embassy," and also my own remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by Col. James Van Horn at Westover Field, Chicopee, Mass., on the dedication of that air base on April 6, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

WAGE AND HOUR ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, for some time I have been wanting an opportunity to discuss a piece of legislation pending in the House which has been written about quite a bit and talked about quite a bit, but very little time has been spent in giving it a correct interpretation. Those who are interested in the legislation to which I refer, that is, the wage-hour amendments, have been both criticized and complimented. The particular bills which will come before this House on Thursday, April 25, are H. R. 5435, H. R. 7133, and H. R. 7349. I can speak for one of them, as I am interested in H. R. 7133, occasionally referred to as the Barden bill.

I have no desire to wreck the Wage and Hour Act. I served on the committee that wrote that legislation. There are some provisions in the act now of which I am the author. One provision, I recall distinctly, was the graduated rise in wages. I believe most of you will agree that that provision saved the life of the bill. Another was the provision which made it possible for the States to cooperate in the enforcement of the act. Therefore, I say now that there is no disposition on my part to injure either the Wage and Hour Act or those who may be enjoying the benefits of that act.

The amendments contained in H. R. 7133 do not in any way affect the cotton mill industry clothing workers, general industrial labor as we refer to it, the coal mines, or anything else except insofar as the amendments attempt to provide more protection for the agricultural situation and for the producers of agricultural products.

It so happens that we have 32,000,000 farmers in the United States, and no one would venture the assertion that their earnings amount to 30 cents an hour, 15 cents an hour, or even 10 cents an hour. They are below 5 cents an hour in many cases.

Let us, for a moment, look at the problems confronting agriculture, using the same base period as used by the Statistical Department of the United States Government, that period between 1910 and 1914. We find that in 1937 farm prices were 21 percent above base period; in 1938 farm prices were 22 percent lower than in 1937, and 5 percent lower than they were in 1910 and 1914. In 1939 farm prices were 24 percent lower than they were in 1937, and 7 percent lower than in 1910 to 1914. With labor supplies and materials used by agriculture increasing in cost, is it any wonder that agriculture should become alarmed with the same old custom in vogue of having the industrial areas fix the price on everything they sell, and also fix the price on everything they buy from the farmer?

Few of you have heard about some of the most important sections of H. R. 7133. I am going to briefly discuss the most important amendments in the bill.

The first amendment, or group of amendments, I may say, deals with the Puerto Rican situation, which has probably been one of the most troublesome problems with which the Administrator has had to deal. He sent an investigating committee to Puerto Rico and the committee came back with a very bad story. The Administrator recommended the identical amendment in H. R. 7133, the Department of the Interior approved, and two Governors General of Puerto Rico, the present Governor General, Admiral Leahy, and the preceding Governor General, recommended and approved the amendments. General Winship came down here last year and personally called me out of this Hall, urging that the amendments be passed. The Labor Committee approved them and the Labor Department approved them. The Senate passed the amendments, and they are now in this House. I say this ought to be a fairly good recommendation for that group of amendments contained in H. R. 7133.

The next amendment to which I wish to call your attention is the one that deals with rural home work. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] appeared before the committee and made an excellent showing for that amendment. It provides for the Administrator to permit rural home work where not in direct competition with the industrial worker, and permits the Administrator to set up a minimum piecework price that would guarantee the minimum wage and permit the work to go on. Is there anything unreasonable or unfair about that? The law wherever in force today has simply wiped out that additional income which the rural people have had. If we can protect them by throwing this safeguard around them and permitting the Administrator to fix the piece-work price, why should we not do it, for that industry is quite an item in the rural areas. This very amendment was approved by the Administrator before the Committee on Appropriations.

There has been no trouble with that, and yet the statement is made that I would disarrange a great many people by that amendment, although I do not believe there would be one vote in the House against that particular amendment if it were put up to a vote.

The next amendment deals with partial exemptions on hours. In this connection I would like to insert in the RECORD paragraph C of section 7 (a) of the act, which deals with a part of the same problems dealt with in H. R. 7133.

This bill makes an exemption of 56 hours on the grading and storage of grain at terminal markets; the wholesale distribution of perishable or seasonal fruit; storage of terminal markets in any seasonable or perishable agricultural or horticultural commodity or handling or transportation in connection with or incidental to such operations; and the felling of trees and logging operations, and following that comes practically the same exemptions as are contained in the Norton bill, with some clarifications and changes, leaving out the area-of-production clause; but this section is not the one that gives particular concern, so I am told. So I will refer you to the bill and the present law.

The next section deals with a very important question, and that is the innocent purchaser of so-called "hot" goods. If you are in business, whether it be pulp business, cotton business, lumber business, or any business, you may happen to be in at the present time, and Mr. A comes to you to sell you some materials, lumber, cotton, or whatever it may happen to be, and you say, "Were these goods produced under the wage-hour law?" and Mr. A says "Yes." "Will you swear to it and give me an affidavit to that effect?" "Yes, sir." He signs that affidavit, he gives it to you, and you buy the goods and commingle them with your goods. If it later proves to be the fact that the goods you purchased were "hot" goods, it does not make any difference whether you bought them in good faith, without notice or anything else, they are "hot" goods, and there is no provision in the act for disposing of them.

It is simply impossible to administer this act without some provision of that kind unless the Administrator is willing to strong-arm the law and just overlook it as so far, probably, has been done to avoid public criticism, but that cannot last long.

Then I have another provision which provides for 5 days' notice where an injunction is brought to enforce an order or regulation made by the Administrator.

The penal provisions in the law are the same, the enforcement provisions in the law are the same, but this provision does this: It says to the Administrator, "Mr. Administrator, if you issue an order, then you must give the defendant 5 days' notice before you actually drag him into court." If he puts his house in order in that length of time, then why drag him into court? Have we not enough lawsuits pending?

There is another question involved; this order or this regulation made by the Administrator may in the meantime prove to be an error or prove to be illegal. This applies to rules and regulations issued by the Administrator and I think if there is any one thing that this House is pretty well together on, it is the fact that we are somewhat reluctant to pass any more laws containing three paragraphs and then permitting an administrator to write three volumes of law on it.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. SEGER. Does not the gentleman believe that even 5 days is too short a period within which to give notice to the Administrator?

Mr. BARDEN. May I say to the gentleman that I thought so, but I have done a tremendous amount of work on this bill for a year and a half, ever since the area-of-production interpretation came out. I have tried to follow a midway road and step aside from some of my personal views in order to get a workable piece of legislation. I think there is something to the gentleman's suggestion, because there are very few things you can do in 5 days, but this is 5 days' notice more than they have now.

I may say that at the time we were having hearings on this bill and when the Committee on Labor had under consideration amendments to this piece of legislation, even though 32,000,000 agricultural people live in this country, not one single one was permitted to go before that committee to present his or her views.

Not a single one, though I begged day in and day out and told the Labor Committee that the overwhelming majority of that committee did not know one thing about a farm, about agriculture, or come from agricultural areas, and I did not feel that we would be justified in shutting our ears and saying that we did not want to hear about agriculture when we were dealing with a piece of legislation that was as far reaching as this was. But that did not happen.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I think in fairness the gentleman ought to state the committee did not hear from anybody during that discussion.

Mr. BARDEN. I think in all fairness I might say to the gentleman that we heard for weeks and weeks from the Labor Department. They appeared—everybody from the Administrator down—representing every kind of interest you could think of, except agriculture, and may I say in addition to that that we heard plenty by message from other organizations.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman will admit, I think, that the representatives of the Department of Labor came at the request of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BARDEN. Oh, well, you know these administrators will always gladly consent to come down and tell us what to do, and they were there. I do not know how many thousands of pages of evidence and statements, and so forth, were collected, but the gentleman will agree with me, although we were dealing with agriculture and a very vital part of agriculture, not one single man from the Department of Agriculture was invited in there.

I pass on from that. I have another provision in these amendments. That is the 6 months' statute of limitations. I have been terribly abused about that, and I cannot for the life of me see any reason for anyone disagreeing with that provision. It simply provides a 6 months' statute of limitations, and 6 months' time is enough for an employee to find out whether or not he is being overworked and underpaid, and 6 months is time enough for the Department to find out something about it. Unless that provision is put in, we are going to have just what we are experiencing right now, and that is this: These small businesses, with small capital, were permitted to go along from October 1938 right on until just within the last few months or few weeks, when they find that they are not exempt from the law and they are brought in, and when they get through with the penalties they have mounted so high that it simply closes up the business, and then everyone loses his job and the man who is running the business loses his business. I cannot believe that that would be in the interest of labor. It could not be in the interest of anyone, and it is well known that in the rural areas small business is what we are principally concerned with. We do not have the big business that is complained about. Another provision contains the so-called white-collar exemptions. In the present act there is no such thing as white-collar workers' exemption, except the following section, which is 13 (a) 1:

> Any employee employed in a bona fide executive, administrative, professional, or local retail capacity, or in the capacity of outside salesman (as such terms are defined and delineated by regulations of the Administrator).

As absurd as it may sound, it is nevertheless true that the Administrator is now confronted with men drawing as much as $7,000 per year and more who are under this act, and apparently there is no way to take them out without an amendment. My amendment is very simple and provides as follows: After exempting those exempted in 13 (a) 1, I quote:

> Or at a guaranteed monthly salary of $150 or more, or at a guaranteed yearly salary of $1,800 or more, if such employee is not required by his employer to work any specified minimum number of hours in any workday, workweek, or other period, and has been notified by his employer in writing to that effect.

Without this amendment it is absolutely unfair to the Administrator to expect him to perform an utterly impossible job by enforcing the act. As it is now written, columnists, newspaper reporters, and others who have responsible jobs, and sometimes like to go to a baseball game, play golf, or take an afternoon out for fishing, either must forego this pleasure or violate the act. I am willing to leave it to the American people which would happen. It is very clear to me that we have in this country at the present time more than a sufficient number of law violators without attempting to increase the number by growing a new crop.

There is another provision which I desire to discuss, and that is one that probably has caused more trouble than anything else and was primarily responsible for the introduction of these amendments, though not solely responsible, because the other amendments that I have referred to are very, very important; and, by the way, one that I have not referred to that is very important is the one that prohibits the shipment of convict-made goods. That is not in the original law, and certainly no one would disagree with the statement that this amendment would improve the law. But the one that has caused so much dust is this statement right here. In section 13a of the act there is listed a large number of exemptions from the act. I read:

SEC. 10. To any individual employed within the area of production, as defined by the Administrator, engaged in handling, packing, storing, ginning, compressing, pasteurizing, drying, preparing in the raw or natural state, or canning of agricultural or horticultural commodities for market, or in making cheese or butter or other dairy products.

Tell me what this House had in mind when it passed the provision exempting those very articles and those very operations, and when it put into the law "within the area of production." I shall now read to you the interpretation given that by the Administrator.

I do not know what that is, but that is the number the Administrator gives this. I am reading from his official bulletin and order; and, by the way, it is law, just as much law as the law we passed. This is the law that he writes:

"Area of production," as used in section 13 (a) (10) of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

An individual shall be regarded as employed in the "area of production," within the meaning of section 13 (a) (10), in handling, packing, storing, ginning, compressing, pasteurizing, drying, preparing in their raw or natural state, or canning of agricultural or horticultural commodities for market, or in making cheese or butter or other dairy products:

(a) if he performs those operations on materials all of which come from farms in the general vicinity of the establishment where he is employed and the number of employees engaged in those operations in that establishment does not exceed seven, or

(b) with respect to dry edible beans, if he is so engaged in an establishment which is a first concentration point for the processing of such beans into standard commercial grades for marketing in their raw or natural state. As used in this subsection (b), "first concentration point" means a place where such beans are first assembled from nearby farms for such processing but shall not include any establishment normally receiving a portion of the beans assembled from other first concentration points, or

(c) with respect to Puerto Rican leaf tobacco, if he is engaged in handling, packing, storing, and drying such tobacco for market in an establishment which is a first concentration point for such tobacco—

And so forth. Here is one that will cover the whole works:

(d) if he performs those operations on materials all of which come from farms in the immediate locality of the establishment where he is employed and the establishment is located in the open country or in a rural community. As used in this subsection (d), "immediate locality" shall not include any distance of more than 10 miles and "open country" or "rural community" shall not include any city or town of 2,500 or greater population according to the fifteenth United States census, 1930.

Now, who on earth besides the Administrator could have ever written such a definition? I do not see how such an interpretation could be placed on "area of production." We do not think of the area of production of oranges as being a 10-mile circle. We do not think of the area of production of strawberries as being a 10-mile circle. I simply cannot understand how he reached that conclusion. And in my amendments I simply strike out or leave out the term "area of production" and set out in plain English the exemptions.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Is the gentleman familiar with the interpretation that has been placed by the administration upon the words "general vicinity," as applied to the first processor of agricultural products employing less than 7 people, and located in cities of not over 2,500 population, and is there anybody in this Congress or in the United States today that knows what the words "general vicinity" mean? I have been carrying on a conversation with the Department through letters for the last 2 months. If there is anybody who can define it, I would like to have them do it, so that a man who is in business knows whether he is subject to the act or whether he is not subject to the act. The General Counsel was unable to give an opinion in a specific case, whether he was subject to it or not.

Mr. BARDEN. May I say I have gathered together all of the law written by the Administrator and tried to read it and tried to understand it. There is no question in my mind but what he has a difficult problem to try to interpret the term "area of production" to suit everybody; but at the same time there is no question in my mind about what the Congress intended to say when it said "area of production." Let us give to agriculture the exemption Congress intended. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona). Under special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the effect of Wage-Hour Act upon citrus-fruit growers in the States of California and Arizona.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I asked for a report showing the effect of the definition of the "area of production" on the small citrus growers in California and Arizona. I am in receipt of that report, and it is as follows:

EFFECT OF WAGE-HOUR ACT UPON CITRUS-FRUIT GROWERS

This report is being submitted by the Agricultural Producers Labor Committee, which represents substantially all of the 28,000 citrus growers in the States of California and Arizona. These growers each cultivate, on an average, 12 acres of citrus fruit. They are directly interested in and vitally affected by the regulation of the Administrator defining "area of production" (Regulations, sec. 536.2, promulgated June 15, 1939) in that the packing houses are in most instances operated by associations of growers and in all instances the costs of packing are paid for by the growers.

It is our firm belief that the present regulation of the Administrator defining "area of production" does not define that term as was intended by Congress. Such was our position in the hearings before the former Administrator and such has been our position in the equitable action filed in the District Court of the Southern District of California praying for an injunction restraining the enforcement of this regulation. In those proceedings we have pointed out that in California and Arizona there is a definite and legally recognized "area of production" of citrus fruit and that as far as citrus fruit is concerned this is the only proper area of production for the Administrator to adopt.

NUMBER OF CITRUS-PACKING HOUSES IN CALIFORNIA AND ARIZONA AND HOW THEY OPERATE

There are in California and Arizona 275 citrus-packing houses. Of these, 235 citrus-packing houses, packing approximately 85 percent of the oranges and grapefruit and 94 percent of the lemons grown in California and Arizona, are nonprofit cooperative associations organized and controlled by the citrus growers. Such cooperative citrus-packing houses act as the agent of the members in picking, washing, grading, and packing their citrus fruit. They handle only the fruit of their members. As such cooperative packing houses act as agents for and pack the fruit for the account of the members, all packing costs are borne directly by the grower members. Forty citrus-packing houses, packing approximately 15 percent of the oranges and grapefruit and 6 percent of the lemons grown in California and Arizona, are independently owned. Such packing houses either pack exclusively the fruit which they grow or pack fruit for growers under contract whereby the fruit is packed for the account of the grower. In the latter case the fruit is packed and sold and the packing charges, plus a reasonable fixed charge, are deducted from the sales price and the balance is passed on to the grower. In such a case the grower directly bears the increased cost of packing the fruit. In some instances a buyer may acquire fruit directly from the grower for cash, but in such instances the buyer deducts the packing and handling costs from the purchase price, so that any increase in packing charges is directly paid by the grower.

NUMBER OF CITRUS-PACKING HOUSES IN CALIFORNIA AND ARIZONA WITHIN "AREA OF PRODUCTION" AS DEFINED BY THE ADMINISTRATOR

In addition to personal investigation by members of this committee, this committee has caused questionnaires to be sent to the different citrus-packing houses, from time to time, to determine the effect of the regulation of the Administrator upon the California and Arizona growers. In a questionnaire sent to the 275 citrus-packing houses to determine whether they were located within or without the "area of production" as defined by the Administrator, returns were had from 267 packing houses. The results of these returns were compiled and show as follows:

	Percent
Citrus-packing houses located in towns of a population of less than 2,500	42
Citrus-packing houses located in towns of a population of more than 2,500	58
Citrus-packing houses hauling fruit 10 miles or less	34
Citrus-packing houses hauling fruit more than 10 miles	66
Citrus-packing houses located in towns of less than 2,500 population and hauling fruit not over 10 miles	19
Citrus-packing houses located in towns of more than 2,500 population and hauling fruit more than 10 miles	81

These figures, which are the most accurate which have been obtained for the States of California and Arizona, show that, as a result of the regulations of the Administrator, only 19 percent of the citrus packing houses are within the area of production within the meaning of section 13 (a) of the Fair Labor Standards Act, and 81 percent of such citrus packing houses are, by such regulation, declared to be without the area of production.

By the same questionnaire it was determined what proportion of the fruit by volume was packed within the area of production as defined by the Administrator and what percentage was packed without the area. These figures followed very closely the percentages for packing houses within and without the area, the final figures showing that only 15 percent of the volume of citrus fruit was packed within the area of production as that term has been defined by the Administrator.

THE TESTS USED TO DETERMINE AREA OF PRODUCTION ARE ARBITRARILY AND UNREASONABLE WHEN APPLIED TO CALIFORNIA AND ARIZONA CITRUS PACKING

When growers associate themselves to build a citrus packing house they locate it at the closest point to the groves of the members where electricity, water, and transportation are available. The same is true of those packing houses which are individually owned. Our surveys show that on the average the nearest grove is five-eighths of a mile away from the packing house, while, in many instances, the nearest grove is actually adjoining or within a few hundred feet of the packing house. All of these packing houses in California and Arizona pack the fruit in the same manner, use the same type of labor, and sell the fruit upon the same markets and obtain therefor the market price. In other words, the 275 citrus packing houses operate under the same competitive advantages and disadvantages except for the regulation of the Administrator which arbitrarily and without any basis in fact strikes at 81 percent of the houses and leaves the other 19 percent free.

ARBITRARY AND UNREASONABLE EFFECT OF THE 2,500 POPULATION TEST AS APPLIED TO CALIFORNIA AND ARIZONA CITRUS PACKING

Forty-two percent of the California-Arizona citrus packing houses are located in towns of a population more than 2,500. They happen to be so located for a variety of reasons, none of which gives them any competitive advantage over the other citrus packing houses or cause them to operate in any other or different manner.

For example, there are located in the San Fernando Valley, in California, seven cooperative citrus packing houses. Five of these are located within the corporate limits of the city of Los Angeles. These five citrus packing houses are located within the corporate limits of the city of Los Angeles not to obtain any economic advantage, or so they can operate in a manner different from the other citrus packing houses, but because all of the groves of their members are located within the corporate limits of the city of Los Angeles and the packing houses are located there to be close to the groves of their members. For the most part, these citrus groves were planted and the citrus packing houses were constructed before the San Fernando Valley became a part of the city of Los Angeles. The fact that the city of Los Angeles has extended its corporate limits to include these groves and their adjacent packing houses does not cause them to operate in any different manner than when they were in unincorporated territory. Two of these packing houses in the San Fernando Valley are located within the town of San Fernando, but the groves of their members are located within the corporate limits of the city of Los Angeles. The returns from questionnaires show that not only a great number of citrus packing houses are located within towns of more than 2,500 but a great deal of citrus acreage is also located within towns of more than 2,500.

The following are examples of citrus packing houses located in towns of more than 2,500 population and the amount of citrus acreage which it serves which is also located in towns of a population of more than 2,500:

Name of citrus packing house	Amount of citrus acreage cultivated by members	Amount of such citrus acreage in towns of over 2,500	Names of towns of over 2,500 in which such citrus acreage is located
Anaheim Cooperative Orange Association.	2,653½	129½	Anaheim, Fullerton, Orange.
Arlington Heights Fruit Co	754	562	Riverside.
Azusa Citrus Association	712	712	Azusa.
Briggs Lemon Association	591	190	Santa Paula.
Canoga Citrus Association	1,305	1,019	Los Angeles.
Chula Vista Citrus Association	1,200	750	Chula Vista.
Claremont Citrus Association	996	554½	Claremont, Pomona.
Consolidated Orange Growers	3,011	488½	Orange, Santa Ana, Anaheim.
Corona Citrus Association	980	680	Corona.
Corona Foothill Lemon Company	1,018	856	Do.

Old Baldy Citrus Association	1,425	514	Ontario, Upland.
Redlands Select Groves	1,200	736	Redlands, Fontana.

This list is not exhaustive, but is intended only as an illustration of this situation.

It is also true that many of the citrus packing houses now located within towns of over 2,500 population were, when built, not so located. Such packing houses were constructed in small villages or outside the corporate limits of any town, and as the town grew were included within the town. The fact that they are now located within a town of 2,500 population is not anything of their seeking or anything from which they gain an economic advantage or which makes them operate in any different manner from other citrus packing houses. Examples of such citrus packing houses are as follows:

Anaheim Cooperative Orange Association, Anaheim; Azusa Citrus Association,[1] Azusa; Chula Vista Citrus Association, Chula Vista; Claremont Citrus Association, Claremont; Corona Citrus Association, Corona; Covina Citrus Association, Covina; Orange Packing Co., Lindsay; Pomona Fruit Growers Exchange,[1] Pomona.

This list is not exhaustive, but is intended only as an illustration of this situation.

The Whittier Citrus Association, a grower cooperative association, has its packing house located in the town of Whittier, a town having a population of over 2,500 Within 200 yards of its packing house is the packing house of the Whittier Select Citrus Association. This happens to be across the road and without the city limits of the town of Whittier. Damerel-Allison Co. operates a citrus packing house in the town of Covina, a town having a population of more than 2,500, and also operates a citrus packing house 1 mile without the town of Covina. All four of these packing houses are operated in an identical manner, employing the same type of labor, and getting their citrus fruit from the surrounding groves, but two are declared to be within the "area of production" and two without the "area of production" by the regulation of the Administrator.

The use of the 2,500 population test to determine "area of production," which is unreasonable when applied to most California and Arizona citrus packing houses, becomes ludicrous when applied to the Corona Foothill Lemon Co. This packing house is bisected by the city limits of the town of Corona, a town having a population of over 2,500. Here some workers are within the "area of production" and some are without; the fruit may leave and enter the "area of production" several times while being washed, graded, and packed. A worker may only work 42 hours per week on one side of a chalked line, but let him jump over this line and he has passed into the magic circle of "area of production" where he may labor without limitation. But this is not the end to our confusion. More than 84 percent of the citrus acreage which this packing house serves is located within the corporate limits of the town of Corona.

Under this Alice in Wonderland regulation the worker must go outside of the area of production to get inside the "area of production." This is all very confusing to the poor worker who is trying to determine whether he is working on the side of the packing house which is inside or outside the "area of production."

The examples above given could be extended almost to the number of citrus packing houses located in California and Arizona. The tabulations and examples given in this section are, however, sufficient, we believe, to show that the use of this test (2,500 population) to determine area of production when applied to the packing of citrus fruit in California and Arizona is absolutely arbitrary, unreasonable, and without basis in fact.

[1] Population was less than 2,500 when house was built, and since then town has grown to over 2,500; in the case of the other packing houses the corporate limits of the town were extended to include these packing houses.

ARBITRARY EFFECT OF THAT PORTION OF THE REGULATION WHICH DECLARES THAT PACKING HOUSES HAULING FRUIT MORE THAN 10 MILES ARE WITHOUT THE AREA OF PRODUCTION

All of the citrus packing houses in California and Arizona haul the bulk of the citrus fruit which they pack less than 10 miles but 66 percent of such citrus packing houses haul some portion of the citrus fruit which they pack more than 10 miles.

The committee has determined from its surveys that the haulage of citrus fruit in California and Arizona from the groves to the packing houses is as follows:

Percentage of citrus packing houses hauling all fruit less than 10 miles	34
Percentage of citrus packing houses hauling all fruit less than 25 miles	76
Percentage of citrus packing houses hauling all fruit less than 50 miles	90

(Ten percent of the houses haul a small portion of their fruit more than 50 miles.)

When these packing houses were organized to pack the fruit of their members or of the growers in the district, there was no arbitrary distance for hauling of fruit considered. For example, a group of growers might get together to form a cooperative packing house and such growers might be within a radius of 15 miles of the packing house. Now, such a packing house is faced with the decision either to continue to handle the fruit of members beyond a radius of 10 miles from the packing house and come under the terms of the Fair Labor Standards Act by virtue of the regulation of the Administrator, or else to arbitrarily refuse to handle the fruit of those members whose groves are more than 10 miles from the packing house. Either decision is fraught with difficulty both for the packing house and the grower.

Such grower may be unable to have his fruit packed through an association whose packing house is within 10 miles of his citrus grove or may be unable to find another packing house where the type of fruit or sizes usually produced by him best blends with the fruit produced by other growers so as to bring up the general average of grade and size of the pool. On the other hand, a packing house is constructed for a certain volume, and if this volume is decreased by refusing the fruit of these members more than 10 miles away it cannot operate as economically, and the packing charges paid by the other growers will increase. If the packing house decides to continue to take fruit from citrus groves beyond 10 miles from the packing house, it thereupon becomes subject to expenses and restraint which place it at a competitive disadvantage with packing houses not subject to the act.

The unreasonableness of the 10-mile limitation is particularly apparent in those packing houses where the members are largely grapefruit growers. There is not a great density of grapefruit production in California and Arizona, and consequently members often have to haul their grapefruit longer distances to the packing house. For example, the Monte Vista Citrus Association, a cooperative packing association having 105 members, pack a great deal of grapefruit. This packing house hauls 32 percent of its fruit from 25 to 50 miles and 11 percent of its fruit 10 to 25 miles from the groves to the packing house. The Imperial Valley Grapefruit Growers, a cooperative association which packs nothing but winter grapefruit for its members, hauls 60 percent of the fruit from 10 to 25 miles from the groves of the members to its packing house.

The length of the haulage from the groves to the packing house bears no relation to the size of the packing house. Therefore, if it was the theory of the Administrator that the larger or more commercial packing houses would haul more than 10 miles and should therefore be subject to the act, while the smaller houses would haul less than 10 miles, this assumption has no basis in fact.

The following tabulation shows that there is no relationship between the size of the packing house and the length of the haul. The first three packing houses listed are three of the largest in California and Arizona; the next three packing houses listed are three of the smallest, and the last three are medium-sized or smaller than medium-sized houses.

Name of packing house	Number of acres of citrus fruit of members	Percent of fruit hauled less than 10 miles
Fillmore Citrus Association	3,644	100
Gold Buckle Association	3,045	96
Anaheim Cooperative Orange Association	2,931	98
Alta Loma Citrus Association	1,050	95
Bryn Mawr Fruit Growers Association	786	94
Orange Heights Orange Association	750	84
Fullerton Cooperative Orange Association	1,130	70
Monte Vista Citrus Association	1,385	57
San Antonio Orchards	1,213	35

The distance from the packing house to the farthest grove of its members is not a reasonable test to determine whether the packing house itself is in the area of production. For example, a packing house may be surrounded by citrus groves but, because it happens to take fruit from a grove more than 10 miles away, the packing house is, by the terms of the regulation, without the area of production. If the packing house then refuses to take such fruit it immediately jumps into the area of production; yet the location of the packing house has not changed an inch.

INJURIOUS EFFECT OF COMPETITION BETWEEN CITRUS PACKING HOUSES UNDER AND NOT UNDER THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

To date the injurious effect of competition between the citrus packing houses subject to, and those not subject to, the Fair Labor Standards Act has been minimized through the efforts of this committee and others to get all citrus growers in California and Arizona to face the situation with a united front. This has so far been successful because the citrus growers have believed that the unreasonableness of the present regulation would soon be recognized and relief would be obtained either from the present Administrator or from Congress. If no relief is obtained and the present regulation continues in effect those citrus packing houses not subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act will begin to take competitive advantage of their situation.

In the first place, there will be, in cases where possible, a shift of membership. Those growers who are now members of cooperative packing houses subject to the act will, if possible, become members of packing houses within 10 miles of their groves and discontinue their memberships in the other associations. The same will be equally so of packing houses within and without towns of a population of 2,500. For example, there are numerous packing houses around the towns of Redlands and Anaheim, some of the packing houses being within the city limits and some without. Those that happen to be located without the city limits will obtain a competitive advantage which will cause an increase in membership and a disruption of orderly marketing in the other packing houses. Probably the greatest competitive advantage that those houses not subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act will obtain will be in the labor market. As will be set forth hereinafter, the persons employed in citrus packing houses depend upon this employment for their livelihood and therefore, during the sesason when the operations are heavy, desire to work long hours to make up for those seasons of the year when there is little or no employment. These persons therefore wish to work in the packing houses where the longer hours are permissible. Thus those houses located within the area of production, as defined by the Administrator, find that they can obtain the best workers from the other packing houses subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act. As a result there has started a small but steady flow of the best labor from packing houses without the area to those within the area as defined by the Administrator, and it has been with difficulty that this situation has been coped with pending the promised relief from Congress or the Administrator. Such shifting of growers from one packing house to another disrupts orderly marketing of the citrus crops and is particularly damaging to the effective operation of the Federal and State marketing or prorate orders. (See complaint for injunctive relief filed by California citrus packing houses hereinbefore referred to.)

THE 14 WORKWEEK EXEMPTION IS NOT SUFFICIENT TO EXEMPT CALIFORNIA AND ARIZONA CITRUS PACKING HOUSES FROM THE BURDENS OF THE ACT

By section 7 (c) of the Fair Labor Standards Act, these citrus packing houses are exempt from the requirements of section 7 (a) for a period of 14 workweeks in the aggregate of any calendar year. Such 14 workweek exemption is not sufficient to totally exempt any of the citrus packing houses from the provisions of section 7 (a). The packing of citrus fruit is seasonal and each variety of citrus fruit has its own season, such season varying, to some extent, with the particular location. In southern California the season for navels is from January to April, for valencias from May to October, for grapefruit from June to October and for lemons, although they mature the year around, the heavy picking is in the spring and the heavy packing of lemons is in the summer.

The committee has made a study of the different varieties and kinds of citrus fruit handled by the citrus packing houses in California and Arizona. The following tabulation shows the percentage of packing houses handling four kinds and varieties of citrus fruit (navel and valencia oranges, grapefruit, and lemons), those handling three kinds and varieties of citrus fruit (any three), those handling two, and those handling one:

Citrus packing houses handling:	Percent
4 kinds	22.5
3 kinds	42.5
2 kinds	22.5
1 kind	12.5

Those packing houses handling only one variety of citrus fruit are all lemon packing houses. This will be taken up later. The other houses are engaged in seasonal packing from 5 to 8 months of the year. Actually the 14 workweek exemption does not begin to exempt these packing activities from the provisions of the act. The usual packing house will have a 3 months' fruit-packing season for navels, another fruit-packing season of at least 3 months for valencias, and in addition to that may have a packing season for grapefruit or lemons, which partially overlap with the orange seasons.

PERCENTAGE OF PACKING-HOUSE COSTS COMPOSED OF LABOR CHARGES

The largest single item in washing, grading, and packing of citrus fruit is the labor charge. In citrus packing houses in California and Arizona it was found that the percentage of labor to total cost of packing was as follows:

	Percent
Oranges and grapefruit	40.5
Lemons	49.1
Oranges, grapefruit, and lemons	43.6

Therefore any law or regulation which affects citrus packing labor costs affects the largest single item of all expenditures in connection with the work.

INCREASED CITRUS-PACKING COSTS CANNOT BE PASSED ON TO THE CONSUMER AND GROWERS ARE NOT IN A POSITION TO BEAR THIS INCREASED COST

The wholesale price of citrus fruit is determined by the price at the auction markets throughout the United States. The auction price is determined by supply and demand neither of which is controlled by the grower. Demand is controlled by numerous economic conditions entirely unconnected with the grower; supply is mainly controlled by the vagaries of nature. The State and Federal marketing agreements regulate the supply of citrus fruit going on the market in any one week, but does not attempt to regulate the total amount which will be marketed. For example, in years when there is a large crop of small sizes the State and Federal marketing orders endeavor to regulate the marketing of this crop, but as it now functions, it does not prevent the marketing of this entire crop over the period of the season. The grower consequently takes the price which he is bid for the fruit at auction which price is no greater because it has cost him more to pack it. The grower is not in a position to bear these extra costs. As of February 1940 prices paid by farmers for commodities used by them in living and production were 122 percent of the 1910–14 level; on the other hand farmers producing fruit were receiving only 66 percent of such prices while farm wages were 119 percent of the 1910–14 level. While farmers received prices for their commodities considerably below the parity level, the prices farmers paid for their labor and for their material were considerably above it. It is figured that the buying power of farm products is now only 81 percent of what it was in 1910–14. Last year it was figured that California citrus growers lost an average of approximately 30 cents per packed box on all citrus fruit shipped, or about $40 per acre loss. This year even with the freeze in Florida and Texas there is still a surplus of citrus fruit on the market and next year, when Florida and Texas are again marketing full crops of citrus fruit the condition of the California and Arizona citrus growers will be even worse.

Regarding the financial condition of the farmer and his ability to pay additional costs, Representative COLMER, of the House of Representatives, has this to say (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 86, p. 3257):

"What has been the average income of the farmer over the period of the past 5 years? Statistics compiled by the Department of Agriculture show that the net income of each person living on the farm for the past 5 years has been $166 per person, while the same statistics show that the net income of persons not engaged in farming for the same period has been $625 per year per person. Can any fair-minded person, therefore, for a moment, argue against this effort to approach parity payments for our farmers? Can it be argued, without the blush of shame, that this pitiable net income should be further reduced?"

Representative MILLS of Louisiana says (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 86, p. 3259):

"Further, the national income for 1939 was $67,608,000,000, whereas the farming population, consisting of approximately one-third of the Nation's people, only received $4,458,000,000, which is less than 7 percent of the national income. So farm prices and farm income have been steadily dropping for 5 years, according to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, while labor and industry costs entering into farm necessities have been rising to such a degree until it is almost impossible for the farmer to continue."

THE EFFECT OF REGULATION UPON THE GROWER

Any burden placed upon a citrus packing house by virtue of this regulation is borne directly by the grower, and, therefore, its effect is upon the grower and not upon the packing house. If the packing house continues to operate in the same manner as it did before the Fair Labor Standards Act became effective, it would become necessary to pay the workers time and a half for overtime for a large amount of work being done. The average citrus packing house in California and Arizona has a little over a hundred employees, 65 percent of whom are women and 35 percent men. It has been customary for the women to work 48 hours per week for an average of at least 34 weeks and for the men to work as much as 70 hours and an average of 60 hours per week during the same season. If a citrus packing house did not change its method of operation, it would have to pay overtime to both of these groups for all hours worked over 42 hours a week in all weeks except 14 workweeks. An example of the cost to the average packing house of payment of time and one-half for overtime without bringing in any extra employees is as follows:

Women employees
Number of hours formerly worked without overtime pay	48
Number of hours can work now without overtime pay	42
Difference	6
Number of employees	65
Number of overtime hours per week	390
Number of weeks in which overtime payable (14 workweeks deducted)	20
Number of hours overtime per year	7,800
Average extra wage paid—cents	20
Total extra wage paid	$1,560
Men employees
Number of hours formerly worked without overtime pay	60
Number of hours can work now without overtime pay	42
Difference	18
Number of employees	35
Number of overtime hours per week	630
Number of weeks in which overtime payable (14 workweeks deducted)	20
Number of hours overtime per year	12,600
Average extra wage paid—cents	20

The methods of operating these citrus packing houses without the area of production so as not to necessitate the payment of time and a half overtime are various and sundry. For example, in certain cases one man is the manager of two packing houses, one within the area of production and the other, a few hundred yards away, without the area of production. In this instance the employees of the packing house without the area of production work there for 42 hours and then change places with the employees of the packing house within the area of production the balance of the week. This advantage, of course, is not enjoyed by very many citrus packing houses, although such arrangements will tend to increase if the regulation is not changed.

The usual method is to employ the regular employees up to 42 hours for each week during the season and then to bring him other help to work the balance of the week. This arrangement is not entirely satisfactory, as such help is not always experienced and may not have a natural aptitude for the work, and the bringing in of outside labor cuts down the working efficiency of the regular employees.

The effect of bringing in other persons to do all packing work in excess of 42 hours per week is double-edged, injuring the employees and packing house alike. For example, let us again take the average citrus packing house employing 100 persons, 65 of these women and 35 men. Under present circumstances, these men work 8 months a year, an average of 60 hours per week. It would take 50 men to do this work so that none works more than 42 hours, or an addition of 15 employees. The first effect of this would be upon the employee, who would make on the average $244.80 less for the year than he did when there were only 35 employees working. At the end of the season, assuming that these people went nowhere else to work, as in the majority of cases they do not, there would be 50 persons applying for unemployment benefits rather than 35. Under the California law (secs. 53 and 54 of the California Unemployment Insurance Act, as amended), all 50 of these persons would be entitled to maximum benefits of $18 weekly, or a total of $14,400 per year. Had the packing house employed only 35 employees, they also would be entitled to maximum benefits of $18 per week, but only 35 of them, instead of 50, would cost the State $10,080, or a difference of $4,320. Under section 43 of the same act, the commission is given power to recommend to the legislature a higher rate of contribution for any classification of industry or occupation in which unemployment is excessive or chronic. The California citrus packing houses, and therefore directly the California citrus growers, are faced with the prospect of legislation raising the unemployment-benefit payments, which must be paid in order to pay for unemployment between seasons in a seasonal industry; and in this instance if the rates were raised to meet the increased cost of unemployment compensation, it would cost the average packing house $4,320 more per year when it employed 50 persons 42 hours per week instead of 35 persons 60 hours per week.

Another method of avoiding the payment of time-and-a-half overtime is technological improvement of the packing house. Certain packing houses have been able to improve their equipment and their efficiency so that relatively few new employees have had to be brought in. Such an arrangement is injurious to laborers depending upon this work for their livelihood, and is particularly injurious to the marginal worker who formerly could make a living in the packing house when he was not fit for any form of industrial employment, but who is being forced out of this employment because of the demand for greater efficiency to avoid the payment of overtime. The difficulty with such changes from the point of view of the packing house and the grower is that they cannot in most instances afford to make any technological changes in the packing house.

THE EFFECT OF THE REGULATION UPON THE CITRUS PACKING HOUSE WORKERS

The citrus packing houses in the States of California and Arizona had, up until the time the Fair Labor Standards Act became effective upon them because of the regulation of the Administrator, obtained a great degree of labor stability. While in other agricultural crops, because of the shorter harvesting and packing seasons, the labor is necessarily more migratory, in the citrus industry the labor employed was almost entirely local, and such workers were able to make a living from citrus packing without the need of migrating within and without the State to engage in the packing of other fruits and vegetables to eke out a living. Studies which we have made we show that of the labor employed in the citrus packing houses in California in 1938, 3 percent were migratory laborers from other States, 57 percent lived in the same locality as the packing house and made their entire source of income from packing in that particular house or in packing houses in the vicinity, and 40 percent lived in the same locality as the packing house and made all of their income from working in the one packing house. Such a stability of working conditions were of great advantage to the worker. He could build a home in the vicinity, could perhaps have a few acres of land on which he grew crops while not working in the packing house, and he and his family could remain in the one locality where they could become a regular part of the community and they and their children could take advantage of those facilities provided by the State and community for the education and maintenance of the family. These persons are dependent upon working in the packing houses for their livelihood. On the average they work 8 months a year, and during that time they must make enough to keep them for 12 months. If their working hours are cut down to 42 hours per week, they cannot continue to make a living by packing in the immediate locality. They and their families must become migrant, and when they have finished packing in that district they must move on to another district in an effort to get work to support themselves. In the meanwhile the packing house must also bring in other labor from the outside to work the time formerly worked by these persons over 42 hours per week. The result is not only to create a migratory labor problem with all the vicious consequences that flow in its wake but to cut down the means of livelihood of those heretofore sustained by working in local citrus packing houses.

Respectfully submitted.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS LABOR COMMITTEE.

Dated APRIL 6, 1940.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article appearing in the Saturday Evening Post entitled "We're Moving the Rain," in regard to the Central Valley water project.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE—THE NATION'S GREATEST BUSINESS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I am going to discuss briefly a subject that is strictly noncontroversial, and I hope that the facts I will give will prove to be somewhat informative, and I am sure that to me they were extremely interesting. I shall discuss the United States post-office establishment, its evolution, development, growth, and its present status.

Mr. Speaker, frequently those things in life that are most essential we fail to appreciate as fully as we should, because by reason of their dependable, efficient, long-continued, and uninterrupted service, they have become commonplace.

There is no more essential agency in the whole of this great Government of ours than the Postal Service. It touches the lives of every one of us from the cradle to the grave. Without it our splendid American civilization could not possibly endure.

The history of the postal service goes back so far into antiquity that it is impossible to say just when it had its beginning. We know that they must have had some sort of postal service in ancient times because in the Bible, in the Book of Job, we find the expression, "The swiftness of the post." There are numerous other references in the Old Testament in regard to sending letters by post, by messengers, and by couriers on horses, mules, camels, and other forms of transportation.

Six hundred years before the birth of Christ the great Greek historian, Herodotus, in referring to those engaged in the postal service of that ancient time, paid them this tribute:

Neither snow, nor rain, nor heat, nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds.

This unusual tribute is as much the motto today of the modern American postman, rural carrier, air-mail pilot, and every employee in the Postal Service as it was when it was uttered more than 2,500 years ago. So long as the American postal employees continue to make this their motto, just so long will our Postal Service maintain the undivided support and loyalty of the American citizens.

EARLY AMERICAN POSTAL SERVICE

In 1639 the General Court of Massachusetts legalized the first postal service, and in the legislation creating this service it was provided that in transmitting the letters to the persons to whom they were addressed the party performing this service should receive a penny for each letter so transmitted. Thus we see the establishment of the first post office in the United States, which was in Boston, and the first man who could be classified as a postmaster was one Richard Fairbanks.

In 1672 the first steps were taken to establish an intercolonial post office system and provision was made that once a month there should be a delivery of mail between New York and Boston. This mail was carried by men who rode on horseback, and it is interesting to note that the route over which they traveled is known to this day as the Boston Post Road.

In 1683 William Penn, then Governor of the Colony of Pennsylvania, established the first post office in Philadelphia and provided for weekly mail between Philadelphia and certain outlying points, the mail to be carried again by riders on horseback. By the end of that year a regular service had been established along the entire Atlantic seaboard, extending from Maine to Georgia. The paths over which these carriers of the mail rode by horseback, later became the trunk highways of the Atlantic seaboard.

In 1691 Andrew Hamilton, of Edinburgh, Scotland, was appointed the first Postmaster General of the American Colonies, and he came to this country and took charge of his new duties.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN MADE FIRST POSTMASTER GENERAL

In 1753 while we were still colonies of Great Britain, Benjamin Franklin was appointed Postmaster General, which position he held until 1774, when he was dismissed by the Crown because of his sympathies with the cause of the American colonists.

During this period of 21 years, in spite of the many difficulties and the numerous other activities and responsibilities of Franklin, he brought the Postal Service to a state of high efficiency, and he laid the ground work upon which has been built that great superstructure which we today know as the post-office establishment of the United States. When Franklin left his position, from which he had been dismissed by the British Crown because of his sympathy for the cause of the American colonists, he had an efficient and reliable system of communication among the colonists, and mail was being carried with a high degree of regularity, there being a mail service from one to three times a week between New York and Philadelphia in the summer, and twice a month in the winter. The motto of those early postal servants was still: "Neither snow, nor rain, nor heat, nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds."

In July 1775 the Continental Congress established the American postal system, and Benjamin Franklin became Postmaster General again. His salary was $1,000 a year. The policies that he inaugurated, in part, survive to this day and still control the administration of the Postal Service in the United States.

The total number of post offices in operation in 1776 was 28. The significance of this becomes more noticeable when I state that in my congressional district, one district out of 435, I have 192 post offices, 53 of which are Presidential offices. In 1776, out of 28 post offices, one-half of them, or 14, were in Massachusetts, and the other 12 Colonies had 14 post offices to serve the needs of them all.

After the ratification of the Constitution and the establishment of our Government, Samuel Osgood, of Massachusetts, was appointed Postmaster General by George Washington, but the Postmaster General was then under the Treasury Department, and it remained so until 1829, when the Postmaster General became a Member of the President's Cabinet.

At the beginning of our second war with England in 1812, the post office in New York City had but 4 clerks, and a part of their compensation was board furnished by the postmaster in his home. Today New York has more than 20,000 employees. In the entire United States the Post Office Department has a total pay roll of 235,000 employees.

The first postal service to the far West was established in 1848 and mail was carried to California by way of Fort Leavenworth and Santa Fe. In 1860 the first contracts for the carrying of mail at considerable distances entered into between the Government and private individuals were the contracts with the pony express, which operated between St. Joseph, Mo., and San Francisco, Calif. This was inaugurated for the purpose of affording a faster means of transportation of mail to and from the Pacific coast. The fastest trip that was made over this service, a distance of 1,400 miles, was covered in 7 days and 17 hours, the travel being entirely on horseback. It is interesting to contrast that with the air-mail service of today, when the same distance can be covered in about 5 hours. The company that had the contract for carrying the mail charged $5 for each one-half ounce, and later this charge was reduced to $1. Buffalo Bill was one of the early pony riders.

FIRST POSTAGE STAMPS AUTHORIZED

Adhesive stamps for use in prepayment of postage were first authorized in 1847. Before the days of postage stamps, the writer of a letter would so fold it that the name and address of the addressee might be written on the outside. The letter was sealed with wax and the postmaster at the office of mailing would write in the upper right-hand corner of the folded letter the rate of the postage which could be paid by the sender or the addressee on delivery. The rate was 6 cents for a letter composed of a single sheet of paper, weighing less than 1 ounce, if it were conveyed not exceeding 30 miles, and graduated upward to 25 cents if over 400 miles.

GROWTH OF THE POST OFFICE ESTABLISHMENT

The 3,000,000 people in the early days of our existence as an independent Government did not feel the need for speed as we do; their requirements were few as compared to ours and they were easily met. A few hundred employees were sufficient in the Postal Service to take care of all of its requirements. Today the Postal Service is one of the largest employers of labor. In fact, there is no single industrial enterprise in the whole world that employs as many people as the United States Postal Service. There are 45,000 post offices and in the last year it is estimated that there were 25,800,000,000 pieces of mail carried. The total estimated weight of this enormous volume of mail was 5,500,000,000 pounds, or 2,750,000 tons. This mail was carried by every conceivable means of modern transportation, both animate and inanimate, from the postman who walks his route to the lightning like rapidity of the pneumatic tube.

NEW SERVICES ESTABLISHED

One of the first of the new services created was the registry system, which was established in 1855, which came in response to a demand for greater security in sending money and valuables through the mail. In 1863, 2 years after the beginning of the Civil War, the first free delivery of mail in cities was undertaken and was installed in 49 cities with 440 carriers. This service has grown today to where it comprises 55,000 letter carriers in more than 4,000 communities.

MONEY-ORDER SYSTEM

Following the establishment of the registry system came the establishment of the money-order system in 1864. This system was adopted during the third year of the Civil War, and largely as a result of the war, being used as a means of accommodating soldiers who desired to send money to their homes. It was placed in operation in 139 post offices, and though it had been bitterly opposed before its adoption for a number of years as being an improper field for governmental activity, still after its adoption it was so popular that it grew at a most rapid rate until today the gross value of money orders issued each year exceeds $2,000,000,000.

SPECIAL DELIVERY

The next important activity added to the Postal Service was Special Delivery Service, which came in the year 1885, and this was so well received that in the first year of its existence it handled 1,000,000 letters, while today in the last year for which we have any records, it handled 88,000,000 letters.

RURAL FREE DELIVERY

Mr. Speaker, we come now to a period in the history of the Postal Service within the recollection of many of us. This was in 1896, when the first Rural Free Delivery Service was instituted. The suggestion for this service had been advanced for a long time before Congress was finally persuaded to enact it into a law. Every argument that is being stated today against progress and changes was advanced in opposition to this service, even including the economy argument and the balanced Budgets. Rural Free Delivery was first placed in operation in West Virginia. This service has expanded and grown until today there are 25,000,000 persons who are patrons of the service. There are 33,000 carriers who in the aggregate travel more than 1,000,000 miles each day.

POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM

The next great innovation was the Postal Savings System, which came into being in 1911. Here again for many years preceding the institution of this important service bitter opposition was encountered by those who opposed what they called Government banking, but by 1917 this service had 500,000 patrons and their total deposits were in the neighborhood of $80,000,000. These figures seem large but when compared with the Postal Service of today they are rather insignificant because there are now 2,700,000 depositors and more than $1,250,000,000 on deposit with the Post Office Department. The original limit of deposit was $500. It is now $2,500.

PARCEL POST SYSTEM

The next great forward step in the Postal Service and perhaps the one that was the most bitterly opposed by many people in good faith, believing it was improper for the Government to enter into this field, was the Parcel Post System. This was established in 1913. I can well remember, as I am sure that almost every Member of this House can, how it was asserted that certainly here the Government was leaving the field of legitimate Government enterprise and engaging in a socialistic activity that would certainly lead to dire consequences. Today no man, irrespective of how reactionary or conservative he might be, would have the temerity to seriously recommend that we abolish the Parcel Post System. It is one of the chief sources of revenue to the Postal Department, ranking second to only first-class mail matter. It brings the city and the country closer together than any other activity either public or private.

DEAD LETTER OFFICE

I had almost overlooked a very important branch of the Postal Service which was established in 1825, and that is the dead-letter office. In 1860 Congress passed a resolution requiring information on dead-letter service.

The information obtained as a result of that resolution disclosed that there were more than 2,000,000 letters undelivered that year. That was in 1860. At the present time we have a dead-letter office in every first-class post office, and in addition there are 14 dead-parcel-post branches throughout the country.

Between ten and fifteen million dead letters are received annually at the present time, and more than $100,000 is found in these letters every year. The facts here stated ought to persuade every writer of a letter or the sender of a parcel that they should plainly make known in the proper place on their letter or parcel their own name and address, so that if the letter or parcel cannot be delivered, it would be returned to them without the loss of time and expense incident to passing through the dead-letter office. Of course, I know this will never be done, because many of us are in too great a hurry or our faith in this almost perfect Postal System is so great that we give no second thought to a letter or parcel after we have placed it in the custody of the postal employees.

AIR-MAIL SERVICE

Mr. Speaker, I want to now briefly refer to the latest unusual development of the Post Office Department, and that is the Air Mail Service, which was first established in 1918 as a domestic Air Mail Service, the first line being a 218-mile single route between Washington, D. C., and New York. Contrast this with the Air Mail Service of today, which covers 65,000 route-miles and over which fliers travel 70,000,000 miles in a year.

The first transcontinental air-mail flight was undertaken February 22, 1921. An air-mail plane left San Francisco at 4:30 in the morning and at 4:50 p. m. the next afternoon landed at Hazelhurst Field in Long Island. The total time elapsed for the trip, including stops, was 33 hours and 21 minutes. It is interesting to contrast that with the time now consumed for the same distance, which is 15 hours and 38 minutes.

The hero of this first flight was a young flier named Jack Knight. The first leg of the flight from San Francisco to North Platte, Nebr., was made by Pilot Frank Yager, and from there on Knight was to fly to Chicago. The weather was stormy and it was 10:44 p. m. when Knight was ready to take off at North Platte for Omaha, but in spite of these hazards he flew on to Omaha, which he reached at 1:10 a. m., and here he was told the weather was so bad and snow falling heavily between there and Chicago that he would have to call off the flight. Knight evidently remembered the motto of the postal employee. He was not familiar with the territory between Omaha and Chicago. He took a map and spent a short time familiarizing himself with it, and then at 2 a. m. he headed east. By the time he had reached Des Moines, Iowa, 1½ hours later, he was flying into a driving snowstorm. He dropped his plane as low as he dared, just skimming over the earth, and continued on east to Iowa City, at which point there was only gas enough to last for 10 minutes longer. Here he experienced difficulty in landing because the ground crew, certain that no one would be flying in such bad weather and believing that the flight had been halted in Omaha, had gone home. The watchman in charge heard the plane and lit a red flare. This became the guide for Knight to land his plane through the driving snow, and here he refueled with the aid of the watchman and then took off again, continuing his daring flight where he encountered terrific fog over the Mississippi Valley. Finally overcoming this obstacle, at 8:30 a. m. he landed at the airport in Chicago.

In this daring and courageous undertaking, this young aviator, a hero that most of us never heard of and whom those of us who did have completely forgotten, made the first night air-mail flight, and demonstrated the motto 2,500 years old that—

Neither snow, nor rain, nor heat, nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds.

As a result of the marvelous achievement of young Knight, Congress was persuaded to make available $1,250,000 for continuing and expanding the Air Mail Service, until today air-mail transportation has become commonplace in our everyday life, and we now have a trans-Pacific and trans-Atlantic, as well as a transcontinental, service, and we have come from a single 218-mile system in 1918 to a system of 30,450 miles in carrying mail to foreign countries and 32,376 miles in domestic service, making a combined Air Mail Service of 62,826 miles.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE AND POSTAL INSPECTION SERVICE

In addition to the services enumerated, there is another great army of faithful, valiant, and dependable men engaged in the Railway Mail Service, and a smaller but yet dependable, essential, and efficient group is the Postal Inspection Service. Each of these services, as well as any one of the numerous others that I have mentioned, could be made the theme of an address itself.

Mr. Speaker, from the time of Benjamin Franklin, the first Postmaster General, down to the present Postmaster General, James A Farley, this mighty business establishment, the greatest of its kind in the world, has not alone carried on true to the motto announced by Herodotus 2,500 years ago, but it has made itself a self-supporting institution in a financial way.

The total expenditures for the post-office establishment during the last fiscal year is $784,646,938.14 and the total revenue is $745,955,075.24, and when you deduct from the expenditures nonpostal items in the sum of $53,239,658.20, you will find that the net postal surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, is actually $14,547,795.30. This is indeed a tribute to the Postmaster General and the thousands of faithful men and women who serve in this great establishment, both as to their efficiency and faithfulness.

POST-OFFICE ESTABLISHMENT IN MY CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

Mr. Speaker, my own congressional district has two first-class post offices, one located at Spokane and the other at Wenatchee, and in these two offices there are approximately 325 people employed. Then in addition to these first-class offices there are 51 second- and third-class offices and 139 fourth-class offices. There are 65 star routes operating in my district and 95 rural-route deliveries. I feel that I can say that practically without a single exception, every one of the employees engaged in this important service in my district are fully conscious of the responsible position they hold, and they perform their services with that degree of courage and faithfulness that is characteristic of postal workers and which is not surpassed even in the armed forces of the country. They are truly soldiers of peace. I am proud to represent them and to number them among my loyal friends and acquaintances.

In conclusion let me again repeat the motto of the American postal worker: "Neither snow, nor rain, nor heat, nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds." [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein answers to certain questions which I propounded to the State Department on the trade-treaty agreements program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from James A. Myers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Atlanta Constitution by Mr. McGill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], under the previous order of the House, is recognized for 30 minutes.

ANSWERING MR. BENDER'S ATTACK ON THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to one of the most unusual addresses ever heard in this House, when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] read a speech awhile ago in which he started out as follows:

The Tennessee Valley Authority has a great Federal eleemosynary institution for the indigent Aluminum Co., Boss Crump's Memphis City Hall gang, and Tupelo's rural sweatshops.

His reference to Tupelo, of course, was to Tupelo, Miss., my home town. Of course, there are no rural sweatshops down there. Such insinuations will not appeal to the intelligence of this House.

But going a little further, he touched a still lower segment, if possible, in the following paragraph read from his unusual manuscript:

If they would come in here frankly and admit that Mississippi has three times the native white illiteracy of Ohio, that Tennessee has six times the native white illiteracy of Ohio, they might meet with a more sympathetic and understanding audience.

Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio, who is listening, that I do not know of a community in either Mississippi or Tennessee that would be embarrassed by comparison with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] from an intellectual or an educational standpoint. They are people of the finest Anglo-Saxon blood, culture, and tradition—and none of them have ever had to change their names to make them sound American.

He goes on to say:

But I could suggest better ways of spreading the more abundant life to the ill-clothed, ill-housed, ill-fed rural slums of Mississippi and Tennessee.

What a pity that some Members do not visit something besides their bailiwicks before they come to Congress and attempt to insult the constituencies of other Members!

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] read for an hour from his manuscript attacking the Tennessee Valley Authority while at this very moment the people on the Ohio River are drowning, and their property is being washed away and destroyed, because a Republican administration, in order to prevent salutary developments, such as we have on the Tennessee River, cluttered the Ohio River up with low dams which aid navigation very little, increase flood damages, and have destroyed the possibility of power development until some other administration takes the reins in hand, rebuilds those dams, and recovers the power resources of that majestic stream.

Not only that, but I can remember very distinctly during a Republican administration when the power companies or their agents were writing the schoolbooks in the State of Ohio. I wonder if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] read some of those books in his school days.

Getting back to this administration, which the gentleman from Ohio so vigorously and so viciously attacked, I call attention to the fact that we have built 13,000 miles of rural power lines in the State of Ohio in the last 5 years, reaching more than 50,000 farmers who never had electricity in their homes and who probably never would have had if they had waited until a Republican administration built them.

He talks about my speech being circulated in Ohio. I was invited to Ohio to address the farmers who were appealing for rural electrification. I can understand now why they did not send for him. I went to Columbus, the capital of Ohio, and spoke to 7,000 farmers. They published that speech, not at Government expense as he insinuates in his statement, but they paid for it themselves and circulated it, with my consent, and thereby helped the farmers of Ohio in their program of rural electrification, which is doing more for them than anything else that has been done by this or any other administration in your day and mine.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then Ohio went Republican in the next election, did it not?

Mr. RANKIN. I understand that Ohio got off the reservation 2 years ago, if that is what the gentleman refers to, but a Presidential election is coming on this year and Ohio will no doubt be found back in the Democratic column, especially if the voters of that State read the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]. [Applause.]

Evidently the Republican Party has set out to destroy our program of rural electrification, shut it down, abolish the cooperative power associations and public-utility districts, and turn their lines over to the private power companies. Then they could, and no doubt would, raise their rates and bleed the farmers with excessive overcharges.

If the rural light and power users of this country are ever forced into the bondage of the Power Trust, then they are gone. It will be economic slavery for them from that day on.

Six years ago a rural consumer in my county paid the private power company $4.50 for 25 kilowatt-hours of electricity a month. He now gets 25 kilowatt-hours a month from the cooperative power association for $1; and 25 cents out of that dollar goes to help pay out his line. When it is paid for, it will belong to the consumers and not to a private power company. So you see the farmers in that county really pay 75 cents for 25 kilowatt-hours a month, for which they used to pay $4.50.

Do you suppose the farmers of this country want to go back to those "good old days" of Republican prosperity—even in Ohio?

I want to refer to some of the things the gentleman from Ohio said. I pointed out some time ago that in 1938, according to the T. V. A. rates, the people of Ohio were overcharged $47,000,000 a year for electric lights and power, and that according to the Ontario rates they were overcharged $56,000,000 a year. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] lives in Cleveland, a town once blessed by that great Democrat, Newton D. Baker, who fought through and established their municipal light and power system. In the State of Ohio alone the residential consumers are overcharged $15,000,000 a year, according to the T. V. A. rates, and between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000 a year according to the Cleveland, Ohio, rates. He attempts to prove that the Tennessee Valley Authority is sustained by Federal taxes. What about Cleveland? If the people of Ohio received their electricity at the Cleveland rates, I dare say they would save at least $30,000,000 a year. Cleveland is not supported by Federal taxes. I wonder why he does not want the people of the rest of the State to enjoy the same cheap rates now enjoyed by the people of Cleveland?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I have been very much interested in what the gentleman has said year after year about the T. V. A. set-up. For my information, as well as for the information of the Members of the House, what percent of the construction cost of the T. V. A. dams, which are used to generate power, is charged off to other than power projects; in other words, what is charged to navigation and flood control?

Mr. RANKIN. About 50 percent. I will discuss that question with the gentleman when I get around to Massachusetts. You know the people of Massachusetts are overcharged more than $44,000,000 a year for electricity.

You Republicans do not seem to want your own constituents to get electricity at reasonable rates.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I want to get that for my information.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. Is it not a fact that the domestic power rates in Cincinnati, Ohio, are the second lowest in the United States?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman lives in Cincinnati?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Cincinnati does not have the second lowest rates, but rates there have been greatly reduced. A drive was started some time ago to build a power line from the T. V. A. into Ohio to serve the farmers of that State. The people of Cincinnati demanded that they be hooked on, which caused the power company to reduce the rates in Cincinnati.

Mr. ELSTON. It is a fact, is it not, that the rates in Cincinnati are the second lowest in the United States today?

Mr. RANKIN. No. The gentleman is wrong about that; but they have been greatly reduced since the T. V. A. yardstick has been in operation.

Mr. ELSTON. The Federal Power Commission report shows that.

Mr. RANKIN. I have the light and power rates here for every city and town in every State in the Union.

Mr. ELSTON. Is that from the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. The Federal Power Commission's report does not show that Cincinnati rates are the second lowest in the United States, but they have been greatly reduced since the creation of the T. V. A.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] spoke about the rates in Tupelo, Miss., my home town. Tupelo has reduced her rates again recently.

During the Hoover administration, the Republicans made a contract to sell the power generated at Muscle Shoals to the Alabama Power Co. wholesale at an average of about 1.56 mills per kilowatt-hour. Today those municipalities and cooperative associations are paying two or three times that amount to the T. V. A. for wholesale power and at the same time selling it at less than one-third of what the power company was charging the ultimate consumers 7 years ago.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I must decline to yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I am asking a question. If the gentleman will answer the question, I would appreciate it. That is all I am asking. I am trying to get some information.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman does not want information.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Yes, I do; and I think the House is entitled to it.

Mr. RANKIN. The House will get it in due time.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], who represents, or misrepresents, the State at large, talks about Cleveland. I just pointed out that if the people of Ohio—and remember, he does not just represent Newton Baker's old home town—they are going to want to know something about this when he goes to the other towns in Ohio that are paying these exorbitant rates, and when he gets out in the country, they are going to want to know where he has been all these years. In addition to having the lowest rates in Ohio, the municipal plant at Cleveland made a gross annual profit of $1,624,000 from the sale of $2,138,000 worth of electricity in 1938. There is not a power company in the United States that pays that percentage of its gross revenues in taxes or in lieu of taxes. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] had been as diligent in looking into the affairs of his own State and his own city as he was in digging up this material to try to besmirch the T. V. A., he might have known these facts.

Mr. BENDER. We are not talking about the municipal plant; we are talking about the T. V. A.

Mr. RANKIN. I will tell you why they are against the T. V. A. It is because the T. V. A. has furnished a yardstick that has shown the American people what electricty is worth and has forced reductions in light and power rates to the American people—the ultimate consumers—by $600,000,000 a year. [Applause.]

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I am sorry I cannot yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts at this time.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I believe the gentleman ought to explain how those rates were brought down.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. I want to ask the gentleman if it would not be fair in the matter of presenting the cause from both sides to show what private power rates were before the New Deal came in with the various remedies it has brought about in the last 7 years, taking private power rates in 1932 and not in 1939, after the influence and the effect of T. V. A. and these other agencies made itself felt.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; that is what I am doing.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman for a question, if he really wants information.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman has quoted Tupelo many times here as being the base for charging that other rates throughout the country are far in excess of what they ought to be. For my information, what are the capital charges charged off to power, flood control, and navigation at the dam at which the power for Tupelo is generated, and what are the percentages? This is important and the gentleman ought to tell that to the Members of the House. If we are going to build your dams for you, that is another matter.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman does not want information on this subject; it might get back to Massachusetts.

The Power Trust that bought this power from Muscle Shoals at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour from a Republican administration sold it to the ultimate consumers for 10 cents a kilowatt-hour, or a spread of more than 6,000 percent. Today our municipalities and cooperative power associations are buying it wholesale at about 5 mills, or two and one-half times what the power company paid for it under the Republican administration and selling it at a maximum of 3 cents. In Tupelo we have reduced it to a maximum of 2½ cents to the ultimate consumers.

In his discussion of the Tacoma situation the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] was all but pathetic. Tacoma, it is true, has only about 110,000 people while Cleveland, Ohio, has 918,000, yet he says that Tacoma has cheap power because of the small investment. Cleveland has only $18,000,000 invested in its plant and system while Tacoma, Wash., has $24,000,000 invested in its plants and system. Tacoma has paid that down to about $4,000,000, is paying it out as it goes, and has lower rates than any other town, city, or community in America.

He says the reason we can sell power so cheaply is that the T. V. A. is subsidized, and he takes up the tax situation to try to prove it. As a matter of fact, the only money they are asking in lieu of taxes is 10 percent of the gross sales, and the T. V. A. has been collecting 12½ percent of the gross sales for that purpose, ever since the T. V. A. has been in operation.

The people of the State of Tennessee have had their light and power rates reduced $7,000,000 per year. The people in my own small district, if they paid the rate for electricity they were paying during the Hoover administration, would pay $2,000,000 a year more for electricity than they pay now.

But the gentleman from Ohio talks as if they were a benighted crowd. In Ohio they only use about 60 to 70 kilowatt-hours a month on the average, while in my home town of Tupelo we are using over 200 kilowatt-hours a month, because we are using it for something besides light, and the people of Ohio will be using it for something besides light if they can ever get it at reasonable rates.

They will be using it for lights, radio, vacuum cleaner, the electric iron that takes a most terrific burden from the backs of the toiling women of Ohio; they will use it for water pumps to make the farm homes of Ohio, with which the gentleman from Ohio will probably get acquainted; they will use it for water pumps to make those homes more pleasant and more attractive places in which to live.

Mr. BENDER. While Tupelo is using it, we are paying for it.

Mr. RANKIN. I suppose he thinks he is paying for the electricity used in Tacoma, Wash. No; the people of Ohio are not paying for the power used in Tupelo. But they are paying "through the nose" for what they use in Ohio, outside of Cleveland.

They are paying about two or three prices outside of Cleveland, and you Clevelandites are getting power cheaper because Newt Baker made it possible for you to do so.

It also takes the refrigerator into the home. The saturation of refrigerators in the State of Ohio, if I am correctly informed, is less than 40 percent. In my town it is 90 percent. Among the rural consumers in my district, that he talks about living in slums, the saturation for electric refrigerators is greater than it is in the average city in the State of Ohio. They are learning to live and to put their money into those things that make their homes pleasant and profitable and attractive. Not only that but they use electric ranges and electric heaters that add to the comforts and conveniences of their homes. They are building cold-storage plants all over that country to save their meats, milk, vegetables, and other things that are necessary for the enjoyment of human life.

O Mr. Speaker, I have heard this abuse of President Roosevelt, but I want to say now that Franklin D. Roosevelt has done more for the power consumers of America than all the other Presidents combined. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is going to be in that hopeless minority that will vote the Republican ticket this fall, but I want to say to him now that, to use a Biblical expression, he might as well attempt to "bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades or loose the bands of Orion" as to try to check this movement for the electrification of America and for bringing these rates down to a level where the American people can afford to pay them.

Not only that, but give us a chance and we will take care of the Ohio River. We will make a T. V. A. on the Ohio River and save that great stream for the American people in the years to come.

Right over here today at the Conowingo Dam, on the Susquehanna River, they are selling power wholesale at 3⅓ mills a kilowatt-hour—cheaper than the T. V. A. is selling it even to Huntsville or Florence, Ala.; cheaper than they are selling it at Tupelo, Miss. But by the time it reaches the people of Pennsylvania or Maryland, they pay two or three times what it is worth.

The Louisiana Power & Light Co. is selling power to the Arkansas Power & Light Co. wholesale for 2.2 mills per kilowatt-hour, or one-third, you might say, of what the average municipality is paying the T. V. A. in my district, yet we are distributing at a rate that, if applied in Arkansas, would save the people of Arkansas from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 a year; and if applied in Ohio, would save the people of Ohio $47,000,000 a year, or more than the wheat crop of the entire State of Ohio brought in the year 1938 or in the year 1931, when Herbert Hoover was President of the United States.

No, Mr. Speaker; there is no use bucking this proposition. We are going to electrify America at reasonable rates before we quit. And that means that we are going to electrify the farm homes in every State, including Ohio and Michigan.

It sounds very cheap to the decent white people of the South to hear some demagog talk about our people being ignorant or living in slums.

I wish they would come down and mingle with those old-line Americans, the sons of that pioneer stock that followed old Andrew Jackson to New Orleans, where they "taught the new-fledged American eagle to match his talons with the lion's strength"; talk to those old-line Americans, who do not know what a Socialist is or what a Communist looks like—those individualists who fight the Nation's battles in time of war and carry its burdens in time of peace. Then I am sure we would never again have our ears vexed with such speeches as we have listened to here today.

I sincerely trust that no other man on this floor, at least as long as I am a Member, will ever again descend to the level reached by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] in his slurring remarks about the people of Mississippi and Tennessee. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes and to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is an encouraging thing to know that the people of the South, more especially the people of Mississippi, have electricity, and for one I hope that in the gentleman's [Mr. RANKIN] State, when they get this electricity, opportunity will be offered for that large proportion of the population which never has been able to learn how to read and write, to learn to read and write, and that after they obtain that knowledge, that down in the gentleman's State a large proportion—perhaps a major proportion—of the people who are not now permitted to vote will be permitted to vote, so that they can exercise their rights as American citizens.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No. Wait a minute, you are out of order. You know they have never been able to do it. It is all right for the gentleman to attack the Northern States, the State of Michigan, the State of Ohio, and the people of those States, but the gentleman seems to have forgotten——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I did not attack the people of any State, and the gentleman is not going to stand here and get away with it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have not yielded to the gentleman to make a point of order or anything else.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I will proceed in order. The gentleman from Mississippi, from the southern part of Mississippi, from the city of Tupelo——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. The gentleman from Michigan cannot juggle geography in that way. I am from the north part of Mississippi.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is very free with his criticisms of other Members of the House, but I recall distinctly how not long ago on the floor of the House he questioned the integrity of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. RANKIN. O, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, I did not do anything of the kind; I never have questioned his integrity; and unless that is withdrawn I shall demand that those words be taken down. I did not question the integrity of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What did you do if you did not question it? I heard the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] make a defense here.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to permit him to get by with that statement. I did not question the integrity of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] or anybody else.

Mr. HOFFMAN. All right. If he says he did not, I withdraw the words. You can read what he said on page 4754 of the RECORD. I say this, that not so long ago you said my campaign expenses were paid by the Power Trust, and there is no truth in that statement.

Mr. RANKIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make two points of order. In the first place he called me "you," in violation of the rules.

Mr. HOFFMAN. All right. I withdraw that. The gentleman from Mississippi—the northern part of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan corrects his statement. He withdraws the word "you" and refers to the gentleman from northern Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Another point.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I withdraw that, too, without knowing what it is, if it is offensive to him, but I notice that all of the time he occupied he referred to the gentleman from Ohio as "he," and he also said that the gentleman from Ohio was attempting to represent, and so on.

Mr. RANKIN. You have a right to say "he." That is not against the rule. The gentleman better familiarize himself with the rules.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi—from the northern or the lower part of Mississippi, wherever it may be, where they do not permit thousands upon thousands of citizens down there to vote—that is the thing that I am talking about, where they pay them an average wage of $10 or $12 for a week's work and feed them on corn bread and side bacon.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman shows his ignorance of the people of Mississippi. They do not do anything of the kind.

Mr. HOFFMAN. All right. You do not feed them at all—let them "root hog or die"? [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; they feed themselves.

Mr. HOFFMAN. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. He has not obtained permission of the Chair to speak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi did not have a point of order because the gentleman from Michigan had not said anything that was subject to a point of order during the last minute.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would like to be protected, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will protect the gentleman, if he can.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not too much; just a little. [Laughter.]

Now, the gentleman from Mississippi, as I stated before, is always and forever—listen to this—so often you criticize us, over here, so bitterly and find so much fault with our motives. Am I right?

Mr. RANKIN. I am questioning your judgment, not your motives.

Mr. HOFFMAN. With our motives?

Mr. RANKIN. I am leaving the motives to you. I am questioning your judgment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not our motives?

Mr. RANKIN. I question the gentleman's judgment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In the days to come we will watch that record. Hereafter—oh, no, I must not say "hereafter," but when, on occasion, if you do, as you may, challenge our motives and our integrity, we are going to call attention to the rules, and no longer will any on the majority side be permitted to challenge the motives of all those who do not agree that the T. V. A. is a blessing to the Nation as a whole.

Now, of course, in the view of some it is all right for all the rest of us to furnish the money—when I say "the rest of us" I mean the people in the Northern States—to furnish the money to build your power plants even if through them you take away our factories. They, the industrial States, contribute, through Federal taxation, millions of dollars which go into the Southern States to build these power dams, to build these electric-light plants which I suppose under the decision of the Supreme Court are for flood control. Electric lights and poles and wires for flood control. Take money from industrial States, string wire on poles, and call it a waterway for navigation—sail a ship or operate a power boat on a high-power electric wire? [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman know how many miles of rural power lines we have built in Michigan?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, the gentleman is interrupting me now, Mr. Speaker, in violation of the rules, without obtaining permission. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HOFFMAN. For a question?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, surely.

Mr. RANKIN. Is it not a fact that this administration has built thousands of miles of rural power lines in Michigan for farmers who never would have had electricity, and that thousands of them live in the gentleman's own district? They probably never would have got electricity to their homes if it had not been for this administration.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not know how many live in my district. The Government has built lines. It has paralleled private power lines. There is no question about that. It has by high-pressure salesmanship sold contracts to farmers who have learned to their sorrow that with income reduced by the New Deal they are hard put to it to pay their light and power bills. It has been building those lines with money collected from taxpayers; but the point I want to make is: You cannot get away from the record—most of the money to build those plants in the South has come from the northern sections, the industrial sections, the rich farming sections of the country, and most of it has gone down South, where small wages are paid and where they do not even let the citizens vote. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SECCOMBE for the balance of the week on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks with regard to the bill H. R. 9243 and include therein a table from the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs showing the cost and saving of this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Father, of an infinite majesty, concealed in light in the midst of a glory into which mortal vision may not penetrate: Be Thou inclined to dwell with us this day, for we come before Thee with contrite hearts, our need our only prayer. Compass our being with Thy love, and renew our faith in our own glorious possibilities and those of our fellow men at home and abroad, lest we lose all confidence in the power of truth over human hearts, knowing that when hope dies endeavor ends. And, as we strive and struggle for the right, do Thou sustain us by the vision of the Holy City wherein all sin, sorrow, and weakness shall pass away and all discords of existence shall melt into beauteous harmony and the ransomed of the Lord shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, for the Lamb that is in the midst of the Throne shall guide them unto fountains of waters of life, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. We ask these blessings for Thy mercy's sake and in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, April 22, 1940, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

LAWS PERTAINING TO THE COAST GUARD

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend and clarify certain acts pertaining to the Coast Guard, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

[Translation]

Concurrent resolution to request the Tariff Commission of the Foreign Commerce Service of the Department of State and the other competent authorities of the Federal Government, through the corresponding official bodies, that in all reciprocal-trade agreements that the United States of America may hereafter make with the European nations, preference be given to Puerto Rican coffee among the products that are to be the object of tariff protection under said agreements so that this product of our land may regain the market that it once had among the nations of the old continent

Whereas coffee is one of the two principal products of Puerto Rico from which a great part of our rural population and a great number of small landowners have obtained their living and should hereafter continue to do so;

Whereas the value and utility of coffee as a basic product of our economy not only depends on the limited market of domestic consumption but also depends—and to a greater degree—on the possibilities of export;

Whereas in spite of the high place which our coffee formerly held in European markets on account of its excellent quality, its export to said countries has considerably decreased, due in part to tariff barriers and in part to the invasion of the market by other producing areas;

Whereas even though our coffee enjoys free entry into the territory of the continental United States, there it has to compete disadvantageously with coffee of inferior quality and lower price coming from other countries where the cost of production and their large crops permit it to be placed on the American market at prices that mean real ruin to the coffee of Puerto Rico;

Whereas this has brought about, as a result, an excess in production over the capacity of local consumption, which is the reason the Puerto Rican growers cannot sell all their coffee at a profitable price;

Whereas for the reasons stated herein and other natural causes, such as the hurricanes that have frequently scourged us, the coffee industry of Puerto Rico has suffered serious reverses, the greater part of the coffee growers now finding themselves if not completely ruined, at least with their properties and the credit encumbered on account of large debts which increase from year to year, it being the case that a large majority of the property owners have not yet been able to pay the loans which were granted them by the Puerto Rican Hurricane Relief Commission, and that not a few properties have had to be sold at auction by the Federal Land Bank of Baltimore; it being also true that many coffee growers cannot even pay the property taxes;

Whereas the legislature and the government of Puerto Rico have for several years been making desperate efforts successfully to meet the coffee crisis by deferring and remitting taxes, taking action against contraband coffee, establishing quotas for the local market, appropriating funds for subsidies and purchase of excess coffee, and putting other measures into practice without its being possible to attack the problem in its full magnitude because our insular government lacks such financial resources and legislative and administrative powers under our organic act as the case requires;

Whereas it is still acknowledged in many countries that Puerto Rican coffee, on account of its aroma, its color, and its flavor, is one of the best produced in the entire world;

Whereas Puerto Rico is not only a possession of the United States but also at the same time a conglomerate of about 2,000,000 inhabitants who are proud of their American citizenship and who constitute one of the first overseas markets for the products of the metropolis, its coffee should be considered, for the effects of proper protection in the international market, as a national product of the United States of America; and

Whereas a similar policy has already been initiated by Great Britain which, in treaties recently made with the United States and other nations, has procured adequate protection for some of the products of its possessions: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico (the senate concurring)—

SECTION 1. To request through the proper official bodies, as it is hereby requested, the Tariff Commission, the Department of State, and the Foreign Commerce Service of said Department, and all other competent authorities of the Federal Government, that in all the reciprocal-trade agreements which the United States may hereafter enter into with European nations, Puerto Rican coffee be included preferentially among the products that may be the object of tariff protection under said treaties, with a view to a wider commercial interchange, so that this product, the decisive factor in our insular economy, may regain the market and the reasonable price that it enjoyed in the past among the nations of the Old World.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be sent by registered mail to—

The President of the United States,

The Tariff Commission of the Federal Government,

Both legislative Houses of Congress,

The Secretary of the Interior and the Division of Territories and Possessions of said Department,

The Secretary of State and the Foreign Commerce Service of said Department,

The Governor of Puerto Rico, and

The Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington.

SEC. 3. That not less than three certified copies be sent to each of the three persons and entities last mentioned in section 2 of this resolution, with the special charge that this request of the highest representation of the people of Puerto Rico joined in these two legislative houses, reach all the competent authorities of the national administration that may intervene in the matter.

MIGUEL A. GARCIA MÉNDEZ,
Speaker, House of Representatives.
R. MARTINEZ NADAL,
President of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Ava Benjamin, secretary, Independence Club, and Alvin Washburn, chairman, Committee for Political Unity, Oroville, Calif., remonstrating against reduction in the appropriations for the National Labor Relations Board and the Wage and Hour Administration, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the New Group of the Brooklyn Ethical Culture Society, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the enactment of Senate bill 3170, known as the American Youth Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of several citizens of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the appropriation of funds for Polish relief, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial of sundry citizens of Stockton, Calif., remonstrating against the shipment of war materials to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Local Union No. 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, New York City, N. Y., protesting against the appropriation of funds for the Department of Justice to be used to prosecute criminally labor unions and labor officials, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of New York City and vicinity, praying for the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Van Nuys-Capper antilynching bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the board of directors of the Housing Association of Metropolitan Boston (Mass.) protesting against the enactment of the bill (S. 591) to amend the United States Housing Act of 1937, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, protesting against the shipment of war materials and munitions to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILEY presented a resolution of the Waupaca County Council, American Legion, adopted in meeting assembled at Iola, Wis., favoring the granting of pensions to World War veterans on the basis of age and disability, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Manitowoc County (Wis.) Board of Supervisors, favoring the maintenance of a policy of strict neutrality on the part of the United States in its foreign relations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the American Jugoslav-Voters League, of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the enactment of certain pending antialien legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

EFFECT OF EUROPEAN WAR ON THE UNITED STATES—ADDRESS BY SENATOR PITTMAN AT RENO, NEV.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on the 16th of this month at Reno, Nev., I delivered an address on the subject of the possible effect of the European war upon the welfare of the United States. Some excerpts from that address have been published. I fear that a wrong construction will be placed upon the entire address unless its full text appears. Therefore, so that there may be no misunderstanding, I ask unanimous consent that the address, in full, may be published in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Toastmaster of the banquet and ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience of America, I have been requested to discuss the possible effect of the European war upon the welfare of the United States.

The proximate effect is upon our economic system. Its future effect may threaten the peace and safety of our country.

Great Britain and France as belligerents, being denied the privilege of selling their securities or obtaining credit in the United States, are compelled to purchase in the United States with gold. It is estimated that Great Britain and France have sufficient gold to make purchases of war materials in the United States for a period of 2 years. Great Britain and France, however, particularly Great Britain, must purchase raw materials. Realizing that the war area will probably expand and that the war may last longer than 2 years, Great Britain and France must hoard their gold supplies for purchases of war material in the United States and must attempt to buy foodstuffs and raw materials in other countries where they can trade their manufactured articles for such materials. This program has already been undertaken by Great Britain and France. It has resulted in a very large decrease of importations by those countries of those articles and materials to which I have referred. This process has a tendency to expand certain manufacturing industries while repressing other industries, particularly agriculture and mining.

The probable necessity for the deflation of the currencies of the warring powers would again place those countries in a better competitive position with relation to exports, thereby tending to decrease our exports. This is but a sketchy description of the economic effect of the war upon our country. The result of the war must of necessity have far-reaching military effects upon the United States.

So far, it appears to me as a nonmilitary expert, that Hitler has outgeneraled the British and the French. Of course, the war is but in its infancy, and conditions may rapidly change. It is unnecessary to go back to the beginning of the retreat of Great Britain. The surrender of Munich and the conquest of Czechoslovakia greatly strengthened Germany, both as to prestige and as to possession of physical properties. It was with this added strength that Hitler invaded Poland. Then Great Britain and France declared war upon Germany. Hitler carried out its vaunted blitzkrieg by conquering Poland in an astonishingly short period of time. Great Britain and France, upon the declaration of war, announced their intention of going to the aid of Poland. It was practically impossible. Poland was isolated from approach by land or by sea. It would appear that Great Britain and France should have anticipated the results. Possibly the fate of Poland might have been less severe. The conquest of Poland injured the prestige of Great Britain and France with all neutral countries. All of these neutral countries were then, and now are, shivering in fear of Hitler.

And then Russia conquered Finland. When that invasion started we again heard pronouncements of intended aid to Finland. There was no substantial aid granted. And now Norway, lying entirely on the sea, accessible to the fleet of Great Britain and France, has been invaded by the German armed forces. Should the German conquest of Norway be consummated, Sweden would inevitably be next. Such an event would almost destroy the prestige of Great Britain and France and would probably force all of the Balkan states into submission to Hitler. Victory by Great Britain and France would then be very difficult, if not impossible. I do not believe, however, that Germany will be able to hold Norway. I am satisfied that the necessity of driving the German forces out of Norway is fully realized by Mr. Churchill. I am of the opinion that the German forces will be driven out of Norway within 30 days. If I am right in this conjecture, then Sweden is saved. Whether Hitler will attack in Holland and Belgium, or march into the Balkans, no one knows but Hitler. In any event, Hitler will be greatly weakened if he fails in his conquest of Norway and Sweden. Our country is neutral in all of its acts and will remain neutral, and yet it is impossible for statesmen to banish from their minds the effect of a conquest of Europe by Hitler singly or in cooperation with other totalitarian powers.

Now, let us remember that there is no danger to the United States while the European war is in progress. When the war ends, if it be through a victory by Hitler, or by the totalitarian powers, then there will arise immediately a threat to the peace and safety of the United States through South America, Central America, and Mexico. The same threat would not exist if Great Britain and France are the victors. Great Britain has vast colonies and cares little for more possessions. It is to her interest to maintain the independence of neutrals so that she may have free trade and commerce with them. It is by reason of this British policy that the British Navy, since 1812, has not been a threat to the United States. Having no cause to fear the British Navy, the duty has not been imposed upon us of maintaining a dominant navy. While most of our statesmen undoubtedly view the situation in Europe as I do, nevertheless our people and our Congress, and our President, are determined to take no part in that war. It would be less burdensome and less dangerous to provide a Navy that could protect the American hemisphere against any attack than it would be to maintain a constant protectorate over Great Britain and France. To do that would permanently involve us in the turmoils of Europe. It was with such intent and under such fixed policy that we adopted the Neutrality Act. By that act we prohibited our vessels from carrying on commerce with belligerents, or even entering combat areas where there is danger of destruction of our vessels and the lives of our citizens on board. We will not permit our citizens to travel on belligerent vessels. We will not permit belligerent governments to sell their securities in our country or to obtain credit here. They can come with their ships and pay for our goods and take the risk of getting them across the seas. There was some doubt, at the time of the adoption of the Neutrality Act, as to the effect it would have in keeping us out of war, but the experience of the 6 months of war has removed all doubt in the mind of every calm, intelligent, and advised person. During such period we have not lost a vessel nor the life of a single citizen. The act is almost automatic in its operations. There is substantially no discretion in it. We are prohibited from committing acts that might drag us into the war. We will stay out of the war. Let the mothers and fathers of this country rest in peace.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. CONTROL OF PAYMENTS TO VETERANS AND DEPENDENTS RESIDING ABROAD

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, by request, I introduce for proper reference a bill with regard to which I desire to make a statement.

There are some 9,000 war veterans and dependents of war veterans overseas who receive checks monthly from the Veterans' Administration. The total checks perhaps run as high as two and a half to three million dollars. There is no certainty that much of this money is being received by the veterans themselves, or the dependents of veterans. On the contrary, there is ground for belief that a large portion of the money transmitted abroad monthly is taken by way of taxes in certain countries. The money, of course, is the money of the veteran to whom it has been awarded, or of his widow or orphans. The bill introduced by me authorizes the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to withhold payment, and to accumulate the money due the veteran under such regulations as he may adopt, if there cannot be worked out satisfactory arrangements with the countries in which many of these veterans now reside.

In that connection, I desire to say that an effort has been made and is now being made between the Veterans' Administration, the State Department, and other departments of the Government, to work out an arrangement by which there can be assurance that the money paid monthly by the Veterans' Administration to these beneficiaries will go to the beneficiaries under some guarantee that they will receive the full or substantially the full amount, and will retain freedom to expend for their necessities such amounts as they may elect. This bill is introduced not for the purpose of embarrassing the negotiations which are under way, but rather in aid of them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill of the Senator from Georgia will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3835) to provide for the control of payments of financial benefits to veterans and their dependents who reside outside the continental limits of the United States, except for Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, and the Panama Canal Zone, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H. R. 7865. An act to amend the act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto, approved June 6, 1892, and acts amendatory thereof;

H. R. 8692. An act to amend the act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 9210. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1932, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9284. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. A. L. Ridings; and

H. R. 9326. An act to provide educational employees of the public schools of the District of Columbia with leave of absence, with part pay, for purposes of educational improvement, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H. R. 9243. An act to provide for the promotion of promotion-list officers of the Army after specified years of service in grade, and for other purposes; to the calendar.

EXTENSION OF THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MEAD submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service and ordered to be printed.

ADVISORY COUNCIL ON EMPLOYMENT SECURITY—AMENDMENTS

Mr. GREEN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 34) authorizing the establishment of an Advisory Council on Employment Security, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL—BAYOU LA FOURCHE AND CHANNELS BETWEEN GULF OF MEXICO AND INTRACOASTAL WATERWAY, LA.

Mr. OVERTON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6264, the river and harbor authorization bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. TYDINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 9109, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, 1941, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 78, lines 1 to 4, inclusive, strike out the following: "No part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used for the operation of a testing laboratory of the highways department for making tests of materials in connection with any activity of the District government."

AMENDMENT TO LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 9007, the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill, 1941, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 3, line 19, to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the publication entitled 'Our Constitution and Government—Federal Textbook on Citizenship,' may be sold by the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office in quantities of 10 or more copies at the rate of 25 cents per copy."

PROHIBITION OF TRANSPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS—AMENDMENT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to Senate bill 3550, and I wish to speak briefly on it.

This bill (S. 3550) would make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce. My amendment would exempt from the provisions of the bill all parts for farm equipment already sold by State penal institutions.

In the State of Wisconsin, for example, it has been estimated by one of the farmers' educational and cooperative equity groups that Wisconsin farmers own almost $7,000,000 worth of farm equipment purchased from the Minnesota State penal institutions.

I am not arguing the merits of making any further sales of convict-made machinery to Wisconsin farmers, nor am I arguing the merits or demerits of Senate bill 3550. I am merely stating that, as our farmers already own this much equipment it would be an unwarranted hardship on them to prevent them from purchasing parts from the penal institutions for the machinery they now own. In other words, I do not want to see this bill orphan all the farm equipment already sold by State penal institutions.

I believe the objectives of this proposed legislation may be valid, but before it is considered further, it might be wise to investigate its somewhat all-inclusive provisions. It is barely possible that the bill as written might have some rather amusing effects. Under the provisions of this bill it might happen that many of the distinguished Senators here today would be unable to drive their cars back to their home States because their license tags were made in State penal institutions and, consequently, could not be used in interstate commerce.

It might even be that the prisoner who had served his time and departed from his alma mater in a prison-made suit which he received free would be unable to leave the State while he was wearing such a suit. It seems quite possible that under the terms of this bill a convict-made truck body used on a State truck would be unable to cross the State line. I mention these not as probabilities, but as possibilities, which could stand consideration.

It might be that this proposed legislation would be more acceptable if it made further exemption of:

First. Goods purchased before the enactment of the act so that the Minnesota farmer who bought a Minnesota prison-made tractor would not have to abandon the tractor when he moved to Wisconsin.

Second. All license tags made in State penal institutions.

Third. All prison-made goods not intended to be sold to the general public.

Fourth. Prison-made goods used in exchange between States. For example, I understand that the penal institutions of Utah exchange canned goods for blankets made by the prisons of Wyoming and make a similar exchange for clothing manufactured by the prisons of Nebraska.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks a copy of Senate bill 3550, to which I have referred, may be printed in the RECORD, and also the amendment which I now send to the desk and ask to have lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment presented by the Senator from Wisconsin will lie on the table and be printed; and, without objection, the bill and amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill and amendment are as follows:

A bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever knowingly shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce in any manner or by any means whatsoever or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part by convicts and prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation), or in any penal or reformatory institution, from one State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country, into any State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year or both: Provided, That nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in Federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government: Provided further, That this act shall go into effect 1 year after its approval by the President.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WILEY to the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce, viz: On page 2, line 10, after the word "Government", to insert the following: "and nothing herein shall apply to repair parts for farm machinery."

INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. GILLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 260), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 212, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, agreed to February 9, 1940, authorizing a special committee to investigate campaign expenditures, is hereby increased by $45,000.

REPORT ON THE EMORY AND OBED RIVERS, TENN.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted a resolution (S. Res. 261), which was ordered to lie over 1 day under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate a copy of the report of Maj. Bernard Smith, district engineer, Corps of Engineers, Nashville, Tenn. district, concerning the Emory and Obed Rivers of Tennessee, which report was recently filed by Major Smith with the Chief of Engineers of the War Department.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT ON THE STATUS OF WILDLIFE

Mr. PITTMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 263), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 1,800 additional copies of Senate Report No. 1203, submitted pursuant to Senate Resolution 246 (71st Cong.), entitled "The Status of Wildlife in the United States," of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Special Committee on the Conservation of Wildlife Resources and 300 copies for the use of the Senate document room.

FILMING OF MOTION PICTURES ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 262) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to the filming of motion or sound pictures on areas (1) under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, and (2) any other matter with respect to the filming of motion or sound pictures on land belonging to the United States which the committee may deem it appropriate to investigate. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable during the Seventy-seventh Congress the results of its investigation and shall include in its report any recommendations for legislation it may deem appropriate.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and Seventy-seventh Congresses, to employ and to call upon the executive departments for clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $6,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys; and I desire to say a word in explanation:

The honorable Secretary of the Interior, in his zeal, has conceived the idea that he is paramount in regard to all lands belonging to the United States. I may be wrong, but I believe that under the Constitution Congress is the appropriate body to deal with and dispose of the public lands. This resolution has something to do with an inquiry as to which of the two authorities—the Secretary of the Interior or the Congress—is, under the Constitution, the proper one to deal with the public lands.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice that part of the resolution, at any rate, deals with the making of films and sound pictures. In the Appropriations Committee it developed that not only the Interior Department but certain other departments, apparently without any direct authority therefor, are devoting a considerable portion of their funds, amounting perhaps to well over half a million dollars, to filming various things. The appropriation for that purpose was left out of the appropriation bill by the committee. I do not know what the connection is, but it does seem that our departments are going a little strong on making films.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not doubt the accuracy of the statement of the able Senator from Tennessee, but, in addition to that, the Department of the Interior, by an order issued April 20, 1940, has presumed to set forth a schedule of fees and commissions which shall be charged against persons who desire to make films on the lands of the United States. That may or may not be the desire of Congress.

This resolution is not in any sense designed to "muckrake" the Interior Department. Far from my mind is such an idea. I wish not to inject into the morning hour a discussion of the Logan-Walter bill. This is not the time for that, but it is such actions as that taken by the honorable Secretary of the Interior in setting up fees and commissions to be charged for entering upon the lands of the United States and taking pictures and making films, which give rise to such measures as the Logan-Walter bill. Nobody outside of the Department was present when that order was discussed. We do not know the nature of the evidence which was taken. It may have been hearsay. It may have been incompetent. No provision is made for any appeal. Hence, when such unnecessary, irritating, arbitrary, pestiferous—I think that is a good locution; it comes from "pestis"—orders are issued, is the Congress to be blamed for providing some sort of an avenue by which the citizen may sometime, somewhere, have his day in court?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I am delighted that the Senator has submitted such a resolution. I hope it will be adopted and I want to say to him that I shall take great pleasure in voting for it.

Mr. ASHURST. I feel much reenforced by the statement of the very able Senator from Tennessee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REGULATION OF TRANSACTIONS IN FOREIGN-OWNED PROPERTY

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 252) to amend section 5 (b) of the act of October 6, 1917, as amended, and for other purposes, introduced by me today, and I submit a report (No. 1496) thereon. I hope to confer with the two leaders, and perhaps have the joint resolution called up for consideration tomorrow. It covers a rather important subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and the joint resolution placed on the calendar.

CITIZENSHIP DAY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective House, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and agree to the same.

ALBERT B. CHANDLER,
JNO. E. MILLER,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
SAM HOBBS,
U. S. GUYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RIVER AND HARBOR AUTHORIZATIONS, 1941

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1424, House bill 6264, authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with amendments.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will proceed to state the amendments reported by the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was on page 2, after line 10, to insert:

Portland Harbor, Maine; House Document No. 560, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to this routine procedure, which is usually followed, but I think in this particular instance the able Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, should make a statement concerning the bill, stating the amount of the appropriation, and the history associated with the measure. There is an impression throughout the country that this is the old Senate bill which went to the calendar last year. I think that the Senator, who is so able to do so, should distinguish between the pending bill, the Senate bill, and the House bill, if I may be permitted to make that suggestion to the able Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, it is entirely agreeable to me and I should prefer to proceed according to the suggestion of the senior Senator from Oregon.

This is a bill which has been generally known in the Senate heretofore as a river and harbor bill, but it is distinguished from former bills in two respects. In the first place, it is a strictly navigation bill; that is to say, it is limited to river and harbor and channel improvements throughout our country, Puerto Rico, the Hawaiian Islands, and Alaska. We have followed the policy of excluding, for present purposes, what have been known here as flood-control and power projects, or flood-control projects solely, or power projects which appear to be power projects solely.

The other distinction is that, having made this division, which we hope the Senate will sustain, the value of which I intend to argue, we are undertaking now to lay before the Senate and the country a 7-year program, with a view to avoiding the annual or biennial struggles in matters of this sort.

Mr. President, with those two distinctions before us, I shall undertake to give the reason why we are separating the navigation projects from the flood-control and power projects. Probably the principal reason is the fact that if we combine them, the demands upon the Senate and the Treasury will at once appear to be so great that, notwithstanding the bill might be passed here because of such widespread and thoroughgoing interest created by the authorization, it might nevertheless meet with great difficulty, and possibly defeat.

The other reason is that the House has two committees dealing with rivers and harbors. One is the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the other is the Flood Control Committee. It is very difficult to handle on the Senate side two separate measures coming from the House unless we have two separate Senate measures.

There is a third reason. Personally, and as chairman of the committee, I am hoping that we may dispose of this navigation authorization bill today, get it behind us, and clear the decks for the consideration of flood-control bills and flood-control-plus-power bills, many of which have been introduced, demands for the enactment of which are very great, and the authorizations in which, I am informed by the chairman of the committee in the House, are mounting up to considerably more than $200,000,000.

What I have in mind is that either in the remaining days of the present session, if the flood-control bill comes to the Senate from the House—and if it does not, then during the next session—once this navigation bill is out of the way, we will give the right-of-way to the flood-control projects.

Mr. President, I think there is sound reason behind this policy. It is new, but we are driven to it by necessity. It is very difficult for us intelligently to handle a bill, either in the committee or on the floor of the Senate, which calls for authorizations up to three, or four, or five, or, perhaps, six hundred million dollars, and which is complicated with navigation, rivers, harbors, flood control, and power. I think those functions are in separate categories, and that it will greatly simplify matters to separate them for purposes of legislation.

I may say in passing that, while I have no power in the premises, I hope that Senators who are primarily interested in flood control and power projects will not undertake to get their projects into this bill. If they do, they will not only disrupt the plan we have adopted but I think they will threaten all such legislation for this session. I think they will gain nothing for themselves, and probably will defeat some very valuable navigation projects.

With this statement as to the reasons for our procedure, I shall now make a statement as to the difference between the House bill as it came to the Senate and the bill as it now stands.

The House bill came over last year about this time. It called for projects—navigation, flood control, and power projects—totaling $83,000,000. It was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, and in the course of its consideration by that subcommittee demands were made and amendments were offered which lifted the amount of the House bill from $83,000,000 to $330,000,000. They involved navigation, flood control, and power.

At the instance of the majority leader, in the last regular session, the first session of the present Congress, I did not ask to have the bill made a special order, or to have it taken up for consideration. I thought the sum involved was too great. It seemed to me that in the interest of what we have been describing in a very general way as economy, and in the effort to bring about some reasonable reduction in Federal expenditures, a course to which I am thoroughly committed, it was the part of wisdom not to ask for the consideration of the bill in the former regular session of the Congress.

The consequence was that with the lapse of time many more projects were favorably passed upon and approved by the Board of Engineers and the Chief of Engineers. Many projects were brought forward by many Members of the House and the Senate, and in the present session we have been struggling with a situation involving demands upon the Commerce Committee for legislation or authorizations exceeding $400,000,000.

So in the effort to bring about some sort of separation, and to let Congress and the country understand how much money is proposed to be used for flood control and how much for navigation, in order that each cause might stand upon its merits, we have brought in this bill, which calls for authorizations amounting to $231,000,000, strictly limited to navigation projects, and in the bill we provide for appropriations over a 7-year period. Seven into $231,000,000 gives about $35,000,000 a year—no great amount. In frankness I should say that the $35,000,000 is increased, of course, by the annual maintenance charges for river and harbor projects which now amount to a little more than $50,000,000 a year.

I should say further that there are other projects heretofore authorized, amounting perhaps to $125,000,000. With that sum added, still there would be an annual appropriation for new work of only about $45,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, I submit that that is moderate. I am perfectly willing to enter into a bond—and my word will be my bond in this matter—that I shall not ask under any circumstances that we vary from this 7-year program. I shall not ask that we increase the amount above the authorizations proposed and the authorizations outstanding, divided into the 7-year period.

I now wish to address myself to the subject of rivers and harbors and navigation. I do this because we have been taking this great Federal function for granted, and bad impressions concerning it have cropped out throughout the land.

For example, I frequently hear the river and harbor authorization bill referred to as a "pork barrel" proposition. I saw such a statement in a most reputable journal this week. There is no "pork barrel" in this measure. Every project in the bill has, after survey, been approved by the Chief of Engineers of the War Department of the United States as economically sound. That negatives the "pork barrel" idea.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I shall yield in a moment. There is not a project in the bill, other than one which I intend to discuss quite frankly before we finish, that is not approved by men who are utterly divorced from politics, who have no interest whatever in the distribution of patronage or the gratification of local constituencies or building up the popularity of Senators or Members of the House.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not interested in epithets, and I will pass the question of whether or not there is any "pork" in this bill; but I want to dissent at this point from the Senator's apparent assumption that the mere fact that the Chief of Engineers and the present Board of Engineers report economic justification for projects necessarily means that there is economic justification. I emphatically dissent from that point of view, and I intend to present proof to justify my position a little later today.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to hear the proof from my very able and distinguished colleague and friend. His judgment is always to be respected. But I shall be perfectly amazed if it can be demonstrated here that the Board of Engineers of the United States Army, and, in particular, the Chief of Engineers—because the River and Harbor Act refers the final judgment to the Chief of Engineers, not the Board—I shall be utterly amazed if it can be demonstrated that that eminent and historical body of able men have misled us in the slightest degree in their statements that these projects are economically justified.

I have heard the criticism on that point that the engineers have confused benefits with economics. Well, I also am confused on that matter. If there is a confusion there, very well, I am a victim of it. If the American people receive a benefit of $2,000,000 from a channel, I consider that benefit as a $2,000,000 contribution to our economic situation. The fact that it is not realized in cash by way of payment makes no difference to me. If it is a material benefit of a value of $2,000,000, who cares whether or not it is represented in the money of the country? If it is represented in the benefits inuring to the American people, that is sufficient for me.

Let us now look at the picture.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In regard to what the Senator from North Carolina said respecting the Chief of Engineers, and the Corps of Engineers, may I ask him if it is not true that among all the governmental agencies over a long period of years the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army at least has the reputation of being one of the most efficient and far-seeing agencies, as well as being dissociated from political wire pulling and things of that kind?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think there is any question about that, but I am going to listen to the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who has given us notice of what he intends to show.

I wish now to go over this picture about our navigation projects. We have a vast country. The waters of four seas wash her shores—not only the Atlantic and the Pacific, but the Caribbean and the Bering Seas. I know of no other country that has such a shore line. We need harbors everywhere along that shore line.

Probably one of the great misfortunes of this country was that about 1790 there began a concentration of commerce whereby just two or three harbors received the benefit of all our foreign commerce. They had a monopoly. Under the river and harbor legislation of the Congress, which was inaugurated in 1822, 118 years ago, we began to build up first our harbors, principally New York, Boston, Portland, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. In more recent times we have extended harbor improvements along the southern border to Norfolk, Wilmington, Morehead, Beaufort, Georgetown, Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, and Miami, and then around the Gulf to Mobile, New Orleans, Corpus Christi, Houston, Galveston, and Port Arthur.

Then on the western coast there has been some magnificent work done. Portland, far in the interior, is now a great ocean seaport, and the harbors of Seattle, San Francisco, San Diego, Los Angeles, and Tacoma, have likewise been developed.

Mr. McNARY. Do not omit Portland.

Mr. BAILEY. I said Portland. I am glad the Senator put emphasis on it. I may say, at this point, that the Senator from Oregon is now seriously interested in a project contained in the bill which would extend water transportation into the wheat fields of Idaho, at Lewistown, Idaho. If Senators will read the report on the bill they will see how the freight rates on wheat would be reduced thereby.

Mr. President, my point is that these harbors have been of inestimable value, not only to their localities, but to the whole country.

I am very happy to say that, in recent years, the harbors along the southern coast, the Gulf coast and the Pacific coast have undergone a very great development under the auspices of the Congress. But that is not, by any means, the whole story. We have our Great Lakes system; and on the threshold we are met with the fact that, up to date, we have expended $260,000,000 in the development of harbors and channels in the Great Lakes. But everyone who realizes the volume of traffic in that section, the convenience of water transportation, and the effect upon freight rates from as far west as Minnesota and Wisconsin to the Atlantic, can have no question that that quarter of a billion dollars has been wisely invested and paid back over and over again. I do not think the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] will say that in approving those projects over the years in the Great Lakes system, the engineers have not been wise and accurate in their statement that the projects were economically justified.

But that is by no means all, Mr. President. We have, in our land, two very great rivers. So far as I know, only one other river on earth compares with the Mississippi, and I question whether any water system in any land compares with the Mississippi and its tributaries. It accounts practically for the heart of the country we call the United States, and affords an amazing water transportation.

Congress has provided water transportation from as far north as the upper reaches of Minnesota all the way to the Gulf of Mexico, a distance of 2,000 miles. But that is not all. There is provision for water transportation in the Red River, a tributary; there is provision for it in the Missouri River, a great tributary, above Alton. There is provision in the Ohio River all the way up into Pennsylvania. I have before me data showing the traffic in this American system. While it does not compare with the railroad traffic, it is immense, and in its class it stands alone.

The railroads have a great number of lines, and serve a great multitude of small towns. Naturally, they have much of the tonnage. I am glad they have it. I am no enemy of the railroads. I want to upbuild them for the country's sake. I am perfectly willing to have the stockholders receive fair dividends. I should like to see all investment in America on a basis which would justify the American people in saving their money and investing it in stocks and bonds. I have no objection to anything of that sort. I think that is the only way out of the depression. I never did think the Government could invest money in such a way as to get us out of the depression. I shall always think—until it is too late to think at all—that the only thing to do is to encourage private enterprise and investment in order that men may save their money and put it into enterprise, thereby employing our people.

The railroads have about 66 percent of the freight tonnage in this country; trucks have about 25 percent; and the waterways the remainder.

I have not covered all the waterways. We have river after river. My own State is a perfect illustration. We have water transportation from Southport, on the Atlantic, up to Fayetteville, which is a little to the west of the capital of the State. Some may say it is useless. It reduces the cost of gasoline to consumers throughout the State. The gasoline comes from Texas by water up the Cape Fear River, and is delivered at Fayetteville, which is near the heart of the State. That is an evidence of the value of the system. In addition, we have our inland-waterway canal. It has not cost us anything compared with the cost of the Great Lakes system. The Atlantic inland waterway, from New York around by Florida and through the Gulf, cost $66,000,000. It is doing an ever-increasing business. It tends always to keep freight rates down. I think we can keep them down to some degree by regulation, but I think fair competition aids regulation.

There is another matter which is very close to my heart. The people on the little waterways and channels in my State have no other way to travel. In the bill are many little projects, some costing $5,000, and others costing $10,000 or $15,000. One Senator said to me, "What do all these creeks in the bill mean?"

Mr. President, if one looks at the map of our country, and especially at the map of my State, he will see that great numbers of people, and not a few fine communities, have no highways, no railroads, and no way to travel except by the water channels which the Government builds. In North Carolina we have Pamlico Sound, which is so broad that one may get out of sight of land in the midst of it, as I have done. It is 150 miles long. It lies between a fine group of towns and the mainland. The people on those sand banks have no roads, but a man can take his little sailboat and go down the sound in the channel, and if he keeps out of the shallows he will make his way and keep his contact with civilization. That sort of thing is going on all the time.

Mr. President, I have merely sketched this matter. It seems to me the time has come when somebody in this country should defend river and harbor legislation or navigation legislation. It is not emergency spending. It is not spending to save. It is not lending and spending. It is spending for direct annual economic returns. That sort of investment, when wisely made, will pay dividends so long as civilization lasts. I have no apologies for supporting that sort of legislation. When we support the other sort—and I have supported it—we do not do so with a view to annual returns or profits. We do so because we have to. We do so because the dictates of humanity, the ordinary sympathies of the human heart, and a fair consideration for the Government itself demand that we make such appropriations. I regret that we cannot be more generous; but when we have to deal with so many people, and with a Treasury in the condition in which ours is, we must have a care. In having a care, it would be fatal to the country to sacrifice the regular Federal activities and functions on account of any emergency. To do so would make matters worse instead of better.

So we are proposing in this legislation only a reasonably moderate annual appropriation for projects approved as economically sound, projects recommended to us by a Board of Engineers utterly divorced from politics and coordinated with a history of 122 years of successful endeavor by the Congress. We are not proposing the separation because of any prejudice. When we come to flood control there is as great a demand and necessity for this country to harness its rivers and take charge of them as there is for establishing channels through which people may carry on their commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. To begin with, in asking any question in regard to the bill, or the Senator's attitude, I should like to state that I do so as a friend of this kind of legislation. I would not for the world, if I knew it, be guilty of trying to throw a monkey wrench into the machine.

However, notwithstanding what the Senator has so eloquently said, I am unable to see how we can separate a bill providing for navigation from one providing for flood-control. If we consider a stream as a whole, and try to improve it in a scientific way from its source to its mouth, having in mind the idea of making it fit for navigation, I think we are moved by a very noble purpose. But when we come to the actual construction of the dams that are necessary on streams it seems to me that we have to take recognition of the fact that a proper dam which will make a river navigable, will, if we can utilize what nature has provided by way of reservoirs capable of holding a large amount of water, also serve other uses. I do not see how we can separate the two. It often occurs, though not always, that the same dam which will make a river navigable will also provide for controlling a large amount of floodwaters. It seems to me that in considering this kind of legislation looking to the improvement of our streams, we ought to take mind of the fact that floods in our rivers annually cause millions of dollars of damage, and if we can by the same dam provide for flood control and navigation both, it seems to me it would be economy and wisdom and a practical necessity, if we want to control floods, to build dams at the mouths of reservoirs which are provided by nature, and thus have the dams perform a double purpose instead of one. I am not convinced, notwithstanding the Senator's able argument, that in such a case we ought to separate flood control from navigation. I should like to have the Senator's idea on the point suggested.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the observations of the Senator, and, of course, they have a great deal of force, but it does not follow that a navigation project will prevent floods. There are no end of navigation projects that do not do so. And there are flood-control projects that do not aid navigation. On the Mississippi River navigation and flood control do go along together; there is no doubt about that; but in harbor improvements there is nothing of flood control; in our canals there is nothing of flood control; and in our Great Lakes there is nothing of flood control. There is a great field to itself. What we have undertaken to do there is to keep that field to itself.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BAILEY. Let me add, before yielding, that that does not preclude the consideration of flood control plus power when we come to those questions. I wanted to make this statement in order to make it clear to the Senator's mind.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to admit just what the Senator has said. There is a field of navigation that has nothing to do with flood control or power. I may say that in the section of the country west of the Missouri Valley, there is another consideration which I think is more important than flood control and navigation or power, and that is irrigation. If the same dam which will make a river navigable or contribute to flood control will also enable land to be irrigated it seems to me it is economy and wisdom to build a dam that will do all three, if, of course, Nature has provided a place where that kind of dam could be used.

I am not referring to the Great Lakes, or channels, or the other things which the Senator mentions; I can readily conceive that they constitute a field to themselves, having to do with navigation only and having no connection with the other uses of stored waters.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator and I are disagreeing largely on a matter of expediency and order rather than on principle. I could at once agree with the Senator that we could undertake to make up a bill and put everything in it at once, flood control, power, navigation, and irrigation. I may say to the Senator that such a bill would be absolutely irresistible; every Senator and every State would have a direct interest in it; but I think it is much better to let the several categories stand on their own merits rather than that the legislation be exposed to something in the nature of log-rolling in the Senate.

I will go a little further. If I had my way about legislation of this character, I would put a rule through the Senate that any bill for navigation or flood control or power calling for the expenditure of as much as $25,000,000 should be introduced separately and be passed by the Senate separately. Why? Because I want to avoid the pork-barrel idea. I should like to see every bill stand on its own bottom. We could not do that with regard to the great host of little projects; they would go on the calendar and be subject to the 5-minute rule and not receive due consideration; but we could put the little projects in an omnibus bill, and then let the big projects come in and each one stand on its own merits. That goes back to the proposition that has frequently been made here, that we should provide in these appropriation bills, and perhaps in the authorization bills, for the item veto. I have never been committed to the item veto, but the policy of separation which I am now advocating is a move in the direction not of the item veto but in the direction of preventing a great host of questionable projects from sliding through with a great host of good ones. That is without prejudice to the flood-control projects. When the flood-control bill comes to the Senate, I am going to support it, and I am going through it as I have gone through the pending bill, and our Flood Control Committee will go through it with the utmost care under the advices of the engineers. But I am committed to the view that a great country such as ours ought to see to it that no floods shall sweep over its people and its cities. That is a primary function of the Government. The government that cannot handle that is hardly worthy to be called a great government; it might be called a little one.

I may say to the Senator that if irrigation is a fair incident of such an undertaking, I am for the irrigation. I am for the redemption of every foot of available good farm land in America. What we need is more, not less. So, too, if electric power is a fair product of such an undertaking, then, I am for that.

I will go with the Senator to this extent, that the more power we have in this land available to the people at a low rate, the better for us all, because power is nothing but another word for energy, and the more energy we have the more production we have and the nearer we come in the long run to the solution of our economic difficulties.

So the very distinguished Senator from Nebraska and I are merely differing here on a matter of procedure, not of principle. I am for everything that he is for in this matter. I am for flood control; I am for the improvement of rivers and harbors; he is, too; but I am trying to develop a basis of procedure here which will accommodate us to the condition of the legislation as it comes over from two committees on the other side of the Capitol, and which, I think, will tend to provide for more thorough consideration of each bill on the floor of the Senate. That is what we need. So it is policy, I may say to the Senator, and not principle, that we are discussing here; and if we are divided, it is only on the question of the wisdom of the procedure.

Mr. President, with one further observation, I will take my seat. The bill includes certain projects in Puerto Rico and Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands which I will not undertake to describe.

I am mentioning them because those possessions of the United States do not have a spokesman on the floor of the Senate. The projects I have in mind are very important to those possessions and to their people, and they are very fortunate, in that they are commended to us by the naval authorities of the United States as being of primary importance to our national defense.

So, Mr. President, I have laid the bill before the Senate. I shall be perfectly willing to fall in with the usual amendments which come here by way of asking for surveys, and asking that navigation projects which have been approved by the engineers since the bill was written be included; but, in the interest of the ultimate fate of all such legislation—flood control and navigation—I hope this bill may be limited to navigation, and laid before the President in that condition.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to resist the passage of the bill, and to say something to the Senate about it; but I prefer to reserve my observations until certain amendments shall have been reached which will rather personify and dramatize the thought I wish to submit.

Therefore, for the time being, I am perfectly willing to have the pending amendment acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, line 15, after the name "House", to strike out "Document" and insert "Documents"; and in line 16, after the numerals "225" to insert "and 362", so as to read:

Boston Harbor, Mass.; House Documents Nos. 225 and 362, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 16 to insert:

Nantasket (Hull) Gut and Weymouth, Fore River, Mass.; House Document No. 568, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 19 to insert:

Cohasset Harbor, Mass.; House Document No. 425, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I listened with complete sympathy and approval to the eloquent tribute which my able and distinguished friend, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], paid to the waterway developments and the waterway opportunities of the United States. I think I am undoubtedly as waterway-minded as is any other Senator in the body, because I live in the midst of one of the greatest water developments in the world. I would not for a moment rise in opposition to this complete bill if it were not for the fact that I think it includes indefensible items, on the one hand, and because, on the other hand, I think it is basically indefensible, at a time when the Treasury is worse than bankrupt, for us to talk about new river and harbor development projects upon any such exaggerated scale as the pending bill represents.

Let us look at the history of the bill from a few angles to which my able friend did not refer. In the first instance, when the bill passed the House, in May 1939, it carried projects totaling only $83,000,000 for all navigation, power, and flood control. When it came to the Senate and was referred to the Senate Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Commerce loaded it down with everything in sight, and ran up an authorization bill approximating $400,000,000. It multiplied the House bill by about 5.

The bill came to the Senate Calendar and it stayed there. It was too much even for its own authors to swallow. It was never brought up. There was never any effort to bring it up. The bill languished. There were none to do it reverence. It was indefensible.

Then came the recess of the Congress. The bill was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, because everyone knew that even the wildest spender could not get a sufficiently tight clothespin on his nose to enable him to go past this outrage as it was originally proposed to be perpetrated. So the bill went back to the Committee on Commerce.

Then the Committee on Commerce, under the guidance of the very able Senator from North Carolina, hit upon a very clever scheme. They decided to divide the bill, like all Gaul, into three parts. They decided to put navigation over by itself, flood control over by itself, and power projects over by themselves, in this fashion making the total reported to the Senate in each one of the three bills less staggering, less challenging in the utter impact of its size, than if the original plan had been pursued, and all had again been bunched together. But the pending bill, representing navigation, is just as big in respect to the navigation section of the bill as it was originally reported by the Senate Committee on Commerce as it was last summer.

The effort was made by this separation to sugar-coat a very bitter pill. The effort was made to make the burden less apparent, and therefore the pill more palatable. But here it is, with $231,000,000 of navigation authorizations, at a time, I repeat, when the Congress is supposed to be economy-minded, at least occasionally economy-minded, and when everyone who dares face facts realizes that unless we watch our step we shall run squarely into national bankruptcy. That is not my phrase; it is the phrase of the President of the United States, and he prophesied it 7 years ago, since which time our speed in the direction of bankruptcy has been nothing less than pell-mell.

Mr. President, in my judgment, under the existing circumstances Congress simply cannot afford to pass a navigation authorization bill carrying projects totaling $231,000,000. When the bill was before the Committee on Commerce, the committee authorized the chairman and the senior Members on each side of the aisle to consult the President of the United States to see what his attitude would be respecting an authorization of this magnitude at this particular time. It was deemed advisable to determine whether a bill of this size and challenge really stood any show of getting by the White House, even if it got by the Congress. The able chairman of the committee reported back to us that the President did not want any authorization bill at all at this session, and that probably an authorization bill of the nature of that which here lies upon the Senate bar would meet with a Presidential veto.

Mr. President, that may be of no particular moment to us in the exercise of our legislative function. Certainly I am not one to plead for the Presidential point of view. I am referring to this phase of the matter merely because of the practical fact that there are river and harbor projects which should proceed, and every one of them is going to be sacrificed if they are included in an omnibus of this size. In the lush twenties we rarely averaged an annual rivers and harbors authorization bill carrying in excess of $50,000,000. Yet in the bankrupt forties it is proposed that we swallow in one gulp an authorization of $231,000,000. So far as I am concerned, I simply decline to do it—reluctantly, because the area of the country from which I come is represented in the bill, represented by what I believe to be worthy projects; but I know the bill will never survive in its present form, and I have the complete conviction that it should not survive.

Mr. President, I think that until we have found a way to pay for existing Federal projects we should cease authorizing any new Federal projects. Therefore, from my point of view, the only river and harbor authorizations which would be justified under existing circumstances would be authorizations confined to existing projects and their essential expansion and development.

I wish to personify my feeling about the bill by confining my remarks to the pending amendment, because, from my point of view, the waterway connecting the Tombigbee and Tennessee Rivers, in accordance with the recommendation of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, in the report submitted in House Document No. 269, Seventy-sixth Congress, emphasizes the reason why the pending bill is not entitled to be passed at the present time. So I ask the Senate to look very briefly through my eyes at the Tombigbee project as I view it.

The cost is set down in the bill at $66,000,000. It is the biggest single item in the bill. The real cost, including interest during construction, will be $75,000,000. Therefore, in reality it is a $75,000,000 project, and I shall refer to it as such, although the trifling difference of $9,000,000, I fully realize, is really pocket change in this prodigal day.

The project calls for a perpetual annual upkeep charge of $500,000. I shall undertake to show that a realistic view of its economic justification, or lack of it, crowds zero. On the basis of the engineers' own report approving it, I shall undertake to show that it is condemned even by its own alleged credentials.

By the way, the present so-called favorable report of the Board of Engineers was preceded by four other reports, in 1913, 1923, 1932, and 1935, and all the other four reports were unfavorable. Now suddenly we get a favorable report. But the Chief of Engineers does not actually and affirmatively recommend the project. The T. V. A., which is incidentally involved, does not recommend it. The National Resources Board, which has passed upon it, does not recommend it. Simple arithmetic rejects it. Only in the prodigal spirit of these times is it proposed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. REED. I may suggest to the Senator from Michigan that the T. V. A. reported that this project, if approved and completed, would lessen the value of power from the Gilbertsville Dam $100,000 a year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am coming to that in due course.

The Tombigbee project about which we are talking is a waterway substantially paralleling the Mississippi River. It involves 41 miles of canal, 18 locks, 8 dams, 200 miles of river drainage and channel from Pickwick Landing, Tenn., to Demopolis, Ala., 260 miles long, I repeat, substantially paralleling the Mississippi River, and costing $75,000,000.

First, what does the Chief of Engineers himself say about this project? The able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has emphasized our necessary reliance upon the reports of the Chief of Engineers. What does the Chief say about Tombigbee? Well, the very best he does, or even attempts to do, is to damn it with faint praise. He makes no affirmative recommendation. He simply rides along with his Board. He specifically questions one-third of the economic justification claimed by his own Board. He specifically says that the whole case hangs on "intangibles" and "indirect benefits." Those are his words, not mine. The Chief of Engineers, who is supposed to be the important witness in behalf of this undertaking, says some of the factors to which I have referred—

> Are difficult to evaluate and appear to be questions falling within the realm of statesmanship to which the Congress can best assign the proper values.

In other words, the Chief of Engineers frankly leaves the decision to Congress. It is a very strange report. I doubt if we have ever before had the like of it. It is a weak and feeble reversal of the four previous adverse reports. As a matter of fact, it is no reversal at all. The Chief of Engineers frankly admits that the navigation benefits assigned to this project by his own Board are insufficient to justify the $75,000,000 expenditure.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not familiar with the particular project on the Tombigbee, but the Senator from Michigan suggested some time ago the inadvisability of adopting these authorizations at this time. Is it not true that all an authorization does is to make the Senate capable of adopting an appropriation measure or not adopting an appropriation measure later on in the progress of these works?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. It does not bind the Government?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Many of these projects, I assume, will continue for a period of 8 or 10 years?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. That would be true in the case of the St. Lawrence project proposed to be undertaken under a treaty; what was the date of it?

Mr. KING. Its cost would have reached four or five hundred million dollars.

Mr. VANDENBERG. We did not make an appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I mean there was an authorization and then a proposal for undertaking the work, which would progress and extend from year to year and involve an aggregate of four or five hundred million dollars.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Probably.

Mr. CONNALLY. How did the Senator vote with respect to that matter?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator voted in favor of ratifying the treaty and is in favor of all waterway projects which are economically justifiable. He is almost willing to say that he would rest his case on the judgment of the Senator from Texas himself if the Senator will listen to what the Senator from Michigan has to say regarding economic justification in connection with this particular undertaking.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I certainly expect to listen to him. I confess that I know very little about this particular project, but I do know something about some of the other projects.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am talking about this one at the moment.

Mr. CONNALLY. If I were to take advice with respect to an engineering project, I think I would give a little more weight to the opinion of an engineer than I would to that given by a blacksmith or a watchmaker——

Mr. NORRIS. Or a Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; or a Senator, as the Senator from Nebraska suggests.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sure the Senator would want to pay far more attention to the report of the Chief of Engineers than to any of the other factors.

Mr. CONNALLY. I say that with all respect to the Senator from Michigan. I realize that the Senator from Michigan is a student and has a good mind, and he frequently knows what he is talking about. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; particularly at this moment. I suggest to the Senator from Texas that I have just completed reading the report of the Chief of Engineers, and he himself throws a serious doubt upon the dependability of the ultimate calculations presented by his own Board of Engineers.

So far as the question of easily and complacently slipping an authorization into a legislative measure is concerned, on the theory that it does not amount to anything, that we can easily retrace our steps, and prevent Congress from going over the precipice in the last minute by voting against an appropriation, that theory does not appeal to me at all, because in the 12 or 13 years I have been here I have not seen an authorization which did not settle the whole business, and did not involve the entire expenditure.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true that at this very session of Congress we have seen a very admirable illustration of the binding effect of authorizations? When the bill making appropriations for the independent offices came into the House the House cut out an item—I believe it was $66,000,000, though I am not certain about the sum—for the construction of ships under the Maritime Commission, because the Congress felt that at this time, when economy was necessary, it was not desirable to pursue the policy of constructing ships. When the bill came over to the Senate the item for the construction of ships, running into many millions, had to be restored, because the Senator in charge of the bill, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] appeared on the floor of the Senate and said it was necessary to make the appropriation because, under authority heretofore granted, contracts had been entered into, the ships were actually under contract, the solemn obligations of the Government were at stake, and, therefore, it was necessary to make the appropriation.

While I was very much opposed to the policy of constructing the ships, yet feeling that a question of national good faith was at stake, I voted very reluctantly for that appropriation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his observation. He makes the case very plain.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me give another illustration. During the week I opposed an appropriation for some additional locks on the Panama Canal. The majority leader told me that Senators had very little right to oppose the measure, because the project had been authorized.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly. The authorization is always taken as a key to the Treasury, and it does not take long to fit the key into the lock after the authorization is made.

Mr. President, I have referred to the report of the Chief of Engineers, and I have asserted that this is a very strange report from the Chief of Engineers, because it lacks any affirmative recommendation, and seriously questions the report of the Board itself in at least two particulars, to which I shall advert.

This brings us to the report of the Board of Engineers itself, mind you, reversing four successive preceding reports of the same Board. I said to the able Senator from North Carolina earlier in the day, in the course of the debate, that I would undertake to prove in at least this instance that the mere announcement by the Board of Engineers that a project was economically justified did not prove that it was economically justified, and that I would undertake to make that plain, which I am about to do in this instance.

Fortunately for a bankrupt Treasury, Mr. President, the report of the Board of Engineers for rivers and harbors on this project is susceptible of mathematical proof that ought to reach a conclusion the exact opposite of what it purports to recommend. Since $75,000,000 is still a large amount, I hope the Senate will follow me through this very simple analysis.

The Senate is familiar with the way the Board of Engineers for rivers and harbors measures the economic justification of a river and harbor project. It estimates what it considers to be the annual cost factor, which is not merely the cost of maintenance and operation, but the cost of amortization, capital investment, and so forth, allocated over the years. It sets up the figure of annual cost upon the one hand, and then estimates economic justification upon the other. The economic justification figure must exceed the annual cost figure in a substantial degree in order to warrant approval. That is the formula or rule, and that is the way it works.

What are these two figures in connection with the Tombigbee project? The annual cost figure is $3,500,000. The annual economic justification figure is $4,100,000. In other words, they staggered over the line of actual cost of $3,500,000 by a margin of only $600,000. The ratio between annual cost and annual benefits was a thin ratio of 1.16 to 1.

If all the justification thus pretended by the Board of Engineers were realized, still the project itself would not be justified on a benefit ratio of only 1.16 to 1, because that ratio possesses far less of an element of economic safety in justification than is usually permitted. But not even half the economic justification presented by the Board of Engineers for rivers and harbors in an attempt to build up this figure can be sustained; and I undertake to prove that assertion right now.

Let us see how the $4,100,000 of economic benefit is conveniently built up in connection with the report. Remember this is a navigation project. First, $600,000 is entered on the line in behalf of our old friend the national defense. I think this is the first time in the history of river and harbor projects that national defense has been claimed as an item of economic justification. I have been able to find no precedent for it; and the engineer officer who was before our committee could give me no precedent. It is an utterly novel method of padding economic justification. It is purely hypothetical at best. It has absolutely no place in the type of calculation which the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors are in the habit of making when they measure the economic justification of river and harbor projects. So there is $600,000 of padding to start with.

Then they put in $100,000 for "recreational value." Mr. President, I have no doubt that in the two-hundred-and-ninety-odd miles of canal somewhere, somehow, at some time some recreational value may be involved; but recreational value is not an economic benefit in respect to navigation under the practice of the rivers and harbors enginers in figuring economic justification.

They then lug in another extraneous item—$275,000 for "enhancement of land values in tributary areas." That is a new idea in respect to economic justification for river and harbor projects. I have no doubt that the expenditure of $75,000,000, filtered down through the two States, would result in an enhancement of land values in tributary areas, and the enhancement of many other tributary values of one sort and another; but what has that to do with an assessment of navigation advantages? When before did the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors ever inject this sort of an item into its calculations in arriving at a total to justify a river and harbor project?

These three items total $975,000. They have absolutely no relation to transportation. Take the $975,000 away from the $4,100,000 of claimed annual benefits, and we are left with $3,125,000 of alleged annual benefits, or $375,000 under the deadline of economic justification fixed by the engineers themselves. We are already under the deadline by the simple process of eliminating factors which have no relationship to transportation, and which ordinarily are never used by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in figuring economic justification. If we eliminate those factors, we cease to have justification on the basis of the engineers' own report.

But, Mr. President, we have only started to debunk this project. We now come to transportation. In figuring transportation benefits, $1,000,000 of benefits are assessed to traffic which is to be diverted from the Mississippi River. In other words, $1,000,000 worth of traffic which is now on the Mississippi is to be transferred to the Tombigbee. That $1,000,000 worth of traffic has been counted once to justify a Mississippi development. It is now to be transferred to the Tombigbee, and again counted to justify a Tombigbee project. In other words, we are building one waterway to compete with another, and we are certanly doing it at a time when we can ill afford any extravagance of this or any other nature. Even the Chief of Engineers, Mr. President, the witness whom my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is so anxious to follow, lifts a cynical eyebrow at this point.

I read from the report of Major General Schley on this project, the thing upon which reliance must be had in asking for the project at all. This is the Chief of Engineers speaking:

> The estimate of saving of $1,000,000 to upbound traffic on the Mississippi River results from a thorough study, and I do not doubt that such a saving would result—

But listen to this from the Chief of Engineers:

> but I doubt the wisdom of dependence upon diversion of any considerable part of the Mississippi River traffic to justify this new project, even though the credit is confined to the additional saving in transportation costs.

"I doubt the wisdom" of this $1,000,000 item, says the Chief of Engineers himself. Yet, Mr. President, when we take that $1,000,000 out of the economic justification we have left, we are now down to $2,125,000 economic justification against an annual cost of $3,125,000; and we have only started.

Let us see what happens next. Let us look at the conjured benefits by way of lowered transportation costs. Fifty-two percent of the alleged savings in transportation costs is allocated to savings in the cost of transportation of gasoline.

Mr. President, even prior to the filing of this report by the Chief of Engineers a year ago, the railroads in this area had petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission for the privilege of reducing their rates on transportation of gasoline. I will not say that they may not have been inspired to do so by the prospective contemplation of water competition. Their own statement is, very frankly, that they were inspired to do so by the existing water competition on the Mississippi River. At any rate, the railroads asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit them to reduce their freight rates to a point which would fully equalize all the additional saving which is figured in the economic justification of this project.

What happened? The Commission entered an order permitting a heavy reduction in railroad rates on these particular commodities, the reduced rates to become effective May 13, 1940. This is what happened as a result:

> The Army engineers, using some basis which is not clearly disclosed in their report, estimated that the Tombigbee waterway would result in a saving of $2.14 per ton on petroleum products moving between the New Orleans-Baton Rouge district and the Tennessee River points.

Remember that figure. They estimated a saving of $2.14 a ton as a result of the Tombigbee project. Now listen:

> The average reductions in the rail rates which have been authorized by the Commission and which will take effect May 13, will amount to $3.06 per ton.

In other words, all the advantage which was allocated to a saving in gasoline transportation, another million dollars, is already entirely offset and more by savings in rail transportation rates on the same commodities into the same areas.

Mr. President, that does not leave very much economic justification. The $4,100,000 has gradually dissipated itself until there is only $1,000,000 left. I do not know what would happen if we undertook to put a microscope upon the final million; I spare myself that painful operation; I am willing to let the million stand; but how can an economic justification of $1,000,000 a year warrant an authorization for a $75,000,000 project which requires an economic benefit of three and a half million dollars a year in order to pass muster under the rule and the report of the Board of Engineers themselves?

Now, let us turn to another authority. Let us turn to the National Resources Committee. The National Resources Committee on April 7, 1939, had something to say about this subject. Secretary of the Interior Ickes, the chairman of the board, is reporting to the Secretary of War upon this project. He tells the Secretary of War about the comments of the water resources committee of the National Resources Committee. I read from the official report:

The report of the Chief of Engineers addressed to the chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, February 27, 1939, concerning the proposed waterway connecting the Tombigbee and Tennessee Rivers, does not specifically recommend the construction of the waterway.

That is what I said, and here it is verified and proved by an official verdict of an important arm of the Government. Continuing the quotation:

It confirms the estimate by the special board—

And so forth. Now listen:

In the opinion of the water resources committee, the benefits ascribed to national defense, land value, and recreation are speculative and should be given careful scrutiny as to the effect that their acceptance may have upon the formation of national policy.

The National Resources Committee does not swallow this report of the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers; it does not follow these fantastic factors that are padded into the calculations to justify the enterprise; not at all; the National Resources Committee says, "You had better look this thing over again."

Then the National Resources Committee makes a very important comment dealing with the fact that the chief claimed economic benefit was to be in a saving in the transportation of gasoline, as the Senate will remember. Now listen to the National Resources Committee:

A further basic issue of policy is raised by the relation of the proposed water-transportation facilities in this project to the most effective coordinated system of water, railway, highway, and pipeline facilities to serve the transportation needs of the region.

The report of the special board states in paragraph 35 that "the principal railroads serving the Southeastern States furnish adequate facilities either through or into the territory adjacent to the proposed waterway." A major economic justification claimed for the project is its prospective effect on rail rates. The report indicates that 25 percent of the estimated tonnage and 52 percent of the estimated savings are applicable to petroleum products moving chiefly from the Gulf to Tennessee River points. In view of this large percentage of saving attributable to petroleum products—

Now listen: this is the important part—

In view of this large percentage of saving attributable to petroleum products the possible transportation of these commodities by pipe line in the future should be given consideration.

In other words, even though this particular element of claimed economic benefit had not already gone out the window as the result of the order of the I. C. C. in respect to competing rail rates, it would be an utterly unreliable crutch, in view of the fact that the accepted modern technique in the transportation of gasoline is by pipe line.

Then the National Resources Committee concludes as follows:

These and similar problems should be considered more fully—

if a sound conclusion is to be reached concerning the justification for the project in relation to transportation needs and facilities of all types in the region.

It is recommended that in addition to the current review by the Tennessee Valley Authority these transportation problems be investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission with a view to advising the President and the Congress on them.

Mr. President, there is the indictment of the National Resources Committee, over the signature of Secretary Ickes, addressed to the Secretary of War.

Now, let us turn to another authority—the Tennessee Valley Authority. I certainly am not entitled to be considered a spokesman for the T. V. A.; I freely concede that; but the T. V. A. happens to appear in this record, and when I survey a record I like to survey all the record. So the T. V. A., on April 4, 1939, withholding approval of this project, gave this warning:

The diversion of water from the Tennessee River will cause a reduction in the power which can be generated at Pickwick and Gilbertsville Dams. The estimates given in the report indicate a maximum diversion of 400 cubic feet per second from Pickwick Reservoir. This would have a value for power generation of about $100,000 annually.

So, Mr. President, if that estimate be correct, we have a further charge against this project—a charge of diversion of value from another Federal undertaking which we find in competition not only with transportation on the Mississippi but in competition with the use of water in this particular sector of the T. V. A. development.

This was back in April 1939. I wanted to be sure that there was no supplemental information which might have changed the picture, so I telegraphed the T. V. A. yesterday for a final answer. From Gordon E. Clapp, its general manager, I received the following telegram this morning:

KNOXVILLE, TENN., April 23, 1940.

Senator A. H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Retel April 22: The Authority has had no occasion to restudy the Tombigbee project. Our estimate of power loss account diversion of water from Tennessee River to supply lockage and leakage for Tombigbee project therefore remains as stated in letter to Secretary of War dated April 4, 1939.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY,

And, as stated in that letter, it is a diversion of water to a power value of $100,000 a year.

Mr. President, I frankly confess that in presenting this to me, rather amazing case up to this point, I have ignored the greatest of all the arguments that were presented to the Commerce Committee in behalf of this enterprise. In complete fairness, I do not want to overlook it. It may be called the iodine argument. Among the witnesses appearing before the Commerce Committee in behalf of this undertaking was one of my very dear friends in the House of Representatives, the very distinguished Representative from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who honors me with his presence at the moment. I read from Representative RANKIN's testimony on page 74:

Congressman RANKIN. I would say this, Senator—I am sorry that the Senator from Michigan isn't here—I am going to say to you that one of the greatest troubles in this country today, and especially along the Great Lakes, along this area here [indicating] is that a lot of the people have thyroid trouble because there is no iodine in the soil. The freight rates are so high that you can't ship Florida fruit there, and that is the only way I know of to prevent it.

* * * * * * *

Senator BAILEY. How do you relate that to the Tombigbee River project?

Congressman RANKIN. I was merely pointing that we could ship these fruits north, even if they had to give a special reduced rate to get them there.

In other words, Representative RANKIN was appealing to me, I am sorry to say, in my absence, that if I would only support the Tombigbee project we would not have any more thyroid trouble in the region around the Great Lakes.

He was interrupted at that point by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], who said, "Well"—and then there is a blank in the printed record, but I happen to have a newspaper report of what actually occurred, and the Senator from North Carolina said:

Well, you know, John, you don't give a damn how many of those Yankee Republicans die.

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, whether it is the iodine element or any other, I fail to find a scintilla of justification for the Senate, upon its responsibility to the taxpayers of the United States, to inject into this bill a $75,000,000 project authorization for which there is not, and cannot be, an economic justification which warrants it. Even if we had a flush Treasury, this project would not be justified on its own showing. With a bankrupt Treasury, plus a surplus of transportation, and bankrupt railroads everywhere, there is no possible color of justification.

Therefore I have risen to speak against the amendment. I hope it will be defeated. I submit it as a typical example of the reason why this bill, as a whole, should not pass the Senate at this precaricus time.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I had expected to discuss in some detail the particular amendment which has been under discussion by the Senator from Michigan. Because he has covered the subject so thoroughly and ably, I shall not do much more than associate myself with his remarks.

I do, however, wish to make at least one observation, hoping that it may make some impression upon the Members of the Senate, and particularly by those whose States might be favorably affected by projects in this bill.

I was at least partially responsible for the recommittal of the former bill because it was on my motion that the very large river and harbor bill to which the Senator from Michigan referred was recommitted to the Commerce Committee, and I was among the four Members who voted against a favorable report of the bill now before the Senate. Because there are in the pending bill several projects of considerable importance within my own State, I should like to say that I had been hopeful that we could pass a river and harbor bill this year, so I also made a motion in the committee to report the House bill in the form in which it had come to the Senate. If my memory correctly serves me, the bill, as it came from the House, carried in the neighborhood of $80,000,000. So, Mr. President, because I am concerned with economy—although it is difficult to make that argument when one votes for large appropriations for national defense and insists upon sufficient appropriations for the relief of those in need—I say that I think we might properly economize in a bill of this sort.

I agree with the Senator from Michigan that there are in this bill some projects which ought to advance. Some of them are of great importance and are partially completed. So when I vote against this bill, as I shall if this particular project remains in it, I find myself in the position of voting against at least half a dozen authorized, approved, and, in my opinion, worth-while and needed projects in my State. I also know—and I hope he will not be offended as I refer to it here—that at least one other member of my party, the only other member of my party who voted against the bill in committee, probably finds himself in a position comparable to mine, and will, if he votes against the bill—as I think he will—be voting against a project almost in his own front yard, with which he is very greatly concerned.

There has been, for a long time, a way around such a difficulty as that in which we find ourselves this afternoon. Early in January, on the second day of this session, as a result of experiences I had had in the Commerce Committee with such proposals as that which we are now discussing, I submitted a resolution which would have made it impossible for the Tombigbee project, and other like projects, to be in a river and harbor bill this afternoon. For the RECORD, and as a reminder to Senators, I am going to read that resolution, which was submitted on January 4:

Resolved, That hereafter the Committee on Commerce shall not report any bill relating to works of improvement of rivers, harbors, and other waterways, or relating to flood-control projects, containing any amendment which authorizes the prosecution of any such work or project the total cost of which will exceed $5,000,000; and if a bill is reported to the Senate containing any such amendment, a point of order may be made against the bill, and if the point of order is sustained, the bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. President, let me say again that the purpose of that resolution was to avoid a situation such as this; to protect the smaller and very necessary projects; not to deny a consideration of the larger projects but to insist that they stand upon their own feet and that they be considered alone, and in order that no such project as Tombigbee should be permitted to smother smaller and worth-while and deserving projects.

This resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Rules, out of courtesy to the Committee on Commerce, referred the resolution there for an opinion, and it was defeated, as I remember, by a tie vote.

I am not going to detain the Senate longer. I am very hopeful that this particular amendment may be defeated, and that I may have a chance and other Senators opposing this amendment may have a chance to vote for a river and harbor bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise to support the position taken by the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in opposition to the fantastic project covered by the pending amendment. Except for the fact, as stated by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, that the elements of flood control and power development had been taken out, leaving the bill to deal alone with navigation, which is transportation, I would have had more hesitation in speaking upon the subject. I think I know a little about transportation, particularly economic transportation.

It has been stated here that the Army engineers' report set out that 52 percent of the savings in transportation costs would be effected on petroleum products. I wish to read from the testimony of the traffic manager of the Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky, which company does business in the particular section affected, testimony under oath before the Interstate Commerce Commission on February 20, 1939, as to how the so-called saving is disposed of. I shall read only a few paragraphs, in order to save the time of the Senate, and then I shall ask permission to insert that part of the testimony dealing with this question.

Mr. Arthur M. Stephens, general traffic manager of the Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky, appearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission on February 20, 1939, and dealing with this very question, stated:

As to our inland waterways terminals, we usually amortize them within 2 or 3 years. In other words, the money we make on our water terminals we put in our pocket. We don't pass it on to the consumer. No other oil company does, that I know of.

Further on Mr. Stephens said:

We have found that none of the other companies are passing any of this money on to the consuming public.

Finally he was asked this question:

What would you say the probability was in the event that rail rates were reduced? Would that be passed on to the public?

This was the reply of Mr. Stephens, who is an expert traffic man, speaking for one of the great oil companies of the country; and I am especially glad that my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is present, because he has emphasized this question over and over again:

Our market is determined on the rail rates. That is the only basis we use.

And finally:

The public is not getting any benefit of those rates.

Referring to the water rates—

I don't think there is one company that does it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a more complete statement of what Mr. Stephens testified under oath be included in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Interstate Commerce Commission, Fourth Section Application 17413. Gasoline and kerosene to Alabama, rate-structure investigation. Petroleum and petroleum products. Hotel Peabody, Memphis, Tenn., February 20, 1939]

As to our inland waterways terminals, we usually amortize them within 2 or 3 years. In other words, the money (247) we make on our water terminals we put in our pocket. We don't pass it on to the consumer. No other oil company does, that I know of, except where there is price competition, and naturally, in that condition, we have a depreciation set up that may last for 10 years, but in the meantime we have fully amortized the investment shown in our accounting procedure, and the economy that we realize is credited to the P. & L. account for margin.

Page 264:

Q. (By Mr. Beck). Mr. Stephens, with regard to the possibility of imposition of tolls on these rivers, has that received full consideration of your company in dealing with these matters? That is, do you view things like that for any particular time in the future?

A. Oh, yes. We exercise our judgment and foresight in the consideration of all these matters. We have found (265) that none of the other companies are passing any of this money on to the consuming public.

Now, as one instance in mind. I have before me at the present time a statement of the market price delivered to points in northern Georgia, to which you move gas out of Gunersville, for instance, at Dalton, when you first began operation, the market price at Dalton was 18 cents, that is the posted market on May 8, 1938. In December 1938 it was 17.5, reflecting a reduction in the refined market at Shreveport, and the Gulf coast, and it represents a one-half-cent reduction entirely in the tank price, so far as dollars are concerned. In other words, Mr. Beck, we have not seen any passage of this savings to the consuming public. We have examined the markets at Dalton, Fort Payne, Cedar Bluff, etc., and we have not found that any of that has been passed on to the consumer.

Q. And there are other cases, though, where you could find just the opposite conditions?

A. No. I have not. I have tried to, but I cannot.

Q. It may be that your company is not operating in that territory?

A. We are observing the posted price that your company or some of others are making. We don't know anything about it, but the posted price remains.

Q. I can agree with you that the transportation charge does not necessarily determine the price, and I don't see that it is going to be persuasive of anything in this case.

A. Well, I hope not.

Mr. BECK. That is all.

Q. (By Mr. Hausman). Mr. Stephens, your comment as to the barge operations of the Gulf Co., when you pointed out that the savings was not passed on to the public, would you say—what would you say the probability was in the event that rail rates were reduced? Would that be passed on to the public?

A. Well, our market is determined on the rail rates. That is the only basis we use.

Q. And that will be passed on to the public?

A. Yes, it will.

Mr. BRENT. From 47 cents to 21 cents?

The WITNESS. Of course, the general direction or the price of gallonage would be probably to 15 cents from 18 cents, but we are meeting a lot of competition from waterway operators, and we may be forced to go to water terminals ourselves, against certain competition that may develop later on. I will state in that connection that I think the records will show this for the Kentucky company.

Q. Was any modification of the price made at Paducah and Louisville when you started barging from Baton Rouge?

A. No; and I am going to tell you that we put the money in our pocket like everybody else did.

I might state, Mr. Hausman, we built a terminal at Vicksburg, Miss., that cost us about $200,000, and the differences between the Baton Rouge rates to all of the stations supplied out of Vicksburg, and the economy has been $500,000. Today, that terminal is still carried on our books as capital investment, although it has been amortized 2 years ago. It is carried on our books and depreciated 10 percent a year, and we put the money in our pocket. We get this gallonage up to Louisville, Ky., and it is distributed from there under the basis of water rates to Kentucky, except where we have to make them to meet some other water competition. The public is not getting the benefit of those rates. I don't think that there is one company that does it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have no doubt that what the representative of the Standard Oil Co. said was true. He was speaking of cargo and private carriers owned by the large corporations. I think it can be shown that refers also to coal on the Great Lakes hauled by cargo and contract carriers, and this practice is aggravated by the Coal Commission Act.

Mr. REED. And it applies to steel, if I may interrupt the distinguished Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And also to steel. I believe, however, that the Senator from Michigan showed that because there was threat of water competition the railroads had cut the rate on gasoline, and that, of course, would reduce the price to the public. On the other hand, this is the situation as to water carriers: Only 4 percent has so far been carried by common carrier, and 96 percent is carried and controlled by private and contract carriers, by the large monopolistic corporations, who, of course, take advantage of that.

The tragedy is that under the Wheeler-Lea bill we are to regulate only common carriers by water for the benefit of the railroads. We are not going to touch, under that bill, the great monopolistic cargo and contract carriers, which carry 96 percent of the traffic, and which do not extend the benefits to the public. The only way the public can get benefits of water transportation is by the encouragement of common carriage, or we will have to regulate and fix the rate of the cargo and contract carriers, in order to give the public the benefit of the money expended upon these waterways.

If we are going to regulate only for the benefit of the railroads, the 4-percent carriage by common carriers, the chances are it will mean that the little common-carriage companies will have to sell their barges and other equipment to the private, monopolistic corporations, and then there will be no benefit to the public from water transportation. I submit that to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, last year when the Senator from Minnesota was discussing the question of fixing a delivered price, and considering the element of whether the rail rate or the water rate entered into the delivered price, both the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and I told him we thought the proper place to raise that question was before the Federal Trade Commission, and that if he desired to introduce a bill to that effect, he would have the support of both of us. I think the Senator's figures as to the percentage are a little bit out of line; but that, after all, is not very important.

I am sorry that the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the chairman of the Commerce Committee, is not in the Senate Chamber at the moment. Whenever an Army engineer, individually or by committee, makes a report as to economic benefits, he must, with fair accuracy, estimate the tonnage that will be handled on the proposed project. I have before me, Mr. President, a statement which was made in a proceeding now pending before the Bituminous Coal Division of the Interior Department. I do not see present my good friend, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], but it is better known as the Guffey Coal Commission. This engineer's name is Haywood R. Faison. He is principal engineer with the War Department, and chief of the section of special studies for the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. He was called as a witness by the consumers counsel. Mr. Faison was asked this question:

You are quite familiar with a number of projects that have been completed. Can you tell whether any of them, to your knowledge, have ever carried the tonnage which was named as prospective when the project was undertaken.

And this engineer—and this is the most recent statement I have been able to get from an authoritative source—this engineer said:

Very few, if any. I have two in mind. Right now the Intercoastal west of New Orleans carries more than was estimated, considerably, and the Monongahela carries more than was estimated. Those are the only two I have in mind now that have ever even approached very closely the estimated tonnage.

I wish the Senator from North Carolina were present. I like to have confidence in the Army engineers. I used to have confidence in their judgment, and in their reports, but I have seen so many things of this kind, based upon reports of Army engineers, which, on their face, to any understanding and earnest man could not possibly be correct, that I regret to say I have lost my confidence in reports of the Army engineers upon projects of this kind, and I regret even more to say that I have lost confidence in General Schley, because he approves them, when his own information and his own records should tell him better.

Mr. President, I shall give a few illustrations, and only a few, because I do not want to detain the Senate, of a comparison between the Army engineers' tonnage estimates and the tonnage actually developed.

The first illustration I shall give is the Tennessee River, and that is also involved in the present case. The source is House Document No. 320, Seventy-first Congress, second session—1930—that is 10 years ago. On pages 496 and 497 is a prediction made by the district engineer that 7,682,000 tons of commerce would use the river when improved, and that by the time the improvement was completed at the estimated date of 1940, which is this year, the traffic would be double that figure. That would make over 15,000,000 tons. This part of the river covers the stretch from Knoxville, Tenn., to Paducah, Ky.

As of June 30, 1939, six dams were completed, and three were under construction, leaving one additional dam to be constructed. The engineers have not given us any estimate of how nearly completed the project is, but it is pretty nearly complete, except for one dam. The traffic on this river, from Knoxville to Paducah, for the calendar year 1938, was 1,063,814 tons. That is one-seventh of the original estimate, and one-fifteenth of what in 1930 the Army engineers estimated would be handled on that river by this year.

I shall give a further illustration. The source of this is House Document No. 238, Seventy-third Congress, second session, 1933. This relates to the Missouri River, which washes the shores and forms one of the boundaries of my own State. On page 211 of that report is a statement that in 1928 the potential water tonnage on this stretch of the Missouri was estimated at 3,729,437, and that in 1929 the engineers made a survey showing that if a 9-foot instead of a 6-foot channel was provided, the potential tonnage would be 5,389,975.

As of June 30, 1939, a little less than a year ago, the project of the 6-foot channel was 89 percent completed, and barges have been operating for some years. The last figures available are those for the calendar year 1938. I would use the figures for 1939 if I had them, but it is always about 10 months after the close of the year before the Army engineers' reports are available. The tonnage for the calendar year 1938 was 497,901. That is less than 25 percent of the tonnage estimated by the Army engineers, upon which this body made an authorization and an appropriation.

We can take the Allegheny River as another illustration. The source is House Document 356, Seventy-first Congress, second session. It was estimated by the United States Army engineers that from Pittsburgh to East Brady, Pa., on the Allegheny River, there would be carried 5,980,000 tons. As of June 30, 1939, that project was 98 percent complete. The tonnage for the calendar year 1938 was 2,353,782. That is about 40 percent of what the engineers had estimated back in 1930 as a basis for authorization and for subsequent appropriation.

I agree with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], from my short experience in the Senate, that when an authorization is made Congress has started on the way to making an appropriation, and then we are urged to make the appropriation because the authorization has been made.

I can cite another illustration on the upper Mississippi River. The source is House Document 290, Seventy-first Congress, second session, 1930. The special engineering board predicted that from Minneapolis to the mouth of the Missouri River—that is what is known as the upper Mississippi—there would be traffic of 9,000,000 tons. As of June 30, 1939, the project was 84 percent complete. The tonnage for the calendar year was 2,598,988. That is about one-third of what the Army engineers estimated it would be.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at this point several similar illustrations which I do not want to take the time of the Senate to state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ACTUAL VERSUS ESTIMATED TONNAGE ON CERTAIN RIVERS

TENNESSEE RIVER

Source: House Document No. 328, Seventy-first Congress, second session (1930).

On pages 496 and 497 is a prediction by the district engineer (United States) that 7,682,000 tons of commerce would use the river when improved, and that by the time the improvement was completed (at an estimated date of 1940) the traffic would be double that figure. (This covers stretch, Knoxville, Tenn., to Paducah, Ky.) This prediction was made in January 1930.

As of June 30, 1939, six dams were completed; three were under construction, leaving one additional dam to be constructed. The engineers' report did not give an estimate of the percentage of completion, but the project must have been well on the way to completion.

The traffic on this river, Knoxville to Paducah, for the calendar year 1938, was 1,063,814 tons.

On page 211 of report is statement that in 1928 the Department of Commerce estimated the potential water tonnage on this stretch of the Missouri as 3,729,437 tons. (This was on assumption of 6-foot channel.) Also that in 1929 the United States engineers made a survey showing that if 9-foot channel was available the potential tonnage would be 5,389,975 tons.

As of June 30, 1939, the existing project, which contemplates a 6-foot depth, was 89 percent complete.

The tonnage, for the calendar year 1938, was 4,446,493 tons.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a story sent out from Washington by the Associated Press, dealing with the report of the foremost transportation authority in the United States, Joseph B. Eastman, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Mr. Eastman has recently completed the studies he began as Coordinator of Transportation. His report is in four volumes. I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the Associated Press story dealing with the summary of those four volumes.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRANSPORTATION SURPLUS FROM FEDERAL AID—GOVERNMENT MOST DISTURBING ELEMENT, EASTMAN CHARGES

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Joseph B. Eastman, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, contended today that public aids to transportation, totaling many billions of dollars, had resulted in a surplus of facilities and had proven in many instances of "little public benefit."

His comment was contained in a four-volume report on public aids to rail, water, highway, and air carriers. The study was begun several years ago, when Eastman was Federal Coordinator of Railroads.

Eastman said these aids "have set up repercussions felt in many parts of the transportation structure and created a demand for further public aids to offset the effects of those already given."

MORE GRIEF WOULD FOLLOW

It appeared likely, the I. C. C. Chairman added, that future assistance would perpetuate the "conditions of uneconomic competition which such aids have created." For that reason he advocated "deliberate and calculated" planning to measure future transportation needs.

"Planning in this sense has been of limited extent, partly by reason of the age of certain facilities, the pressures which have produced others, and of rapid technological changes in some cases.

"The Government itself has contributed perhaps the most disturbing of the unplanned elements."

"Regulations," he asserted, "can do much toward bringing about the objectives envisioned by planners; on the other hand, it can frustrate planning objectives."

LISTS CONTRIBUTIONS

Total principal public aids to various forms of transportation he listed as follows:

Motor vehicle, about $31,000,000,000 for highways and streets from 1921 to 1937.

Waterway improvements and related aid, $2,917,000,000 to June 30, 1936, for river and harbor improvements and maintenance, flood control, and other nonnavigation purposes.

Railroads, $1,443,000,000 through 1935, divided as follows: $1,282,000,000 "to secure the construction" of the roads, and $161,000,000 from the World War to 1936.

Air transportation, $64,654,000 public aid to scheduled air carriers in air mail subsidies; $55,777,000 for airways, airway services and airports; and $56,500,000 for aids to nonscheduled users of airways and airports.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to quote from the statement of Mr. Eastman, who is a transportation authority. No Member of this body will dispute that statement. I shall read only a part of his statement, because I wish to put the salient points into the RECORD. Later, I shall ask permission to insert Mr. Eastman's entire statement in the RECORD.

Mr. Eastman recently said, in a decision dealing with freight rates upon petroleum products—the principal item involved in the project now under consideration.

These waterways are now costing and will continue to cost the taxpayers of this country very substantial amounts annually for interest on the investment and for maintenance, inasmuch as no charge is made against the users of the waterways. If the railroad rates are reduced, the traffic will not move by the waterways, and the taxpayers' money will have been and will be spent for the purpose, so far as this traffic is concerned—

He was speaking of traffic which might move over this project if authorized and finally completed.

The taxpayers' money will have been and will be spent for the purpose, so far as this traffic is concerned, of giving the Standard Oil and other big oil companies the benefit of cuts in railroad rates. It is possible, of course, that they may pass some of this benefit on to the consumers, but the circumstantial evidence is against this possibility. The oil companies have apparently used every resource at their command to get these rates down.

Mr. Eastman further stated:

If this were a unique or unusual situation, it would not be so disturbing, but it bids fair to become the rule rather than the exception, so far as our inland waterways are concerned. The fact is that shippers have no particular interest in water transportation in and of itself. Other things being anywhere near equal, they mostly prefer rail transportation.

The Chairman of the Commission was speaking primarily of the inland waterways.

Low rates are what they want, and if new waterways will give them such rates by rail, they will be entirely satisfied, regardless of whether a pound of traffic moves over the waterways. I cannot see, however, how the taxpayers can be satisfied with such a result. It would be more economical for the Government not to construct and maintain the waterways but instead to use an equivalent amount of money as a subsidy to the railroads in exchange for lower rates.

As I stated, Mr. Eastman's report dealt with a case involving petroleum products moving into this particular territory.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a copy of Mr. Eastman's statement.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAIRMAN EASTMAN'S STATEMENT CONCERNING WATERWAYS

The following is quoted from the dissenting opinion of Chairman Eastman in Petroleum Products to Tennessee River Points (235 I. C. C. 115), decided October 30, 1939:

"These waterways are now costing, and will continue to cost, the taxpayers of this country very substantial amounts annually for interest on the investment and for maintenance, inasmuch as no charge is made against the users of the waterways. If the railroad rates are reduced, the traffic will not move by the waterways, and the taxpayers' money will have been and will be spent for the purpose, so far as this traffic is concerned, of giving the Standard Oil and other big oil companies the benefit of cuts in railroad rates. It is possible, of course, that they may pass some of this benefit on to the consumers, but the circumstantial evidence is against this possibility. The oil companies have apparently used every resource at their command to get these rates down, and they would hardly have done that merely in an altruistic effort to benefit consumers. After it is all over, the oil companies will have their reduced rates, the taxpayers will continue to pay interest and maintenance on account of the waterways, and the railroads will have a new hole in their revenues which they must fill up at the expense of some other traffic if it is not to impair their ability to serve the public.

"If this were a unique or unusual situation, it would not be so disturbing, but it bids fair to become the rule rather than the exception, so far as our inland waterways are concerned. The fact is that shippers have no particular interest in water transportation in and of itself. Other things being anywhere near equal, they mostly prefer rail transportation. Low rates are what they want, and if new waterways will give them such rates by rail, they will be entirely satisfied, regardless of whether a pound of traffic moves over the waterways. I cannot see, however, how the taxpayers can be satisfied with such a result. It would be more economical for the Government not to construct and maintain the waterways, but, instead, to use an equivalent amount of money as a subsidy to the railroads in exchange for lower rates."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, four kinds of waterways are available for transportation purposes. First, there are the oceans, which we must use. Then there are the Great Lakes, which constitute a great national economic water highway. Transportation on the Great Lakes is the cheapest transportation known, particularly in connection with bulk commodities such as coal, steel, limestone, and grain.

Then there are waterway improvements along the coast. They must be made. We must have harbors. I have no particular quarrel with such projects. I have no quarrel with any inland waterway if it can be economically justified. However, from the standpoint of transportation, the Tombigbee project is absolutely the most fantastic and uneconomical project I have ever heard discussed on the floor of the Senate.

The Senator from North Carolina has stated that the bill was purposely limited to navigation so as to eliminate the other features. I see some Senators from farm States present in the Chamber. I have heard much discussion about the farmers receiving great benefits from so-called cheap transportation. It is cheap only to the extent that the taxpayers pay a subsidy out of the Treasury.

Let me give the figures on farm products moving by the inland waterways. Of the total tonnage moved on the inland waterways in 1937, 4.6 percent was farm products. Cotton represented three-tenths of 1 percent; flour and meal four-tenths of 1 percent; grains, such as wheat, corn, and so forth, represented 2.5 percent; hay and feed, one-tenth of 1 percent; rice, two-tenths of 1 percent; sugar, seven-tenths of 1 percent; and sirup and molasses, four-tenths of 1 percent.

Mr. President, this statement shows also the figures for 1938. They are similar figures. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to read them. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a statement showing the figures for 1937 and 1938.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There is considerable interest as to the amount of tonnage moving by waterway that consists of agricultural products. Averages of this type can be derived only by making a special tabulation, from annual reports of the Chief of Engineers, for the several rivers, and then adding the figures together. This results in some duplication, due to the fact that some tonnage moves over more than one river, whereas the totals given above are adjusted to eliminate all known duplications.

With this qualification in mind, the following percentages are submitted, showing for the calendar years 1937 and 1938 the proportions of the total inland waterway tonnage represented by the various types of agricultural commodity or products moved. The proportions are as follows:

Commodity	1937	1938
	Percent	Percent
Cotton, raw and linters	0.3	0.2
Flour and meal	.4	.7
Grains (wheat, corn, etc.)	2.5	8.7
Hay and feed	.1	.1
Rice	.2	.1
Sugar	.7	.9
Sirup and molasses	.4	.2
Total	4.6	10.9

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it may be said that the traffic on the inland waterways is increasing. I think it would be difficult to justify that assertion. I have before me a statement showing the tonnage figures for the Federal Barge Line, which is the largest of the inland-waterway carriers. In 1937 the Federal Barge Line handled 2,109,854 tons; in 1938 it handled 2,767,210 tons; but in 1939 the tonnage dropped to 2,178,698 tons.

Mr. President, this statement is broken down by principal commodities. I ask unanimous consent to have the statement inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks without taking the time of the Senate to read it.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The trend from 1937 to 1939 in the movement of certain specific products is of interest. The following statement applies to Federal Barge Line tonnage in 1937, 1938, and 1939:

Federal Barge Line tonnage

	1937	1938	1939
Wheat	71,110	186,177	161,678
Corn	59,940	630,423	310,439
Bituminous coal	65,373	173,082	156,137
Coke	36,798	57,969	59,743
Sulfur	165,738	74,779	123,091
Sugar (beet or cane)	399,835	319,247	222,186
Pig iron	98,775	96,335	46,198
Beverages	106,743	113,900	89,440
Total	1,004,312	1,651,912	1,168,922

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has said. The people who receive the benefits from inland-waterway improvements are not the grain farmers. They are not the consumers. They are the great corporations, which are sufficiently large to own their own commodities and move those commodities in their own boats. For example, in 1938 coal and coke constituted 49.7 percent of the tonnage moved on all the important inland waterways of the United States with the exception of the Great Lakes. Petroleum and its products represented 13.8 percent. Sand, gravel, and stone, much of which was used in the construction of the immediate projects, represented 17.8 percent. This statement is broken down by commodities, and the percentages are stated. I ask unanimous consent to have the statement printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks in order to save time.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Principal commodities carried in commerce on important inland waterways of the United States, calendar year 1938

Principal commodities	Number of tons (2,000 pounds)	Percent of total tonnage
Coal and coke	29,754,928	49.7
Petroleum and its products	8,270,730	13.8
Sand, gravel, and stone	10,683,255	17.8
Lumber, logs, etc	398,535	.7
Iron and steel and their products	2,433,666	4.1
Vegetable-food products	4,235,299	7.1
Cement	291,454	.5
Pyrites (cinders)	252,860	.4
All other commodities	3,585,744	5.9

Ohio River and Tributaries: Ohio River, Allegheny River, Monongahela River, Big Sandy River—Tug and Levisa Forks, Cumberland River (above Nashville), Cumberland River (below Nashville), Kanawha River.

Mississippi River and Tributaries: Missouri River (lower), Mississippi River (middle), Mississippi River (upper), Illinois and Mississippi Canal, Illinois Waterway, Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, New York State Barge Canal.

All of the information has been compiled from the annual reports of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, except certain data for the New York State Barge Canal which was secured from the annual reports of the Superintendent of Public Works, State of New York.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan made such a complete case that he left very little further to be said. All that I have tried to do is to supply some details strictly from a transportation standpoint.

There is no possible justification for spending $75,000,000, with annual carrying charges of $3,500,000, to dig a canal between the Tennessee River and the headwaters of the Tombigbee. As the Senator from Michigan has said, it would be necessary to broaden and dredge the Tombigbee, and, as I recall, he said the total distance of the river improvements would be about 280 miles. I state that figure from my recollection of his remarks. There is no justification for such an expenditure; there is no need for it. The traffic that would move upon that waterway, if it were improved, would not pay in public benefit 10 percent of the carrying charges on the cost of the improvement. From an engineering standpoint it is possible to take a steam shovel and dig a ditch at any place, and to make a canal of such a ditch if the water can be gotten into it, but what we would have after we had gotten it would be another thing. No project coming before the Senate in my service here has had so little merit as this one, and none has represented a greater waste of public money, at a time when we ought to be conserving money in every reasonable direction. Millions are still unemployed; a great many of our people are still in want and are underprivileged. The expenditure of $75,000,000 on an absolutely indefensible project, as the Senator from North Carolina described it, for navigation, which means for transportation purposes ought not to be authorized by this body.

I hope the amendment of the committee will be rejected.

TWO HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST REGULARLY ISSUED AMERICAN NEWSPAPER

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I do not rise at this time to speak on the amendment which has been discussed by the Senator from Michigan, though I wish to compliment him on his unanswerable argument and to say that I agree with him. I am not in favor of building any more ditches. We have enough ditches as it is. Proposals are already pending for another ditch in Florida to cost $175,000,000 and for another ditch in Panama to cost $300,000,000. We have a big ditch in the United States Treasury, and the farmers of the West have been in a ditch for some time; they are not getting cost of production for their products. However, I rose to speak for a few minutes on a subject of a historical nature.

Mr. President, 236 years ago today the first issue of the first regularly issued American newspaper was published.

In the early colonial days of New England there were many broadsides published to correct false reports. Some of these broadsides were very similar to what we know as a newspaper today. They were concerned with some domestic news of the Colonies, and were printed to sell as news sheets, but they had no regular publication dates, and, consequently, cannot be regarded as real newspapers.

One of the very earliest of these broadsides was The Present State of New-English Affairs, which was published in 1689. It was published and printed by a man named Samuel Green. There must have been a great many news handbills circulating at that time, because by 1689 the Massachusetts authorities adopted a resolution reading in part, "Whereas many papers have been lately printed and dispersed, tending to the disturbance of the peace," and providing that any persons guilty of printing or even concealing "such like papers" shall be "accounted enemies" of the government and "be proceeded against as such with the uttermost severity." I mention this in passing because today we take freedom of the press for granted and do not realize that it came only after a hard-fought battle.

On September 25, 1690, a man named Benjamin Harris brought out in Boston a publication called Publick Occurences. The publication did not have the sanction of the authorities and, consequently, it was suppressed by the Governor and the council. It is, Mr. President, very significant that in this country in 1690 a newspaper was suppressed.

In the same resolution which suppressed this publication there was a provision forbidding anyone in the future to set forth anything in print without a license. That was a drastic action, and a decade and a half elapsed before there was another attempt to give Boston a newspaper.

Of course, there were other sources of news. The New England clergy often related items of news. The bellman making his rounds sometimes called out matters of public interest. Then, of course, there were many so-called news letters. Probably the outstanding one in American history was written by John Campbell, the postmaster at Boston. His letters were written by hand, but finally the demand became so great that he was forced to use a printing press. The first printed news-letter appeared on Monday, April 24, 1704, and was called The Boston News-Letter.

Mr. President, I mention this first newspaper day because I believe it is desirable that today we reaffirm our faith in the newspapers of America. Our press today, in a world of censorship, enjoys an almost unlimited freedom. In all justice it should be stated that, with very few exceptions, that freedom of the American press has never been abused.

Today, when the great freedoms are dying in other lands, the continued existence of freedom in this country is a great challenge to use that freedom for constructive purposes. Beyond the reportorial obligation of the newspaper, every American newspaper today is a leader of public opinion. In winnowing and sifting the news of the day, it lives up to its obligation to present only the truth. By using discretion in placing its emphasis on foreign news today, our newspapers have performed a great service in preserving mental balance in America.

Mr. President, I believe that the greatest safeguard against dictatorial governments is a conscientious, intelligent, constructive, unshackled free press.

RIVER AND HARBOR AUTHORIZATIONS, 1941

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill H. R. 6264, an act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BILBO obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Barbour	Brown	Capper
Ashurst	Barkley	Bulow	Caraway
Austin	Bilbo	Burke	Chandler
Bailey	Bone	Byrd	Chavez
Bankhead	Bridges	Byrnes	Clark, Idaho
Clark, Mo.	Hatch	Minton	Smathers
Connally	Hayden	Murray	Smith
Danaher	Herring	Neely	Stewart
Davis	Hughes	Norris	Taft
Donahey	Johnson, Calif.	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Ellender	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Okla.
Frazier	King	Overton	Thomas, Utah
George	La Follette	Pepper	Townsend
Gerry	Lee	Pittman	Truman

Green	McKellar	Schwartz	Wagner
Guffey	McNary	Schwellenbach	Walsh
Gurney	Maloney	Sheppard	White
Hale	Mead	Shipstead	Wiley
Harrison	Miller	Slattery

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Because of an important engagement which will call me from the Senate Chamber for the remainder of the afternoon, I desire at this time briefly to record my position upon the Tombigbee project.

Believing as I do that the authorization of the project at this time is most unwarranted in view of the fiscal conditions of the country, if I should be fortunate enough to return in time for the vote, I shall vote against the committee amendment.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, knowing the legislative history of the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], I was rather amused at his attempt to convince the Senate and the country that we should practice economy by defeating the bill now before the Senate. It is a matter of record that he is very enthusiastically supporting the St. Lawrence inland waterway project, which at the beginning involves an expenditure of $270,000,000; but that, incidentally, is in juxtaposition to the State he represents on the floor of the Senate, and may account for his liberality when it comes to the St. Lawrence inland waterway project.

This bill is an attempt on the part of the Commerce Committee to project the navigation program over a period of 7 years. It involves the expenditure of $331,000,000, which is about $47,000,000 a year for the next 7 years. I am not one of those who belong to the economy bloc. However, I do not think I am a spendthrift in voting the people's tax money; but I refuse to be alarmed about the enormity of our national debt. Last year I think the most reliable reports show that this country enjoyed a net income of over $71,000,000,000. After deducting the amount of the present national indebtedness and the sums which will come back to the Government in the way of liquidating programs which we have inaugurated, our national debt is not so alarming as some of our colleagues would make us believe, especially when they are trying to defeat some measure which provides for a small expenditure of the people's tax money.

In round numbers, the national debt of Great Britain is about $800 per capita. The national debt of France, another Republic, is about $600 per capita. The national debt of the United States is somewhat over $200 per capita. So, after all, we are not in such bad shape, especially when we appreciate the fact that we live in possibly the richest country on earth. Therefore, I am not disturbed by the economy argument of my friend from Michigan. Neither do I think other Senators are disturbed, because even in this session, when there has been a cry for economy, they do not hesitate to vote a billion dollars for national defense through the Army and Navy. They can do that without winking or batting an eye.

The particular project to which I shall address myself on this occasion involves the expenditure of only $66,000,000, which is not even sufficient to build a first-class battleship. It costs about $80,000,000 to build a first-class battleship, which will possibly become obsolete in about 8 or 10 years; but in this instance we propose to spend, over a period of 7 or 8 years, only $66,000,000 to build a project which is of as much value for national defense as is a battleship, or even more.

I am afraid some of my friends who are opposed to this measure have not attempted to analyze it from a national-defense standpoint. There may come a time—I am not prophesying it, and I may not believe it, but it is possible—if the present war in Europe should go "haywire" so far as the Allies are concerned, and if about three dictators should get control of Europe and Asia and should decide to invade the Western Hemisphere, when the seacoast lines of this country would be in serious danger of destruction, because if all the war mechanisms of the countries of Europe and of Asia were combined there would be a considerable outfit to invade one of the countries of the Western Hemisphere. In that event the coast lines of our own beloved country, the United States, would be in a hazardous condition, and great damage could be done to them, and we should be forced to depend for our national defense on whatever transportation facilities we might have in the inland portion of the United States. The project I am advocating, the Tennessee-Tombigbee Canal, is merely the completion of a scheme of inland defense which was worked out by the Army engineers, who represent the War Department.

Let us forget about how much money is to be made out of it, whether it is self-liquidating or not, but put it on the same basis on which an authorization for a battleship is put. It is for national defense; and the one branch, which I indicate on the map prepared by the Department, shows that, by the construction of this canal from the Pickwick Dam to Demopolis, there will be completed an inland water route running from Mobile Bay all the way to the Ohio, and then on up the Ohio River. The next step will be to complete the Lake Erie-Ohio canal, connecting the Ohio River with Lake Erie. Then there will be a complete circuit of water transportation, the cheapest transportation in the world, which will reach the Great Lakes; and then, when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] finishes the St. Lawrence inland waterway from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean, it will be possible to reach the Atlantic Ocean by way of this route. Not only that, but through the Erie Canal it will be possible to reach the city of New York on the inside, and there will be opened up a vision of transportation by water which will cover the great Mississippi Valley along with the eastern section of our country.

The Senator from Michigan laid great stress on the fact that the Board of Army Engineers had to make four investigations and four reports on the Tennessee-Tombigbee project, and that there were three adverse reports before they finally approved the project. That is a matter of history, and we admit it. Some in this country have had a dream for a century of connecting the Tennessee and the Tombigbee Rivers. Some geologists claim and believe that the Tennessee and the Tombigbee at one time in the history of the earth were together; in other words, that the waters of the Tennessee Valley went toward the Gulf of Mexico by way of the Mobile River. But the dream of building this canal has been in the minds of people who have looked toward the development of our country, and especially the South, for 50 or 100 years. Surveys have been made from time to time at the request of those interested in the project, but until the building of the Pickwick Dam it was not feasible and was not practicable. But as soon as the Pickwick Dam was provided for and the waters of the Tennessee River were elevated to an adequate height, then the Board of Army Engineers, by their special board and after special investigation, said that the time had come when we could connect the Tennessee with the Tombigbee, and thus afford an outlet to the Gulf of Mexico.

It is not necessary to go into detail as to the items involved in the construction of the canal, but I ask that as a part of my remarks a brief résumé of the facts involved in the project be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WATERWAY CONNECTING THE TOMBIGBEE AND TENNESSEE RIVERS

(H. Doc. 269, 76th Cong.)

Location: The Tennessee River is formed near Knoxville, Tenn., and flows 650 miles to enter the Ohio River at Paducah, 46 miles above the Mississippi River. The Tombigbee River rises in northeastern Mississippi about 20 miles from the Tennessee River and flows 500 miles to join the Alabama River and form the Mobile River 45 miles above Mobile Bay at the city of Mobile, 144 miles by water from the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Authority: Rivers and Harbors Committee resolution adopted February 27, 1934.

Existing project: Mobile-Tombigbee-Warrior Rivers: Channel 9 feet deep by 200 feet wide where practicable from Mobile to mile 457 on Sipsey Fork, mile 454 on Mulberry Fork, and mile 430 on Locust Fork, obtained by locks and dams and dredging. Tombigbee River above Demopolis: Channel 6 feet deep at low water, 146 miles to Columbus, by snagging, revetment, and bar improvement; and high-water channel, 134 miles above Columbus, 4 feet deep during 4 months. Tennessee River: Under improvement by T. V. A.

Plan of improvement: The construction of a waterway to connect the Tennessee and Tombigbee Rivers, by way of the East Fork of the Tombigbee River, Mackeys Creek, and Yellow Creek so as to provide a channel of not less than 9 feet in depth and a minimum bottom width of 170 feet in river and canal sections and 115 feet in the divide cut, with locks approximately 75 by 450 feet, inside dimensions.

Estimated first cost: $66,000,000.

Local cooperation: To make necessary alterations to highways, including expense of bridges and approaches; to make required alterations in sewer, water supply, and drainage works; to assume operation and maintenance of reconstructed railroad and utility crossings; and to provide adequate new terminals and facilities.

Annual maintenance charges to United States: $500,000.

Benefits: The benefits are classified as (1) savings to public in transportation charges, (2) value as a facility for national defense, (3) recreational value, (4) enhancement of land values in tributary area.

Remarks: The waterway would afford an additional avenue of transportation into the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, as to whether this project has received the full and enthusiastic and hearty support of the necessary agencies of the Government, I wish to call attention to the fact that the project has been approved by President Roosevelt. He approved it on April 4, 1939, in his memorandum to the Secretary of War, when he said:

I approve this survey report for a waterway connecting the Tombigbee and Tennessee Rivers.

So it was first endorsed by the President of the United States. Second, the Board of Army Engineers approved the project. Third, the Chief of Engineers himself endorsed it. Fourth, the National Resources Committee endorsed the project. Fifth, the Rivers and Harbors Congress twice endorsed the construction of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Canal, and made it a part of their permanent program of inland-waterway improvement in the United States.

Mr. President, I wish to put into the RECORD the exact words of General Schley in his report on this project. He said:

After full consideration of the report secured from the Special Board, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors recommends that the United States undertake the construction of a waterway to connect the Tennessee and Tombigbee Rivers, by way of the East Fork of the Tombigbee River, Mackeys Creek, and Yellow Creek, so as to provide a channel of not less than 9 feet in depth and a minimum bottom width of 170 feet in river and canal sections and 115 feet in the divide cut, with locks approximately 75 by 450 feet clear inside dimensions, substantially in accordance with the general plan presented in the report of the Special Board, at an estimated first cost to the United States of about $66,000,000 and an estimated annual cost of $500,000 for maintenance and operation, subject to the condition that local interests give assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of War that they will—

* * * * * * *

The Special Board finds that the savings in transportation costs which will probably accrue to shippers over the waterway will amount to about $2,168,000 per annum. It believes that barge tonnage destined to Ohio River and upper Mississippi River points from New Orleans can be moved over the proposed waterway instead of up the improved Mississippi River at an annual saving in cost to barge-line operators of $1,000,000. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors concurs generally as to these estimates of transportation savings. The estimate of $2,168,000 savings has been arrived at by the collection of full data, by thorough analysis thereof, and by sound conclusions. I concur in the view that it is conservative rather than liberal.

Yet we heard our distinguished colleague from Michigan laboring hard to create the impression that there lingered in the mind of General Schley some doubt about the feasibility and the economic justification of this project. The general said:

The estimate of saving of $1,000,000 to up-bound traffic on the Mississippi River results from a thorough study and I do not doubt that such a saving would result.

He says it is very conservative, not wild; and not fantastic, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] stated.

I have no doubt that benefits of value to national defense, from enhancement of land values, and from increased use of recreational areas will be produced. Furthermore, provision of a direct water route to the Gulf of Mexico from the Tennessee Valley may hasten the development in that valley resulting from the navigation project and electric-power system now being constructed there by the Federal Government. The large amount of construction involved in this connecting waterway to the Gulf would provide substantial direct employment over a period of 8 years and large orders to cement and steel mills and to the lumber industry.

In other words, the cost of the construction of this project will be neglible when we realize that this work, proceeding over a period of 8 years, will take from the relief rolls in the section of the country affected between eight and ten thousand laborers, and when we figure that the people being diverted to the construction of this project will mean that the W. P. A. appropriations will be reduced to a minimum. That is worth considering.

In a few days we will be voting for an appropriation of a billion dollars for W. P. A., or perhaps a billion and a half. I should be willing to vote for a billion and a half dollars. I tried to get an extra $150,000,000 last year, because I realized what was going to happen this spring when about 700,000 relief workers throughout the country would be thrown out. In my State there are about seven or eight thousand marked for the slaughter, and I did not want that to happen. In a few days we will be voting for an appropriation of a billion or a billion and a half dollars for relief. We would be assisting to keep relief workers on the rolls by agreeing to the amendment which the committee has reported.

I wish to say in passing that sometimes I go to older Senators and say, "Can we not do this or do that to this bill?" They reply, "Oh, no; I make it a rule to stand by the judgment of the committee." I am anxious to see what some of the Senators who are in the habit of standing by committees will do in view of the fact that the Commerce Committee has thoroughly investigated the proposal now before us and has submitted this amendment as a part and parcel of the pending bill.

In this connection I wish to call attention to the observation made by my friend the Senator from Michigan. I unhesitatingly say that I am very fond of the Senator from Michigan, and if we must have a Republican President, he is my first choice. I understand another one of my good friends has also been disturbed over the fact that it will take $100,000 in value of water from the Pickwick Dam and from the lower stretches of the Tennessee River—that is, from Pickwick Landing to Gilbertsville Dam—to supply the locks of the Tombigbee Canal project.

In other words, the Senator from Michigan tries to leave the impression in the minds of Senators and of the country that the building of this canal will in some way disturb the splendid work the T. V. A. is doing.

It is true that when the T. V. A. made its investigation, which was of a cursory character—they admit in the report that it was not a full investigation—they admitted that about $100,000 a year ought to be charged up to the expense of operating the Tennessee-Tombigbee project, but at that time they did not know that the Tennessee project would require only sufficient water to operate the first lock and dam in the project. Since then the Board of Army Engineers have investigated and made an estimate, and I put it in the record as a fact that the Army engineers say that if as many ships should pass through the Tennessee-Tombigbee Canal as go through the Panama Canal every 24 hours, the water necessary to operate the locks and dams in the Tennessee-Tombigbee Canal project would result in lowering the Pickwick Dam only one-fifteenth of 1 inch daily. In other words, that would be about the width of my pencil. While that is being done, Senators must remember that the water is still flowing from the rivulets, streams, and springs above the Pickwick Dam and filling the dam.

So the argument that in any way the T. V. A. and its splendid program would be interrupted, or that there would be taken away from the Tennessee River below the Pickwick Dam sufficient water to interfere with its use as a navigable stream down to the mouth of the river where it enters the Ohio at Paducah, is the merest rot. There is nothing to it. It is an argument which has been made by that selfish interest which is attempting to defeat this project and has been trying to defeat it for, lo these many months.

I was in Mississippi last week and had a meeting with the railroad boys. I refer to the boys who represent the railroad labor organizations in the State. They said this is all tommyrot about the railroad organizations being against the building of the Tennessee-Tombigbee project. They said the opposition is coming from a few officials, not only in the South but in the East and in the North, because they are all interlocked, and there is behind all this, and involved in it, a greater problem, which I shall not mention at this time, which is inspiring the so-called railroad opposition. In other words, some of the boys are being used. They are being used and do not know that they are being used.

I have been the consistent friend of the railroad laboring men through my entire political career, and I am still their friend. I think I know where to go when I want to get the truth about their real attitude and where their interest is involved. As a matter of fact, the building of this canal would do more for the railroads of this important territory than anything we could do. It would increase their business, because in the building of this canal we would develop parts of Mississippi and Alabama, which is a great storehouse of raw materials which industry will need in days to come. In other words, we would industrialize this section of the South by building the canal, because we have there a great storehouse of lime rock, which means cement; we have asphalt, which means the paving of roads; we have sands; we have clays of all kinds which would bring about the establishment of industries for the use of the special clays found in this section of the States of Alabama and Tennessee; we have lumber. There are great timber resources in this section. The industrial development of this section of Alabama and Mississippi would mean added business for the railroads. It would mean more employees for the railroads in this particular section.

It would also mean that this great section, both in the States of Tennessee and Alabama and Mississippi, would enjoy a competitive rate with the railroads. That does not mean that the railroads would be damaged. It does not mean that they would be bankrupted. Such competition usually results in doubling the business. That is what would happen in this case. The railroads would do more business, even if they should have to charge a lower rate because of water competition.

Mr. President, for the life of me I cannot see how anyone who is interested in the orderly development of the resources of the great Mississippi and Tennessee Valleys, or who is interested in national defense, could consent to oppose a project of this kind, especially when, as I have just said, the cost would be reduced to practically nothing, when we figure the large number of people who would be employed in construction in the next 8 or 10 years and thus taken off the relief rolls.

Mr. President, everyone who lives in the Mississippi and Ohio River Valleys ought to be interested in this development, because with the completion of the project in shipping down the Ohio River from Pittsburgh the shipper would be 200 miles nearer the markets of the Gulf of Mexico. Shipments from the upper stretches of the Mississippi, or from Chicago all the way down to the Gulf, could go via Paducah, and follow this water trail down the Tombigbee and the Warrior to Mobile Bay, and thus save 100 miles in transportation.

Then the fleets which carry traffic down the Ohio and Mississippi to New Orleans, to find access to the seaport on the Gulf of Mexico, on the return trip could save money by reason of not having to fight the currents going up the stream, and also because of the shorter distance in reaching their destination on the return trip to the port from which they started.

So, Mr. President, from every standpoint I do not see how anyone who has at heart the real interest of the Mississippi and the Tennessee Valleys, in which at least 30 States are involved, can give his consent to vote against this project.

I think one reason for the troubles the railroads have had is they have taken such a narrow view, such a selfish position, that they have almost killed the goose that lays the golden egg. They have interfered with their own progress and their own success by taking such a narrow position. Why should they fight this project? Why should they be fighting the construction of the Florida ship canal? Simply because they are afraid they will lose a little trade and have a little competition. If they want to do business, they should help develop the country, increase its industrialization, and develop its resources, which can be done if the rate structure is a proper one to encourage industry to invest in this territory which contains so much raw material.

I trust Senators will realize that the adoption of the committee amendment, under which there would be an expenditure of about $9,000,000 a year for the next 7 or 8 years in the completion of this project, would mean great prosperity and economic development to the States of Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi.

Tennessee would be the beneficiary of this project, because all the people who live above the Pickwick Dam, up to the Wilson Dam, the Wheeler Dam, and the Norris Dam, in the valley of the Tennessee and the T. V. A. territory, would be 600 miles nearer the seaport of Mobile. The building of the proposed canal would bring them 664 miles nearer the markets of the world than they now are by reason of being compelled to go down the Tennessee River into the Mississippi River and back to New Orleans. That whole section would be benefited.

The T. V. A. has embarked upon a program to develop this great section. It is more or less of an experiment. Let us do this one thing to give industry cheap hydroelectric power, so plentiful in this great valley. Give industry the opportunity to obtain freight rates which will bring about the development of which we dream for this great section. The project means much to my people. I am very anxious that Senators allow the amendment to stay in the bill.

Someone has said that the President would never sign the bill with this amendment in it. The President has endorsed the proposal; and I think if the amendment stays in the bill it will do more to induce the President to sign the bill than anything else we could do. I know his keen interest in this project. The proposed canal would aid the national defense, furnish recreation, and provide industrial development for a neglected part of the South, which some are pleased to call our economic problem No. 1.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I understand that earlier in the day the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] placed in the RECORD an editorial or article from a Washington newspaper concerning the Logan-Walter bill. I imagine that the article placed in the RECORD—and this is purely guesswork on my part—was an article written by Mr. Ernest K. Lindley, which appeared in the Washington Post of this morning.

I am very glad the Senator from Indiana placed that article in the RECORD. Mr. Lindley is a very earnest, fair writer, and also a man of outstanding ability. It so happens that I disagree with Mr. Lindley on this question. I have read the article, which I presume is the one which was placed in the RECORD by the Senator from Indiana. Mr. Lindley himself points out in the article the necessity for legislation along the lines of the Logan-Walter bill.

In order that both sides of the controversy may appear in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Washington Daily News of April 22, 1940, entitled "Bureaucracy and the Courts."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? The Chair hears none, and the editorial will be printed in the Appendix.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, Mr. Lindley refers in his article to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson. For that reason I ask that there also be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article from the same issue of the Washington Daily News, by General Johnson, entitled "One Man's Opinion," which deals with the Logan-Walter bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the article will be printed in the Appendix.

Mr. HATCH subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day I referred to an article which I thought the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] had placed in the RECORD. I stated at the time that I was only guessing, because I did not have accurate information. I have been informed that the Senator from Indiana did not ask for the insertion of the article to which I referred. It was my mistake. In order that the article by Mr. Lindley, to which I referred, may be included in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the Appendix.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the article will be printed in the Appendix.

RIVER AND HARBOR AUTHORIZATIONS, 1941

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly in reference to the pending measure.

This project, connecting the Tennessee by way of the Tombigbee and Mobile Rivers with the Gulf of Mexico and the world's ocean lanes, establishes a vital link in the waterway system of the United States.

This project will shorten the water distance from all points on the Ohio River to the Gulf of Mexico by 200 miles and from points on the Ohio River as far as Pittsburgh to Mobile by 370 miles.

It will shorten the water distance from all points on the upper Mississippi River and from Chicago to the Gulf by 108 miles. It will shorten the water distance from Knoxville and western Tennessee to Mobile and the Gulf by 600 miles. It will give a slack-water route for ascending traffic from New Orleans to Cairo, a distance at present of 900 miles. At present ascending traffic is forced to fight a most difficult current.

The proposed improvement will permit transportation in slack water up the Tombigbee until it reaches the Tennessee, whence it will go downstream on the Tennessee and the Ohio to Cairo.

This project also affords an additional means of interchange of commerce between the territory of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway along the Gulf coast from Florida to Texas, the territory of the Tombigbee waterway system, and the territory of the Tennessee, Ohio, and Mississippi waterway systems.

In the territory immediately tributary to the Tombigbee and Tennessee waterway systems is a population of nearly 3,000,000 persons. The total land area affected by these two waterway systems comprises about 57,000 square miles. This land area is predominantly agricultural, the principal crop being cotton. In 1924 and 1929 the average production of cotton in this area consisted of about 900,000 bales; of corn, about 52,000,000 bushels; of tobacco, about 21,000,000 pounds; of wheat, about a million bushels; of white potatoes, about 2,730,000 bushels; of oats, 282,000 bushels; of hay, about 924,000 tons; of sweetpotatoes, about four and a half million bushels; of peanuts, about 850,000 pounds; of cottonseed, about 500,000 tons; and of wool, about 470,000 pounds. The area consumed about 415,000 tons of commercial fertilizer in these years. In this area are vast commercial timber resources. The minerals in this area include extensive deposits of coal, iron ore, limestone, phosphate rock, marble and other building stone, copper ore, zinc ore, ceramic clays, asphaltic limestone, bauxite, slate, barite, sand, gravel, tripoli, and fuller's earth.

Industry in the Tennessee portion of this area is so diversified as to include mining, manufacture of textiles, copper, zinc, aluminum, fertilizer materials, cement, lime, iron and steel articles, clay products, lumber, and the production of marble and other building stone, industries now in an early stage, but destined for a tremendous enlargement. In the Tombigbee section of this area the principal industry is the manufacture of lumber, although there are other important industries, such as the manufacture of textiles, dairy products, brick, and the production of sand and gravel.

The millions of tons of ceramic clays available in this area, discovered during the past 5 years, should make us independent of the tremendous importation of foreign pottery and china, and give our own pottery industries a new opportunity in our own markets. This area contains hundreds of millions of tons of rock asphalt necessary in the building of our streets and roads, but which cannot reach the peak of usefulness because of the lack of cheap transportation.

From the standpoint of national defense the improvement would afford an outlet for coal, iron, timber, grain, cotton, and other raw materials, and give ingress and egress to our great nitrate supply by a route which would be protected from the sea and which would be several hundred miles nearer the Gulf than the present long, tortuous route down the Tennessee River to the Ohio River, thence down the Ohio to the Mississippi, and thence down the Mississippi to its mouth.

The project is economically sound. It will pay for itself in 30 years, even if the million-dollar saving in connection with Mississippi traffic should be excluded in accordance with General Schley's suggestion. It will contribute to our program of national defense, and it will effect great savings in transportation costs by reducing transportation distances.

Never has any area so thoroughly exemplified the need for coordinated highway, railway, and waterway transportation as has the area under consideration. Although this area is interlaced with highways and railways in all directions, it is still so far from the industrial, commercial, agricultural, and other development and enrichment of which it is capable—a development which the addition of water transport will bring about—as to demonstrate beyond question the need of the proposed improvement.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, first I want to express my appreciation for the remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], whose service in this body and membership on the Commerce Committee have extended over many years, and is outstanding. It seems to me that the fairness of his talk and the fine analysis he has made of the project should appeal to all Senators.

Some years ago I had occasion to visit the area in which the Tombigbee project would be constructed. I remember that several of the leading citizens of one of the counties in which the project is to be located took me out early one morning so I could view the possibilities first-hand. Later I attended the hearings before the committees which gave consideration to this project. From the beginning this project has appealed to me, and its merit has been pronounced.

Mr. President, if the Senate should eliminate this project, such action would practically mean the end of the development of water transportation in this country. I am not unaware that there are those who would like to terminate the policy of improving our rivers. On the other hand, many countries have made great progress in the improvement of their waterways, adding to their fine systems of transportation.

As I listen to the speeches on the subject I recall that many years ago the House had before it a proposal directed toward the determination of some site in the United States where nitrates for use in time of war and for agricultural purposes in peacetime could be made.

They finally selected Muscle Shoals, which they agreed was the most ideal place in the United States for the manufacture of nitrates. Experimentation is now going forward there in connection with the generation of power produced at the dam.

I am not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I know little about military preparedness, but I sat in a conference the other night, and from what I heard there I was convinced that one of the things we will need, if we should ever be swept into war, is nitrates for powder purposes. I see before me the distinguished Senator who is chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the military appropriation bills. He heard the same statements, and I am sure he was impressed, as were all who were present, with the fact that the time may come—God knows I hope it will not—when Muscle Shoals could be utilized to make nitrates for powder purposes. The canal now being considered would in such event be of great value because of its national-defense aspects.

I am sure the Senator's references to the natural resources of this section, the benefits which would accrue from the completion of this project, and the recommendations in its behalf should appeal to the Senate. If the motion to strike it out prevails, we might as well make up our minds that future appropriations will not be made to improve this country's great waterways.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before asking for a quorum, I ask for an order for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Texas has just suggested to me that this is a committee amendment. I understood the Senator from Michigan to make a motion to strike it out.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I made no motion. The vote is on the committee amendment, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the committee amendment will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 9, after line 23, on which the yeas and nays are requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Now I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark, Mo.	Lee	Russell
Austin	Danaher	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Donahey	Lucas	Sheppard
Bankhead	Ellender	Lundeen	Shipstead
Barbour	Frazier	McKellar	Slattery
Barkley	George	McNary	Smathers
Bilbo	Gerry	Maloney	Smith
Bone	Glass	Mead	Stewart
Bridges	Green	Miller	Taft
Brown	Gurney	Minton	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Hale	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Harrison	Norris	Thomas, Utah

Capper	Hughes	Overton	Vandenberg
Caraway	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Van Nuys
Chandler	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	White
Chavez	King	Reed	Wiley
Clark, Idaho	La Follette	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the committee amendment on page 9, after line 23, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERTON (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If the Senator from Maryland were present he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who, if present, would vote "nay." Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My colleague [Mr. HILL] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the pair on this question of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who, if present, would vote "yea," with the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], who, if present, would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who would vote "nay" if present, is necessarily absent.

My colleague [Mr. GIBSON] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained from the Senate on public business.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are detained in various Government departments.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is conducting hearings in New York for the Committee on Banking and Currency, and is, therefore, necessarily absent.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are attending committee meetings and are unable to be present.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is absent on official business. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 56, as follows:

YEAS—17

Bankhead	Hayden	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Hughes	Pepper	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Lee	Pittman
Caraway	McNary	Reynolds

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 10, after line 3, to insert:

Bayou La Batre, Ala.; House Document No. 281, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 8, after the name "House", to strike out "Document No. 258" and insert "Documents Nos. 258 and 326", so as to read:

Biloxi Harbor, Miss.; House Documents Nos. 258 and 326; Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 19, to strike out:

Buffalo Bayou and its tributaries, Texas; the project set forth in House Document No. 456, Seventy-fifth Congress, and authorized by Public, No. 685, Seventy-fifth Congress, is hereby modified in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of Public, No. 761, Seventy-fifth Congress, and all requirements of local cooperation inconsistent with said section 2 are hereby eliminated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 2, to strike out:

Guadalupe River, Tex.; House Document No. 247, Seventy-sixth Congress: Provided, That whenever any power project, not under Federal license, is benefited by the Canyon Reservoir project, the Federal Power Commission, after notice to the owner or owners of such unlicensed project and after opportunity for hearing, shall determine and fix a reasonable and equitable annual charge to be paid to the United States on account of such benefits by said owner or owners or other recipients of such benefits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 11, to insert:

Chocolate Bayou, Bastrop Bayou, and Oyster Creek, Tex., House Document No. 337, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 14, to insert:

Lavaca and Navidad Rivers, Tex.; House Document No. 314, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 16, to insert:

Channel from the Louisiana and Texas intracoastal waterway to Barroom Bay, Tex.; House Document No. 428, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 19, to insert:

Brazos Island Harbor, Tex.; House Document No. 335, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 12, to insert:

Mississippi River between Missouri River and Minneapolis: The construction of lock and dam No. 26 at Alton, Ill., is hereby declared to be in accord with the project authorized by the River and Harbor Act of August 30, 1935.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 6, after the word "and," to strike out "Minneapolis, Minn.; House Documents Nos. 103 and 137" and insert "Minneapolis; House Documents Nos. 103 and 547"; so as to read:

Mississippi River between Missouri River and Minneapolis; House Documents Nos. 103 and 547, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 9, to insert:

Mississippi River between Missouri River and Minneapolis: The existing project is hereby modified to provide for remedial works in accordance with the recommendation of the district engineer in the report submitted in House Document No. 137, Seventy-sixth Congress, and for such remedial works or land acquisitions in any levee or drainage district, with respect to which payments, remedial works, or land acquisitions were recommended in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 34, Seventy-fifth Congress, and authorized by the act of August 26, 1937, as the Chief of Engineers deems advisable, in addition to or in lieu of the payments, remedial works, or land acquisitions so recommended and authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 15, to insert:

Grand Haven Harbor and Grand River, Mich.; House Document No. 661, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 19, to insert:

Sandusky Harbor, Ohio; House Document No. 328, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 2, to insert:

Cape Vincent Harbor, N. Y.; House Document No. 363, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 6, to insert:

Coquille River, Oreg.; House Document No. 672, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 8, to insert:

Umpqua River and Harbor, Oreg.; House Document No. 86, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 10, to insert:

Salmon River, Oreg.; House Document No. 551, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 12, to insert:

Baker Bay, Columbia River, Wash.; House Document No. 443, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 14, to insert:

Willamette River, Oreg.; the construction of the new Willamette Falls lock and navigation works in accordance with the plan submitted in House Document No. 544, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 18, to insert:

Columbia River at Bonneville, Oreg.: The Secretary of War is authorized to acquire lands and provide facilities to replace Indian fishing grounds submerged or destroyed as a result of the construction of Bonneville Dam: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 may be expended for this purpose from funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated: Provided further, That such lands and facilities shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Interior for the use and benefit of the Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 8, to insert:

Columbia River, Oreg. and Wash.; the construction of the Umatilla Dam; House Document No. 704, Seventy-fifth Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chandler	Hayden	Neely
Austin	Chavez	Hughes	Norris
Bailey	Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Calif.	Nye
Bankhead	Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, when the bill was under consideration in the Committee on Commerce I had an experience which it never occurred to me I would have in the Senate of the United States. I have been an advocate of waterway development all my life. I am still an advocate of waterway development all over the United States. I would much prefer to take some of the available funds—if there are any available funds during a state of national financial emergency such as exists today—and spend them on waterway development and flood-control development, even on power development, than to spend them on the program for national defense being put through the Congress which I regard as extravagant. But we confront today a situation in which this body represents only one-third of the legislative power. The House of Representatives represents one-third, the Senate of the United States represents another third, and the President, through his veto power, represents another third.

The Committee on Commerce was notified officially by the President of the United States, not through a message to Congress, because that was not the way we sought, but nevertheless officially, that he did not wish to have a river and harbor bill passed at this session of the Congress. I think any Member of the Senate who has served with me for any length of time will agree that I have never been intimidated by a recommendation from the President of the United States on a question of principle, and I have never been afraid to vote for a bill which I thought was right because of the fear of a Presidential veto. On the other hand, taking into consideration the legislative situation, we had a bill before us which had been passed by the House of Representatives, and which had come to us, involving some eighty-odd million dollars, which had been loaded down by the Senate Committee on Commerce with over $200,000,000 more, to such an extent that at the request of the Committee on Commerce itself it was recommitted to the committee. Then we had this communication, through the authorized representatives of the committee itself, from the President of the United States, who advised us of his wish that we not pass any river and harbor bill at all.

Mr. President, I think we should pass a river and harbor bill at the present session of the Congress. Personally I thought we might very well have diverted the authorization for another useless battleship—as I see it, because daily experience is proving that battleships are more or less useless—to some constructive work. But since the Congress has deliberately adopted the policy of carrying forward a tremendous program for national defense, I cannot find it in my heart to vote for a bill authorizing an appropriation so large that the President of the United States cannot only veto it but will have the opinion of the country in the United States back of him in vetoing it.

It is for this reason, irrespective of the merits of the Tombigbee proposal, that I would have voted against that. It was by reason of the inclusion of this other very large item, as well as the Tombigbee item, that I voted in the Committee on Commerce against reporting the bill. I felt that if we reported a bill based on the House bill, with everything except strictly navigation projects eliminated, with certain additions made necessary by a consideration of the time element, we could go to the country, even if the President vetoed the bill, without any successful charge that we had violated the economy tenets which we have all so loudly professed.

I also felt that if we added some very large controversial projects—and there were only two, the Tombigbee and the Umatilla Dam—the President would not only veto the bill, but he would have the support of the entire country in vetoing the bill, and when he did that, he would set back for years the cause of waterway development in this country, to which I am very much devoted.

Therefore, Mr. President, as reluctantly as I ever cast a vote in my life, I voted against the inclusion of these two projects in the report of the Committee on Commerce, and I voted against reporting the bill after they were included.

I think the Senate has to look at the situation now in exactly the same way in which the Committee on Commerce had to look at it when the bill was before the committee. We can say that the items included in the bill as it passed the House are necessary projects, and, while I admit freely that they perhaps are not more necessary than other projects, at least they are smaller in amount. They have been agreed to by one branch of the National Legislature. On the other hand, if we start in to add such projects as the Tombigbee, with $66,000,000, and the Umatilla project, I think with $21,000,000, no matter how meritorious—and I am not now discussing the necessity or the merits of the pending amendment—we will have a bill authorizing something over $200,000,000, to be added on top of the terrific load of appropriations we have already made, and the President may not only veto the bill, according to the information which came to the committee officially from the President, but he will be justified by the country in doing it.

If I had had my way, I would have much preferred to give precedence to river and harbor appropriations, to flood-control appropriations, to agricultural appropriations, than to appropriations for the topheavy and unwieldy and unreasonable national-defense program which has been proposed. But I cast a vote in this body, as many another Senator did, in behalf of increased appropriations for agriculture, which I believe to be absolutely necessary, on the theory that we would take them out of the naval and Army expansion program, but we found that we did not have the votes in the Senate to do that, and we have not the votes in the House to do it.

This may be said to be an authorization, but we know that an authorization, as the Senator from Michigan so aptly said this afternoon, is simply the key which unlocks the appropriation door. I do not believe the Senate can pass this bill if there are included these two large items added by the Senate to the House bill, the Tombigbee and the Umatilla Dam projects, without the certainty of a Presidential veto which will be sustained and justified by the country.

Mr. President, for these reasons I shall vote against the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it. The "noes" have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wanted to ask for the yeas and nays, but the decision was made so hurriedly that I did not have an opportunity. I wanted to discuss the matter before a vote was taken. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was rejected be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the Members of the Senate are laboring under a misapprehension concerning the magnitude of the appropriation involved in the pending bill and also in the particular amendment now under consideration. It is true that the able Senator from Missouri opposed the amendment when it was before the Committee on Commerce. It does involve an authorization of $22,700,000. It is not an authorization for a power project. It is peculiarly and singularly a navigation project.

I think it may well be emphasized that the pending bill does not provide a program for 1 year, but provides a 7-year plan. It involves an authorization of $33,000,000 a year only, over a period of 7 years, making a total of $231,000,000.

In the number of years I have been in the Senate and a member of the Committee on Commerce I do not recall any authorization bill that was for a lesser amount than that involved in the pending bill.

It is inconceivable to me that anyone would support great military or naval bills, such as the one we had before us a few days ago, which carried nearly a billion dollars, and not be willing to vote to appropriate a few million dollars to make it possible for great naval vessels, as well as vessels of commerce, to enter our ports.

Mr. President, there is no factor in national defense more important than river and harbor navigation and improvement. I cannot see what use we can have for cruisers and battleships—by the way, 10 are authorized—unless we have harbors as places of safety for our battleships and for our cruisers, as well as for smaller craft.

I cannot understand the philosophy which would approve an appropriation of practically $1,000,000,000 for naval vessels and reject an expenditure of $33,000,000 to provide a rest, a haven, and a home for those ships. This is the smallest authorization bill that has been presented in many years for the improvement of our great harbors. When we take the total authorization of $231,000,000 and divide it by seven, we have exactly $33,000,000, which is all that can be expended in any one year, because a proposal to appropriate any sum in excess of that would, under the rules of the Senate, be subject to a point of order.

Mr. President, I supported the amendment of the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] providing for the development of the Tombigbee, because I thought the project would be beneficial and helpful to the South. It carried an authorization of $66,000,000. The amendment I now advocate, which was adopted by the Commerce Committee, authorizes the sum of $22,700,000, which I think probably is next to the largest authorization item in the bill.

This project has had the careful study of the local engineer, the district engineer, and the division engineer for a period of a good many years. It came before the Board of Engineers of the Army and was approved without a dissenting voice. It came before the Chief of Engineers and was approved by him. It was also approved by the National Resources Board. It came before the Senate Commerce Committee and was adopted by it. I must now tell the whole story. It came before the House last year, and on a tellers' vote was defeated by three or four votes. It was defeated because it was misconceived as a power project. At that time a survey had been made which declared it to be a power project costing $177,000,000, a very large sum. In view of the Grand Coulee project and the Bonneville project, I thought it was not wise to start another power development in the Northwest. Therefore I suggested to one of the Representatives from that great section of the country that a new survey be made and obtained from the Commerce Committee a resolution asking the Board of Engineers to make a new survey. The survey was made, and out of that came this proposition for navigation development, at the cost of $22,700,000.

Mr. President, I would not ask for this item if I did not think the project would be of great value to that section of the country, where is located so much Government-owned property, upon which no taxes are paid, which is wholly untaxable, and which does not support the surrounding communities.

The Columbia River has been developed largely—probably more generously than any other river in America—at the cost of the ports along the river. It has a 35-foot channel at Portland, Oreg. Since the development of the Bonneville Dam it will have a channel depth of 27 feet, which will take care of the coastwise vessels. There navigation practically ends, because of the Umatilla project, a stretch in this great river of about 14 miles, where the water flows so swiftly that it is infeasible to navigate the stream.

The Board of Engineers of the Army, and those who surveyed the project, and the people of that great section, know that if the Umatilla dam is constructed it will quiet the waters in that pool, indeed, it will submerge the pool, and the river will be navigable up to Lewiston, Idaho, a distance of 500 miles from the sea. That is the farthest hinterland distance of any navigable river save the Mississippi. That will give to the farmers having bulk production, such as wool in the bale and in the grease, wheat, livestock, and minerals, access to the deep water, where the heavy products may be taken to the markets of the world by tramp vessels. It will save the farmers, the producers in eastern Oregon, and Washington, and Idaho, and parts of Montana and Wyoming, vast sums in freight rates.

It is true, Mr. President, that transcontinental lines skirt that section in part, and enter other parts, so that the freight in question has transportation available by reason of these transcontinental railway lines. I have not received one letter from a single railroad company or from an employee of a railroad company opposing this project because of a fear that it will take freight from the railroads or will create unemployment. Quite to the contrary, in all the years I have advocated this project, I had not yet heard of any opposition until opposition appeared on the floor of the Senate today, and I am sure that opposition was due to the lack of knowledge of the merits of this great project.

The bulk trade, Mr. President, will go down the river. The railroads realize that on this short haul there is no profit in this trade. The finished products will bring profit to the railroads, and it is that trade which they covet. The project has the great and singular virtue of giving a larger income to the people who live in that section, some of which is arid or semiarid, by affording means of navigation.

Another and impelling reason for the development of the project in question is the construction of the new Grand Coulee project in Washington. That project is conceived largely for the purpose of irrigating land—1,250,000 acres of land will be irrigable under it. The only possible, feasible, or practical outlet for the freight arising from the development of that land is down the Columbia River. The only way the settlers there, who must acquire public domain from the Federal Government, can dispose of their products is by having easy access to the markets of the world through cheap transportation. The Grand Coulee project is a Government venture; 1,250,000 acres of land owned by the Government are to be watered by the Government by means of power practically owned by the Government. Opening the river to navigation would make it possible for these settlers to return to the Government the amount of money invested in the property. It is my deliberate judgment, if the Government will put up $23,700,000 for the construction of this dam, that the money will be wholly recovered by the Treasury of the United States from the settlers by reason of the lower freight rates which will be made available to them.

Mr. President, I do not wish to urge this matter upon the Senate too stoutly. I know that Senators look at such matters as this from different viewpoints, but I feel that the statement made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was due to a misconception concerning the very great importance that should be attached to this development.

I hope that in these few words I have made clear the value this project will have to that great section of the country—the great Northwest. I repeat, more than one-half of the area of land in that section of the country is owned by the Federal Government.

This project will make possible the operation of vessels carrying freight on the Columbia River from Lewiston, Idaho, to the Pacific Ocean, and then to the markets of the world.

I appeal to the Members of the Senate to give it fair and sympathetic consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I want to say only a word. It has been said several times on the floor today, as though it were an innovation, that these authorizations are to be spent over a period of several years. That is no innovation at all. That is the system under which we have always proceeded. We have a large backlog now of authorizations for river and harbor projects. In the appropriation bill to be considered this year, for river and harbor projects, the navigation projects included in this bill amount to only $68,009,110—that is, according to the Senate bill—which simply means that after authorizations are made, necessarily they may be strung out over a period of years.

The point I make is simply that we should pass a bill which will not too greatly increase the authorizations, and which will be signed by the President.

It is no innovation that the appropriations may be spread over a period of years, because that has been the ordinary practice. We already have hundreds of millions of dollars authorized which have not been expended. Congress appropriates this year only $68,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Purely for information, I have been told that the authorizations heretofore made for river and harbor work, for which no appropriations have been made, amount to several hundred million dollars. I have also been told that about $200,000,000 of the previous authorizations will probably never be appropriated for, because the projects are not now deemed worthy. Does the Senator know how far back any authorization has been made which has not yet received an appropriation?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am unable to inform the Senator from Kentucky as to that. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has some information, which I did not have the opportunity to digest, furnished him by the Chief of Engineers; but I do know, as does every other Senator who has ever paid any attention to the subject, that there is a large backlog of authorizations. Inasmuch as the authorizations may move forward at any time, it is my understanding that it is the position of the President of the United States that he does not want the total of authorizations increased too much at any one time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if it be true that there are authorizations heretofore made which have gone along over a period of years, and for which nobody now seriously considers making an appropriation, it seems to me there ought to be some way to clear the authorized projects off the docket, so that they would not be used as a total for which appropriations might be made in the future. If there is any way to "deauthorize" such projects—if that word may be used—and if they are never to be constructed, it seems to me it is a mistake to carry them from year to year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Undoubtedly some of them have been taken care of in other ways—by P. W. A. authorizations, W. P. A. authorizations, or in some other way. I obtained a rough set of figures from the Senator from Kentucky himself. He gave the figure of $600,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. I stated to the Senator that that figure is not authentic.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the information which has been given to me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I asked the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] about it. He has a set of figures made up on a different basis, showing the backlog at the present moment to be about $159,000,000.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the Senator from North Carolina to state the situation.

Mr. BAILEY. I am in sympathy with the suggestion of the senior Senator from Kentucky that we might go back over a long period of years, ascertain the authorizations which have been made prior to a certain date, and have them stricken out.

The fact of the matter is that authorizations reaching back for 30 or 40 years have been made on condition that local contributions be made. When local contributions have not been paid in, the work has not been done. Those authorizations are largely dead. Inasmuch as there has been considerable discussion as to the amount of authorizations outstanding, I asked the engineers of the War Department yesterday to give me the data; and I shall read them, according to their memorandum.

When the appropriation bill is enacted—

That is, the War Department civil-functions bill, which has passed the Senate—there will be available approximately $135,500,000 authorization for future appropriations to complete work on active authorized river and harbor projects.

That is the figure. Some of the newspapers have stated the figure to be $600,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is meant by "active"? Does that mean projects with respect to which construction has begun?

Mr. BAILEY. No; that means projects which have not been abandoned, projects which are under consideration.

This is the important matter:

This authority—

That is, the $135,500,000—

is less than has existed for many years, and the present bill will restore a reasonable backlog for the operations of the Department.

They must have some picture of the future. They must make their studies. So, instead of lifting the amount above normal, the effect of this bill would be to lift it approximately to normal.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. One further word.

Since the Tombigbee project has been rejected, the bill as it now stands is reduced by $67,000,000. According to my estimate, the figure is now about $150,000,000. That would give us $135,500,000 plus $150,000,000, or $285,500,000. That is well below the normal backlog of river and harbor appropriations authorized for study and preparation by the War Department. Spreading that amount over a 7-year period, it does not call for any great sum by way of annual appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on page 15, after line 8.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Rivers and Harbors of the Commerce Committee, I wish to say that the subcommittee very carefully examined the project to which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] has referred; and I feel that I speak the sentiment of all the membership of the subcommittee when I say that I hope this amendment will be retained in the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from North Carolina that the authorization covers a period of 7 years is, of course, accurate. That is the intention of the Senator from North Carolina. However, after the bill shall have been passed, it will be out of the hands of the Senator from North Carolina, and there would be nothing whatever to prevent the Appropriations Committees of both Houses, into whose hands the matter would come, from appropriating the full amount of the authorization. They would not be limited by the statement that the program contemplated is a 7-year program.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am well aware of that fact. I state my attitude. The Senate may state its attitude. I have much confidence in the Committee on Appropriations. I think we have reason to have even more confidence in the Committee on Appropriations because the Senator from Colorado is such an active member of it. I will trust him, and I think he will trust me; and we can all trust the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand the bill, it provides that no river and harbor authorization bill shall be brought in for 7 years.

Mr. BAILEY. I should not say that, but I shall certainly not ask for one.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am wondering if that is the intention. I assume that it is. I assume that the committee contemplates that if the program is a 7-year program it will not be added to or subtracted from during the 7 years. But how can we bind any future Congress?

Mr. BAILEY. We cannot bind anybody. However, any Senator can bind himself.

Mr. BARKLEY. If future Congresses should undertake to add to the appropriation or appropriate for another 7-year period or increase the 7-year program, they would be perfectly free to do so.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. We can do nothing about future Congresses.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do I correctly understand that the Senator is binding himself as to his future action in the Congress, regardless of whatever necessity may develop; that so far as his vote is concerned there will not be another river and harbor bill for 7 years, either increasing or diminishing the program?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to be bound to a sensible program.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not willing to be bound.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not suggest that the Senator was. However, by courtesy, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce sits with the Committee on Appropriations when river and harbor appropriations are being considered. I take it I shall be chairman of the Commerce Committee for 2 years and 8 months longer, if I live. I shall certainly keep my word to keep this whole matter within the bounds of the program. I shall not ask the Committee on Appropriations to go beyond the figures I have given. I think we must follow some such plan. I do not undertake to bind the Senate, the Senate Committee on Commerce, or the House of Representatives. However, as chairman of the Commerce Committee, I engage to go along with the constructive program which I have put forward. It is the only program which I could support as consistent with my views as to economy, and the necessity for reducing public expenditures.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to say one further word. I do not wish to occupy the attention of the Senate too long; but, as a member of the Commerce Committee, let me say that this is the first time I have ever heard the suggestion made that this bill is to be a binding program for 7 years upon the expenditures of the United States Government with regard to river and harbor improvements. If I believe such a thing as that, I should oppose the bill on entirely different grounds. I do not believe the present Congress can bind any future Congress, or that any Member of Congress has a right to bind himself as to what the necessities of a river and harbor program may be in the next 7 years.

I do not understand that the Commerce Committee ever voted on that question. I do not understand that that question is at all involved in the passage of the bill. Next year, next month, or 2 years from now it may be necessary to change this program. I do not understand that by including items in the bill or excluding items from the bill we are enacting into law a policy with regard to river and harbor improvements for the next 7 years. As a member of the Commerce Committee I wish to repudiate as strongly as I can any suggestion that that idea was ever advanced in the Commerce Committee, because, so far as I know, it was not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that half of the bill consists of surveys contemplating additional appropriations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the Senator for his suggestion.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to discuss the pending amendment. It is now 5 o'clock. Is it the desire of the majority leader that we continue further at this time?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had hoped that we might dispose of the pending amendment and the bill today. If we can remain in session a little later than usual, I think we can do so. What has the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] to say about it?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, we have a reasonable opportunity to finish today, and I shall be very glad to do it. If the Senate is willing to wait a while, I hope we may get through. After this vote is taken, I know of nothing further that is controversial, unless something should arise that we have not considered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire not to be misunderstood. I do not know whether or not it will bring on any controversial discussion, but I have an amendment which at the proper time I desire to offer to the bill. I do not care to discuss it unless the Senator from North Carolina should indicate that he is opposed to it. I am inclined to think he will favor it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have seen the amendment, and I have stated to the Senator from Texas that, so far as I was concerned, I would accept it.

Mr. NORRIS. Then there will be no discussion.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope we can go on and finish the bill tonight; but if we cannot, we can take it up again tomorrow.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire very briefly to discuss the pending amendment. It provides for the construction of a project on the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington. I think the Members of the Senate should appreciate the fact that it is a part of the development of the Columbia River. The Government has undertaken the task of developing that river, not to as great an extent as the Government has undertaken down on the Tennessee River, but, nevertheless, this dam is simply a part of the entire program. The money has been appropriated for the construction of a power dam at Bonneville. The money has been appropriated for the construction of a power and reclamation dam at Grand Coulee. As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] pointed out, if we are to make full use of the money which has been appropriated for the construction of those two projects, in which the Government has an investment many times greater than the amount proposed to be authorized in this project, it is essential that this project be carried forward.

We in the Northwest have a difficult problem in the distribution of our products because of the fact that we are so far away from the markets. We have not an immediate primary market; and to the producers of agricultural products in that section of the country the cost of shipment of agricultural products from the point of production to the ports either on Puget Sound or at the mouth of the Columbia River is a very important element in the cost of distribution. The saving that could be made by the farmers of eastern Washington and of Idaho and of eastern Oregon through the use of the facilities of the Columbia River would make the difference between their securing cost of production for their products or securing less than the cost of production. That saving would make the difference between success and failure so far as a large part of the development of the reclamation project at Grand Coulee is concerned.

This is not some project which is separate and apart from what the Congress has considered prior to this time. It is a very necessary and a very integral part of the development of the Columbia River. It was approved at the end of the Seventy-fifth Congress. It comes before the Senate now as a part of this bill. I do not care to enter into the argument as to whether or not the Commerce Committee can bind Congress or can even bind itself for the next 7 years; but the fact that the chairman of the Commerce Committee presents this program as a 7-year program is at least proof that, so far as he is concerned and so far as other Members of the Senate who agree with that theory are concerned, there will be during the next 7 years a very definite effort to prevent further authorization of projects of this kind.

If the Umatilla Dam project is delayed for a period of 7 years, it will mean that the amount of money which the Government has invested both at Bonneville and at Grand Coulee will be endangered to that extent; and I present it to the Members of the Senate, not as a separate and distinct project but simply as a part of the development of the Columbia River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 15, after line 8, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. CHANDLER'S name was called). The present occupant of the chair has a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. Not knowing how the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote, the present occupant of the chair withholds his note.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (after having voted in the affirmative). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who is absent. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained from the Senate on public business.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are detained in various Government departments.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are attending committee meetings and are unable to be present.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is conducting hearings in New York for the Committee on Banking and Currency, and is therefore necessarily absent.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is absent on official business. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who is detained on public business, has a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] has a pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the pair on this question of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—33

Austin	George	Lundeen	Schwartz
Bailey	Hale	McNary	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Harrison	Miller	Sheppard
Bilbo	Hayden	Norris	Shipstead
Bone	Hughes	Nye	Thomas, Idaho

Barkley	Gillette	Murray	Wagner
Bridges	Guffey	Overton	Walsh
Chandler	Herring	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Chavez	Hill	Thomas, Okla.	White
Davis	Holman	Thomas, Utah

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I intend to vote against the pending bill, because I believe there is more involved in it than meets the eye. I believe we are setting a very dangerous precedent when we start separating navigation, flood control, and power projects, or undertaking to do so. I feel that it is not a good policy to eliminate projects, as we have done this afternoon, merely on the basis of their cost rather than their worthiness, and merely to cut down the amount in the hope of passing the bill, which will set a precedent of passing a measure providing for projects for navigation purposes, without any consideration of flood control at all. If we do that, I dare say it will be difficult if not impossible to pass a power-project bill in the future. If we separate flood control and navigation from power, we set a precedent which, in my opinion, will end Government erection of power projects in this country. I feel that it is the Fuller brush salesman's foot in the door, when we set the precedent of trying to say in a bill, "These projects are navigation projects only."

When we build a dam and impound water, are we able to determine here that such dam is for navigation alone? If we help navigation, do we not help control floods? If we build a dam which impounds sufficient water to produce power, should we say by an act of legislation that it is for navigation only? I do not believe so. I believe that we are making a mistake in undertaking to divide projects into flood control, navigation, and power projects.

In the Committee on Commerce we do not have a subcommittee to deal with power projects alone, we do not have a subcommittee to deal with navigation projects alone. We do have subcommittees dealing with flood control and rivers and harbors. In the House there is a division. In the first bill we considered, the Senate Committee on Commerce included flood-control projects, power projects, and navigation projects in the one bill. The committee asked the subcommittee considering the matter to bring in a bill containing navigation projects only, which the committee undertook to do, and that is the bill now before the Senate.

Today, without rhyme or reason as to the worthiness of the projects, we eliminated those which cost most, and adopted others which very likely are no more worthy than the ones we have eliminated, and it might be possible there are many included which are not so worthy as some we have eliminated today. In my opinion, we have no basis for passing legislation setting the precedent of dividing power from navigation and dividing flood control from navigation. It is all one comprehensive program under which the Government undertakes to correct flood conditions, to prevent floods, to make streams navigable, and as a byproduct of that to produce power for the benefit of the people.

I fear the consequences of this policy. Therefore, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious we cannot conclude consideration of the bill tonight, and I think we might as well suspend at this time.

AMENDMENT OF NATONAL DEFENSE ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3840) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. MINTON, and Mr. GURNEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment and promotion in the Navy.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the following treaties and conventions and submitted reports thereon:

Executive B (76th Cong., 3d sess.) a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Ecuador, signed at Quito on September 22, 1939 (Ex. Rept. No. 1);

Executive C (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a conciliation treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Liberia, signed at Monrovia on August 21, 1939 (Ex. Rept. No. 2);

Executive D (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a supplementary extradition convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, signed at Mexico City on August 16, 1939 (Ex. Rept. No. 3);

Executive E (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States of America and Switzerland, signed at Bern on January 31, 1940 (Ex. Rept. No. 4);

Executive F (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a supplementary extradition convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Guatemala, signed at Guatemala City on February 20, 1940, enlarging and amending the extradition treaty of February 27, 1903, between the two countries (Ex. Rept. No. 5); and Executive G (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a treaty between the United States of America and the Union of South Africa, signed at Washington, April 2, 1940, amending in their application to the Union of South Africa certain provisions of the treaty for the advancement of peace between the United States of America and Great Britain, signed at Washington, September 15, 1914 (Ex. Rept. No. 6).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Guy K. Bard to be United States district judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Leon H. Keyserling to be deputy administrator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters which had been favorably reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations which have been favorably reported are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the Army nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, April 25, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 24, 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1940

The House met at 11:45 o'clock a. m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The reading of the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Pursuant to House Resolution 437, the Chair declares the House to be in recess for the purpose of holding memorial services as arranged by the Committee on Memorials.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

The SPEAKER pro tempore of the House of Representatives (Mr. RAYBURN) presided.

The Chaplain, Dr. Montgomery:

Almighty God unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee, and worthily magnify Thy hold name—Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The eternal God is Thy refuge and underneath are the everlasting arms.

Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth.

Jesus said, I am the resurrection and the life; He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live and whosoever believeth in Me shall never die.

The righteous live forever and the care of them is with the Most High: With His right hand shall He cover them and with His arm shall He shield them.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations, before the mountains were brought forth or ever Thou hast formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting Thou art God. For a thousand years in Thy sight are as yesterday when they are past, and as a watch in the night. Thou carriest them away as with a flood; They are as a sleep; In the morning they are like grass which groweth up; In the evening it is cut down and withereth. So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants, and Thy glory unto their children. And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us and establish the works of our hands upon us; Yea, the works of our hands establish Thou it.

Let not your heart be troubled; believe in God, believe also in Me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you, for I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know. Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way. Jesus saith unto him, I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life.

Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, or tide, or sea.
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For, lo! my own shall come to me.

I stay my haste, I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways
And what is mine shall know my face.

Asleep, awake, by night or day,
The friends I seek are seeking me;
No wind can drive my bark astray,
Nor change the tide of destiny.

What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the future years.
My heart shall reap where it hath sown,
And garner up its fruit of tears.

The stars come nightly to the sky,
The tidal wave unto the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high,
Can keep my own away from me.

Oh, Thou in whose presence our souls take delight, on whom in affliction we call, Thou wert our fathers' God. In the darkness Thou gavest them light, in danger, succor, and in uncertainty, guidance. The light of Thy word was their inspiration, "Be strong and of good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." O let us hear the carol in the clouds, view the rock amid the waves, and see the star in the valley. Lead us, oh, Christ, in the toilsome way of Gethsemane and Calvary, and in all our needs give us strength and grace. Bless Thou the memory of those who have wrought well and passed on. Unto all hearts that are bowed down today, minister unto them the comfort and the consolations of Thy richest blessings.

We are reminded, dear Lord, that our days are swiftly passing by. Yesterday we were not, tomorow we shall be gone. O how changing are the fortunes of life—laughter and tears, melody and lamentation. Mid the fleeing shadows, O may the good angels sing the song of hope in every breast. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

Then followed 1 minute of devotional silence.

Mr. Bill Perry sang The Living God, by Geoffrey O'Hara.

Hon. HARRY P. BEAM, a Representative from the State of Illinois, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS BY HON. HARRY P. BEAM

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, today we assemble in solemn conclave to pay honor and tribute to our dead. No question of state or parliamentary controversy can disturb the tranquility of the occasion as we recall with fond and happy recollection the close and intimate association we enjoyed in the crucible of public service with our departed colleagues, who now rest forever in the calm and peaceful bosom of eternity.

Of all the events in life, death, with its mysterious realism, is the most startling and dramatic. No one can stand in its awful presence and not be moved to a deeper and more abiding solicitude for the rights of our fellow man; nor can one encounter its grim realities without becoming more tolerant, more sympathetic, more understanding of the frailties of human nature and without a deeper conscientious realization of our own imperfection and mortality.

How fleeting is time and how transitory and temporal is the applause of the people or the honors and dignities conferred upon man in the short span of human life. And what a stern realization of that fact have we before us today, as we listen in vain for voices we knew so well to respond to the roll call who but a short yesterday were active participators in the deliberations of our body and wielded vast and far-reaching influence in the formation of the legislative program of the Nation.

Away. We know that tears are vain,
That Death nor heeds nor hears distress:
Will this unteach us to complain?
Or make one mourner weep the less?
And thou, who tellst me to forget,
Thy looks are wan, thine eyes are wet.

Our colleagues whose untimely passing we commemorate today were privileged to serve their country during some of the most crucial and fateful years in the history of the Republic.

During their official service as Members of the Congress of the United States they viewed with alarm and deep concern the grave uncertainty and distress which engulfed the citizenship of our land. During those early days of the depression they observed their fellow citizens in mass formation storm the very doors of the Nation's Captol, demanding food and shelter for themselves and for their families. They witnessed the bankruptcy of agriculture, the prostration of business, the failure of thousands of banking institutions throughout the land, the foreclosure of countless homes and farms, the sorry and desperate plight of the wage earner and the farmer, and the prevailing fear and trepidation which seemed to strike at the very heart and sinews of our American national life.

Our departed colleagues, with undismayed courage and a high conception of American statesmanship faced their grave responsibility and contributed generously and unreservedly of their sagacious counsel, and their profound knowledge and wisdom, in devising ways and means to remedy these oppressing conditions and to relieve the circumstances which were well-nigh overwhelming the moral courage and grim fortitude of our people.

They were active participators in the great emergency program to revive agriculture, to furnish governmental aid, and financial assistance to business and industry, and to restore confidence and security in our banking system. They actively assisted in the enactment of laws to alleviate the suffering of our citizens and were contributors to all social legislation for the welfare of the poor and underprivileged of our land.

Our departed colleagues were privileged to serve in the Congress of the United States during the rise of the "dictators" and witnessed the tremendous growth of the nefarious doctrines of communism and nazi-ism, and saw them become the dominant policy and religion, so to speak, of countless numbers of heretofore God-fearing men and women of great nations of the world.

They observed in their lifetime the war clouds again hover over the nations of Europe, threatening to engulf the entire world once more in conflagration. They witnessed the march of the highly mechanized and modernized armies of the dictators against countries ill-equipped for war, and by fire and sword saw them conquer and destroy nations, subject their citizens to a lifetime of sorrow and misery, and bury forever the last vistage of hope for liberty and freedom for untold millions of human beings.

Robert Ingersoll, appearing before the tomb of Napoleon, expressed himself in the following words:

I would rather have been a French peasant and worn wooden shoes. I would rather have lived in a hut with a vine growing over the door, and the grapes growing purple in the amorous kisses of the autumn sun. I would rather have been that poor peasant, with my loving wife by my side, knitting as the day died out of the sky, with my children upon my knees and their arms about me. I would rather have been that man, and gone down to the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust, than to have been that imperial impersonation of force and murder, known as Napoleon the Great.

I pause and wonder, my fellow colleagues, when at some time in the future, when these dictators who have caused the pangs of war to again cloud the happiness and peace of the world are summoned to embark on that fateful voyage, from which no traveler returneth, what complacency of thought, what peace of mind and heart can be theirs. When the very shrouds which enwrap their cold and lifeless clay shall be drenched with the blood and tears of countless numbers of human beings, decreed by them to a vale of misery, suffering, famine, pestilence, and death.

The garlands wither on your brow;
Then boast no more your mighty deeds;
Upon death's purple altar now
See where the victor—victim bleeds;
Your heads must come
To the cold tomb;
Only the actions of the just Smell sweet, and blossom in their dust.

What a sad commentary of fate that in this age of enlightenment, of intellectual development, of cultural advancement, and of great scientific discoveries—all for the happiness and betterment of mankind—that the people of the world should again be plunged into the horrors and terrors of war, with all the resulting suffering and misery therein entailed.

From the sad plight and appalling despair of these unfortunate nations, let us resolve that, from the hallowed ashes of our departed colleagues, never again shall we vote to plunge America into a foreign holocaust of war, or ever again consecrate any foreign soil with the lifeblood of our American youth, to save or preserve the integrity of any foreign monarchy, dynasty, or power.

America will fight only for America, and to keep inviolate our priceless heritage of liberty and freedom, and the preservation of our democratic form of government.

These were the ideals, my fellow citizens, our departed colleagues cherished and sustained in their lifetime, and for the love of which they nobly laid down their lives. As distinguished Members of Congress, they served their country loyally and well, and carved their names high in the annals of American statesmanship. They enjoyed the love and affection of their fellow citizens, and the respect and esteem of their fellow Members of Congress. They have left to their loved ones, and to the Nation, a noble heritage of honor and glory upon the altar of public service.

This is the last time the names of our departed colleagues will ever be officially called from the floor of the Congress of the United States. No more shall we disturb the tranquillity of their slumber; no more shall we derange the peace and calm of their repose; but, with the hallowed love and enduring affection of the Congress of the United States, and the entire Nation, we reconsecrate their tombs with the fervent hopes and prayers of all America that from their noble and revered spirits we may rededicate our efforts to keep aglow the torch of liberty and freedom they so valiantly and patriotically carried in the service of their country, and which they now pass on to us, unsullied and undefiled.

Their love of country, their ardor and devotion to their Nation's welfare, their nobility of character have forever enshrined their memory in a diadem of perpetual light, which will glow, with ever-increasing splendor, in the hearts of their fellow countrymen, long after monuments of granite and stone have crumbled into dust and decay; and so, with all our heartfelt affection, compassion, and reverence, we fondly say, "Farewell, our beloved colleagues; farewell forever":

Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee;
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant, o'er our fears,
Are all with thee, are all with thee.

Mr. Bill Perry sang Then Shall the Righteous Shine Forth (Felix Mendelssohn).

Hon. ROY O. WOODRUFF, a Representative from the State of Michigan, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS BY HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF, OF MICHIGAN

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, again there has come that day which we dedicate to our colleagues who have crossed over to that mystic realm from which no traveler returns.

Our hearts, of course, are full of thoughts which cannot be expressed in words, and of feelings which we do not even wish to voice here.

The passing of a colleague brings to each and every one of us not only grief at the severing of associations but a somber pondering on the meaning of this enigma of human existence. The mortal sense of life would make of man little more than the grass of the fields, flourishing for a brief season, and then withering away. Compared to eternity the human span is but a twinkling. We are apt to forget that billions of individuals have come and gone; millions who are now living will, in no great stretch of time, join the silent majority.

One may well wonder sometimes whether we take ourselves too seriously on this tiny grain of sand whirling through space in the company of millions of other planets, making up the galaxies of the universe. When we stop to realize by what a narrow margin we cling to that which we call life, we wonder not that some of our colleagues have gone from us, but that more have not gone.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, there is more to life than death. It is inconceivable in logic that those who have toiled here with us, that those who gave of their best to the cause of government, that those who lived and studied and worked and planned for the welfare of their country, their fellow men, and their more immediate loved ones should cease to be when the shadow of death descended over them.

There is no possible human logic to justify any conclusion that death ends the activity of those we have known and loved. An all-powerful, all-wise, all-loving ever-present Creative Intelligence would fulfill no purpose in creating human identities to be born to work, and strive, and laugh, and cry for a brief, fevered instant on this earth, only to pass out and to return to a state of nonbeing. That would be like a child building up a mound of sand but to sweep it away the next instant.

Every tenet of religious faith, every tenet of philosophy, every tenet of logic, every tenet of human hope bids us to be of good cheer because our colleagues, having passed beyond our ken, are not forever blotted out but live on and work on.

None can explain the mystery of death. We can hope. None can reason how or why our colleagues should have been called, except that that is the way of the flesh. But there is vast consolation, Mr. Speaker, in the hope and the faith that our colleagues, somewhere, in some happier realm, labor on, rising ever upward in their striving to attain truth.

So, instead of grieving, I think we can find it in our hearts today to be grateful to infinite love that we were permitted to know our colleagues, to be associated with them, to work with them, and to cherish their memories as we hope those left behind when we go will cherish memories of us.

That great philosopher, that kindly gentleman, that able Justice of the Supreme Court, the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, once put into words the hope and the faith that I would voice to you here today. Said he:

I was walking homeward on Pennsylvania Avenue near the Treasury, and as I looked beyond Sherman's statue to the west the sky was aflame with scarlet and crimson from the setting sun. But, like the note of downfall in Wagner's opera, below the skyline there came from little globes the pallid discord of electric lights, and I thought to myself the Gotterdammerung will end, and from those globes clustered like evil eggs will come the new masters of the sky. It is like the time in which we live. But, then, I remembered the faith that I partly have expressed, faith in a universe not measured by our fears, a universe that has thought, and more than thought, inside of it, and as I gazed, after the sunset, and above the electric lights, there shone the stars.

And something else that great jurist said I want to repeat to you. It was this:

I think it not improbable that man, like the grub that prepares a chamber for the winged thing it has never seen but is to be—that man may have cosmic destinies that he does not understand. And so beyond the vision of battling races and an impoverished earth I catch a dreaming glimpse of peace.

Who is to say that out of the depth of his wisdom, gained from his lifelong study of profound truths, Oliver Wendell Holmes may not have been right—that man may have cosmic destinies he does not understand. And so beyond the vision of battling races and an impoverished earth we may catch a dreaming glimpse of peace.

It is this beautiful star of human hope, shining above the pallid glare of earth's electric lights, in the blue sky of a universe in which there is thought, and more than thought, that carries us through the storms and the stresses and the sorrows and the sicknesses, and enables us to bear the thought of the parting at death.

It seems to be, Mr. Speaker, the common fate of kings and beggars, of just and unjust, of saint and sinner, that each of us shall sometime embark upon that journey from earth to the far yonder shores of an unknown eternity.

If we believe that death is the end of those personalities whom we have known and loved as our colleagues, then, indeed, is death a truly dreadful event. If, however, we are to believe that those who have preceded us on that mystical journey, clinging to the hand of the Saviour, consciously trusting in the infinite love of the Creator, are going on to other tasks—higher tasks, mayhap—then death is not the end, but the beginning of life.

So, then, as our hearts today are sad, as our thoughts are somber, as we find in our breasts an aching longing for the touch of hands that have vanished and the sound of voices now stilled, it is rather because of our own loneliness that we grieve, the loss of championship and association that we miss, than for any fear or any belief that our departed and beloved colleagues have been blotted out, or condemned to some oblivion.

Why, Mr. Speaker, what would be the purpose of life, what would be the use of this human struggle, what would be the use of our efforts, what purpose would we serve by our tears or our smiles, if the grave were the end of it all? Ah, no, life is eternal. We must progress onward and upward until we become more aware of that image and likeness in which we are created.

And, so, Mr. Speaker, let us be firm in the hope; let us find comfort in the thought, that our dear departed colleagues have moved further along toward their comsic destinies which they may not understand, and, as Holmes so beautifully said, beyond the vision of battling races and an impoverished earth, that they have realized that peace of which we here may catch but a dreaming glimpse.

Mr. Thomas L. Thomas sang The Old Rugged Cross, by Bennard.

Mr. Winfred Kemp, principal musician, United States Marine Band Orchestra, sounded taps.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., pronounced the benediction:

The Lord bless you and keep you; the Lord make His face to shine upon you and be gracious unto you; the Lord lift up His countenance upon you and give you peace, both now and evermore. Amen.

AFTER RECESS

At the conclusion of the recess the Speaker pro tempore called the House to order, and then, pursuant to House Resolution 437, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, declared the House adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, April 25, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds Thursday, April 25, 1940, at 10 a. m., for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 487. Important. The hearings will be held in room 1501, New House Office Building.

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 25, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 24, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, our eternal light, our refuge in all generations: We thank Thee for the revelation of Thy power so unimaginably great, greater than our failure or our sin, but, most of all, we bless Thee for the love which all our folly cannot tire, the love that ne'er despairs of us, that thinketh on us only for our good. If it be that any of us have grown weary with the heat and burden of the day, be Thou our strength and comfort now and lead us where the quiet waters flow, that our souls may be refreshed ere we enter upon the duties of another day.

Shed light upon the problems that perplex our minds; breathe on us Thy gracious power, O Spirit of the living God; come to us as a rushing, mighty wind, scattering the mists of doubt, sweeping aside the fears that have held us in captivity, searching deep within us, that, to the very core of self, we may be clean. And as we long for fellowship with Thee, give us a new gentleness and grace, that in the Master's spirit we may long for fellowship with all mankind, by which alone the habitations of violence may be destroyed and all human misery melt away before the rising of the Sun of Righteousness. We ask it in His name and for His sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Wednesday, April 24, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is conducting hearings in New York for the Committee on Banking and Currency, and is, therefore, necessarily absent.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on yesterday evening an article appeared in the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald under the byline of Mr. William K. Hutchinson. The headlines of the article are:

Allies must take Norway soon to win war—PITTMAN sees Hitler victory if he can't be driven out in 30 days.

Again the same article contains this statement:

PITTMAN was asked whether he found his views were shared by other administration authorities on international affairs. He said: "Yes; most of our statesmen view the situation as I do. We are not going into this war. Our people, our Congress, and our President are determined to take no part in it."

Here is the first statement in the article, a statement which was telegraphed not only throughout this country but throughout Europe—

The Allies must drive the German Army out of Norway within 30 days or face the inevitable loss of their war with Hitler. Senator KEY PITTMAN, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, declared today.

So as to be short in the matter, I will state that that is absolutely false. In the first place, I made no statement to Mr. Hutchinson on yesterday or any other day. Mr. Hutchinson met me as I came out of the Senate dining room yesterday, said he understood I had made a speech in Nevada on foreign matters, and asked me if he could have a copy of the speech. I told him I had only one copy, but he might go to my office and read it. I came on the floor of the Senate, and, after about an hour, went down to my office. Mr. Hutchinson was sitting in the main office with my secretaries. I asked him if he had the speech, and he said "Yes"; it was in front of him. He asked me if he could paraphrase it. I said, "You can paraphrase anything you want to, but do not put it in quotation marks." That was all the conversation I had with him.

To show the duplicity of this writer, he says, in one part of the article:

Of the Allied hopes of victory, PITTMAN said:

This is in quotation marks:

"Unless the Allies can chase the German Army out of Norway, it will be almost impossible for them to win the war. And they must do it within 30 days."

There is not a word of that character in the speech, and the speech is all he had to go by. But to show how he exposes himself, a little later on in the article he paraphrases two or three paragraphs, and this is his paraphrase:

> Such an eventuality would almost destroy the prestige of Britain and France. It probably would force all the Balkan states into submission to Hitler.
> However, I do not believe that Germany will be able to hold Norway.
> I am satisfied that Mr. Winston Churchill (chief British war lord) fully realizes the necessity of driving the German forces out of Norway. And I believe the Allies can and will do that within 30 days. If I am right, then Sweden is saved, and Hitler will be greatly weakened in prestige at home and abroad.

That is a paraphrase of two paragraphs in the speech. It is almost identical with what I said. At the time he wrote the first paragraph I have read he had the speech before him, including these two paragraphs, which absolutely disprove the statement made in the first part of the article.

Furthermore, in his anxiety to have headlines, whether the headlines be true or not, he wanted to ring in the administration on this matter. As a matter of fact, at one place in the speech I made this statement:

> While most of our statesmen undoubtedly view the situation in Europe as I do, nevertheless our people and our Congress, and our President, are determined to take no part in that war.

He takes a part of that sentence, and this is the way he uses it:

> PITTMAN was asked whether he found his views were shared by other administration authorities on international affairs. He said: "Yes; most of our statesmen view the situation as I do."

He put quotation marks around that sentence. He knew the word "Yes" did not belong there. He took only a part of the sentence which is correct:

> Most of our statesmen view the situation as I do.

That in itself is a paraphrase; but he adds the word "Yes" to it. The idea of the word "Yes" being in a speech in any such connection—and all he had before him was the speech.

It was a subterfuge, a cunning thing, to put the word "Yes" in there with the rest of the sentence from my speech, so as to give affirmation to his assertion that there were others in the administration who had the same view.

Mr. President, I would not pay much attention to a matter of this kind except that the maliciousness of it is apparent. I have known Mr. Hutchinson for 28 years. I considered him a reputable newspaperman. I felt perfectly safe in handing to him a written speech; and when he said he might want to paraphrase it, I took the precaution to say, "I do not want you to put your paraphrase in quotation marks." He has done that, nevertheless. But when we have in this country a writer who can write under his own name, who has reached the point where he is the manager, I understand, of the International News Service, what he says is supposed to be given some credence. The first statement he wrote, however, is not sustained by a word in my speech. It is not sustained by the very language of the speech which he paraphrased.

Think of such a statement as this:

> The Allies must drive the German Army out of Norway within 30 days or face the inevitable loss of their war with Hitler, Senator KEY PITTMAN, chairman of the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee, declared today.

That statement has been telegraphed all over the world. Last night I heard a foreign commentator quote it, and continue with considerable criticism of me. I do not feel that Members of this body should acquiesce in any such misrepresentation of fact. I very much regret that I have to criticize a reporter who has been in the Senate Press Gallery for so many years. I think, though, it is a reflection upon the Senate Press Gallery just as much as upon the United States Senate. The whole article demonstrates a deliberate intention to falsify the record. There is nothing else to it.

I shall put this entire article in the RECORD at the end of my remarks. All it is necessary to do is to read it, and it will be seen that the writer contradicts himself straight through. He could not stand for that falsehood at the start without putting in a part of the speech, the part of the speech which he paraphrased; and even the part of the speech which he paraphrased absolutely contradicts the opening of his article. Instead of saying that the Allies had to chase the Germans out of Norway within 30 days, what I said was that I believed the Allies would do it within 30 days.

This article was evidently written with the intention of giving encouragement to Hitler. Let me read a few lines from my speech to see whether I had any intention of giving encouragement to Hitler. This is the speech that the writer of the article had before him and which he partially paraphrased:

> Now, let us remember that there is no danger to the United States while the European war is in progress. When the war ends, if it be through a victory by Hitler, or by the totalitarian powers, then there will arise immediately a threat to the peace and safety of the United States through South America, Central America, and Mexico. The same threat would not exist if Great Britain and France are the victors. Great Britain has vast colonies and cares little for more possessions. It is to her interest to maintain the independence of neutrals so that she may have free trade and commerce with them. It is by reason of this British policy that the British Navy, since 1812, has not been a threat to the United States. Having no cause to fear the British Navy, the duty has not been imposed upon us of maintaining a dominant Navy. While most of our statesmen undoubtedly view the situation in Europe as I do, nevertheless our people and our Congress, and our President, are determined to take no part in that war. It would be less burdensome and less dangerous to provide a Navy that could protect the American hemisphere against any attack than it would be to maintain a constant protectorate over Great Britain and France. To do that would permanently involve us in the turmoils of Europe.

On yesterday afternoon, fortunately, I asked the Senate to publish this speech in full in the RECORD, and in doing so I made this statement:

> Some excerpts from that address have been published. I fear that a wrong construction will be placed upon the entire address unless its full text appears. Therefore, so that there may be no misunderstanding, I ask unanimous consent that the address, in full, may be published in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks.

I think it is fortunate that I made that request, considering the fact that this article was published yesterday and was telegraphed all over the world. If anyone can find anywhere in the speech anything which justifies the statements made in that article, I have not been able to find it. Remember, that speech is all the writer of the article had before him. There was no interview—not the slightest. Some of his force asked for an interview on the speech the day before, and I told them the address spoke for itself; they could copy what they wanted from the address.

I hope some publicity will be given to this denial. I doubt it, however. I have never known a libel to be adequately answered. Last night, as I have said, commentators from abroad ridiculed me because it was alleged that I had stated that the Allies would lose the war unless the Germans were chased out of Norway within 30 days. There is nothing in the speech which justifies any such assertion as that. There is nothing in the speech which justifies this alleged quotation:

> Unless the Allies can chase the German army out of Norway it will be almost impossible for them to win this war. And they must do it within 30 days.

That statement is placed in quotation marks. No such statement was ever made by me anywhere, at any time. What I did say is in the speech which is printed in yesterday's RECORD; and even in paraphrasing some of the speech the writer of the article places in the paraphrase the statement with regard to "30 days." I said I believed the Allies would drive the Germans out of Norway within 30 days; but he takes the "30 days" and jumbles up the whole matter for the purpose of telling the world, and particularly Germany, that I have given it as my opinion that unless the Germans are driven out of Norway within 30 days, Hitler will have won the war.

That statement is not only absurd, but it is vicious. There is no justification on earth for it. Then think of placing the word "yes" in one of my sentences, so as to make it appear that I said that the administration authorities on international affairs were in accord with my view. There is not a suggestion of that kind in the speech. It is merely a little trick of making a declaration and starting one of my sentences with the word "Yes."

I realize that there is nothing else I can do about the matter. I simply have to suffer from the libel. No answer can be made effective, but at least the Senate will understand from reading my speech and reading the article that the statement in the article is a deliberate deception. It is an outrageous deception, not only a deception on the people of this country, but a deception on the world, to make any such announcement.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to have the Senator express himself, if he will, on what he considers the real motive back of this distortion of a statement involving a very grave situation.

Mr. PITTMAN. I would have to guess at it. I have been told that Mr. Hutchinson is one of the old-line reporters who seeks headlines—that he wants something startling. I do not know in regard to that. It is very hard to tell why he did this. I do not know what his personal motives were. I know that it is obvious from his article that he knew he was speaking a falsehood when he made the statement that I said that the Allies would lose the war if they did not drive the Germans out of Norway in 30 days. I know that to be a fact.

I think it is the most despicable piece of news writing I have witnessed since I have been in the Senate. It may be because Mr. Hutchinson was in the newspaper business before I came into the Senate, I do not know; but it is certainly an outrage. And I have no remedy. I am not seeking any remedy further than to correct these falsehoods. That is all I can do. I can correct them so far as the Senate is concerned, and possibly some of the foreign missions in Washington may have an opportunity to see this statement. It may put them on guard. I regret that I have to criticise Mr. Hutchinson. I have been friendly with him. I had absolute confidence in him. I cannot have confidence in him any more, because I know that he knew the statements he was giving out were false.

I think that in the 28 years I have been in the Senate this is one of the few times I have been misrepresented in the press. I believe we have in the Senate press gallery one of the ablest and one of the most loyal groups of reporters to be found anywhere in the country. I talk very freely to the members of the press gallery who call on me, and in their stories of the thousands of different statements I have made at their request, I have yet to see one statement that was false.

Mr. President, I ask leave to publish Mr. Hutchinson's whole article at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of April 24, 1940]

"ALLIES MUST TAKE NORWAY SOON TO WIN WAR"—PITTMAN SEES HITLER VICTORY IF HE CAN'T BE DRIVEN OUT IN 30 DAYS

(By William K. Hutchison)

The Allies must drive the German Army out of Norway within 30 days or face the inevitable loss of their war with Hitler, Senator KEY PITTMAN, chairman of the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee, declared today.

Pittman, in an interview, said that though he spoke as a "non-military expert," his opinion was shared by a majority of administration authorities.

FEARS NAZI EXPANSION

PITTMAN expressed the deepest conviction that the United States would not be drawn into the second World War. If it ends, however, in a German victory, he believes the United States may be confronted with Nazi threats to the security of Central and South America.

"But," he declared, "you may tell the mothers and fathers of our country that they need not worry about their sons—the United States will stay out of this war."

Of the allied hopes of victory, PITTMAN said:

"Unless the Allies can chase the German Army out of Norway, it will be almost impossible for them to win this war. And they must do it within 30 days."

HITLER OUTWITS ALLIES

Asked what he thought of Hitler's maneuvers since Munich, PITTMAN replied:

"It appears to me Hitler has outgeneraled the British and French. Of course, the war is in its infancy and conditions may change rapidly."

PITTMAN declared Hitler had dealt great blows to British and French prestige by his conquests of Austria, Czechoslovakia, and Poland. He added:

"Now the German armed forces have invaded Norway, lying entirely on the sea and quickly accessible to the fleets of Britain and France. If the Germans consummate their conquest of Norway, Sweden will be next inevitably.

BALKANS LIKELY NEXT

"Such an eventuality would almost destroy the prestige of Britain and France. It probably would force all the Balkan states into submission to Hitler.

"However, I do not believe that Germany will be able to hold Norway.

"I am satisfied that Mr. Winston Churchill (chief British war lord) fully realizes the necessity of driving the German forces out of Norway. And I believe the Allies can and will do that within 30 days. If I am right, then Sweden is saved and Hitler will be greatly weakened in prestige at home and abroad."

PITTMAN was asked whether he found his views were shared by other administration authorities on international affairs. He said:

"Yes; most of our statesmen view the situation as I do. We are not going into this war. Our people, our Congress, and our President are determined to take no part in it."

ADMISSION TO ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL OF VIRGIN ISLANDS' RESIDENTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation relating to the admission to St. Elizabeths Hospital of persons resident or domiciled in the Virgin Islands of the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

MARCH REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitted pursuant to law, relative to the activities and expenditures of the Corporation for the month of March 1940, including a statement of loan and other authorizations made during the month, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Forty-ninth Continental Congress, National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, favoring the enactment of legislation to strengthen the armed forces and the national defense of the United States in the interest of peace, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before he Senate a petition of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Van Nuys-Capper antilynching bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, favoring the enactment of legislation to strengthen the national defense in the interest of peace, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISASTER IN BOROUGH OF SHENANDOAH, PA.—PETITION FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, on March 4, 1940, an earth subsidence devastated one-fourth the total area of the borough of Shenandoah, Pa. I am informed that 641 private, industrial, and public buildings were damaged at a loss of several million dollars. Senior and junior high-school buildings, housing 1,350 pupils, were closed, placing 85 percent of the total school population on part-time education. These pupils are losing more than 20 percent in time alone, and are deprived of educational facilities such as gymnasium, health rooms, adequate toilet facilities, auditorium, assembly rooms, science class rooms, and other conveniences necessary for the maintenance of a minimum program of education.

Streets and highways, sewers, and water and gas mains have been damaged or destroyed, creating serious health hazards. The present situation is a menace to the life and health and safety of thousands of people in the affected area. These damages have cost a tremendous loss in wages and have seriously affected the real estate values in the community. The subsidence is continuing and the area is expanding. The problem presented is more than of a temporary nature.

Mr. President, at the proper time I will offer an amendment asking that $2,000,000 of the current W. P. A. appropriation be earmarked for use in Shenandoah in the reconstruction of damaged areas of this community and to provide safeguards against further losses which may be caused by continued subsidence. It is believed that the subsidence which recently took place in the borough of Shenandoah was caused by the failure of the pillars directly beneath the recently affected area in the Mammoth Seam. As the situation now stands, the rock structure underlying the affected area, between the surface and the Mammoth Seam, is not self-supporting. It is resting on loose material and what pillars may still be in place. Mining, as carried on beneath and surrounding the borough of Shenandoah, is quite similar to mining as carried on elsewhere in the anthracite region under like conditions.

A remedy against further disaster may be found, at least to a large extent, in hydraulic flushing. When it is carefully done with good filling material, the total subsidence may not be more than 5 to 10 percent of the thickness of the seam mined. Hand packing and hydraulic flushing of mines has been carried on beneath many thickly populated communities in the anthracite region of Pennsylvania. The allocation of Federal funds for this and other constructive purposes will provide needed employment and serve the distressed citizens of this community to recover their morale and work spirit which have been so sadly disturbed because of the recent disaster.

Mr. President, I have received a petition for Federal assistance transmitted with a letter from John J. Miller, president of the Shenandoah Disaster Relief League, which has been signed by many thousand citizens of that community. I ask unanimous consent that this petition be now received and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I also request that the letter from the president of the Shenandoah Disaster Relief League be printed as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the petition will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the letter referred to by him will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

SHENANDOAH DISASTER RELIEF LEAGUE,
Shenandoah, Pa., April 22, 1940.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DAVIS: We respectfully direct to your attention the attached petition of the citizens of the borough of Shenandoah, Pa.

The plight of the citizens of this entire community is indeed immediately serious, and grave apprehension is felt for their safety and health in the continued subsidence of the earth's surface within the borough.

You will note that the foreword of this petition gives a brief word description of the effects of the disaster. In order that you might become more fully acquainted with the extent of the suffering brought about by this disaster, we earnestly ask that the reports which have been submitted in connection herewith be read.

This organization, acting for the citizens of the borough, has applied for Federal aid under the terms of the Emergency and Disaster Act.

The signers of this petition, as residents of this borough, appeal to your great humanitarian spirit to assist them in their hour of need, and they earnestly solicit the prestige of your high office in a complete effort of cooperation in their appeal for Federal aid.

Respectfully yours,

SHENANDOAH DISASTER RELIEF LEAGUE,
JOHN J. MILLER, President.
A. A. FLECK, Secretary.

SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT—ADDITIONAL CONFEREE

On motion of Mr. SMITH and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That Mr. FRAZIER be appointed an additional conferee on the part of the Senate at the conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3800) to amend section 8 (e) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended.

GOVERNMENT FINANCING

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a communication from the President of the United States in response to Senate Resolution 243.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 18, 1940.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In my Budget message of January 3, 1940, I indicated that on the basis of preliminary studies it would prove feasible to reduce the surplus funds of some of the Government credit agencies by an estimated aggregate figure of $700,000,000. When these agencies were organized the Federal Government invested substantial amounts in their capital structure. The Budget proposal would return a portion of this investment to the Treasury.

The Senate has recently passed Resolution 243, requesting further information regarding this proposed reduction. It was my intention at the time of submitting my Budget message to make these reductions after July 1, 1940. While I have made no final determination as to precise figures, I am pleased to submit the following figures representing proposals which have been suggested:

Treasury investment in saving and loan associations	$35,000,000
Federal intermediate credit banks	40,000,000
Banks for cooperatives	60,000,000
Production credit corporations	15,000,000
Federal land banks	200,000,000
Public Works Administration	50,000,000
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	300,000,000
Total	700,000,000

The amounts are tentative and are not to be taken as final. I am now having the proposals carefully reviewed and may recommend legislation to Congress. For example, the capital stock of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation might be reduced by $100,000,000, in which case the reduction of the capital structure of the Federal land banks might be $100,000,000. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation could be permitted to purchase the stock of the Federal home-loan banks, now held by the Treasury, amounting to $125,000,000, in which case the return of capital funds from that Corporation might be $175,000,000. Legislation to accomplish a similar purpose may be requested in the case of other corporations. Moreover, there are certain bills now pending in Congress pertaining to credit agencies which, if enacted, would affect the final determination as to the distribution between agencies.

I wish to assure you that whatever adjustments are made will leave these agencies with adequate operating capital.

Sincerely,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, several days ago I received a letter from the director of the Milwaukee police-training school. Apparently the letter was inspired by recent newspaper articles and editorials attempting to discredit the Director of the F. B. I. in the eyes of the American people. The letter is a vigorous defense, both of Mr. Hoover and the F. B. I. In view of the tremendous public interest in the F. B. I. at this time, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the letter from Capt. Hubert E. Dax, director of the Milwaukee police-training school.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

HUBERT E. DAX, ATTORNEY AT LAW,
Milwaukee, Wis., April 17, 1940.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senator, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

DEAR SIR: From the newspaper articles and editorials printed within the last few months, it is apparent that for some time a well-organized and vigorously conducted campaign has been under way to discredit Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, of the F. B. I., in the eyes of the American people.

This campaign is vicious and unjust because of the fact that Mr. J. Edgar Hoover has done more for law enforcement by personal performance, by example, education, administration, and commission than any one man in this or any other country. His work has done something to improve every police department in the land.

He has reduced kidnaping and bank robbery to a minimum. Criminals fear him and his well-trained men. The accomplishments of the F. B. I. would require pages to enumerate.

To do anything which might discourage Mr. J. Edgar Hoover and his men would be criminal in itself. Think what the psychological effect upon every law-enforcement agency in the country would be if the top enforcement agency should crumble and fall under this unjust campaign.

Knowing that you are a man of judgment, that you have the interests of your people at heart, and that you want honest and just law enforcement, I appeal to you to do everything in your power to curb this malicious movement on the part of criminal and subversive elements.

Yours very truly,

(Capt.) HUBERT E. DAX,
Director, Milwaukee Police Training School.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I also ask that there be inserted at this point in my remarks a letter from the chief of police of Milwaukee, dated April 22, 1940.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF POLICE,
Milwaukee, Wis., April 22, 1940.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senator from Wisconsin,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: During the past several months I have noted with some concern a number of attacks upon the Federal Bureau of Investigation in criticism of that Bureau's activities under the direction of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, its Director.

To me and to the many thousands of other heads of law enforcement agencies who have had an opportunity to enjoy the cooperation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and who have learned to respect and appreciate its commendable objectives, these attacks are in no way justified and appear to be nothing more than an effort to discredit the Bureau and its Director.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has done more to bring about cooperation between and to unify and coordinate the efforts of all law enforcement agencies in the country than any other single instrumentality. The F. B. I. at Washington is the Nation's treasure-house of information relating to crime and criminals upon which all peace officers may freely draw and to which all may contribute. It encourages the widest intercourse between itself and the country's thousands of law enforcement agencies and the benefits accruing to our citizens as a whole as a result of this free exchange of thought and information is immeasurable.

We want you to know that in our opinion the Federal Bureau of Investigation, under the able direction of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, is without question the highest type of law-enforcement agency in existence today. We are in entire accord with its high purposes and objectives. So strongly are we convinced of the irreproachable motives of the F. B. I. and of the utter sincerity of its Director that we regard its enemies as enemies of our country and of its upright and law-abiding citizens.

Now as never before America needs a strong, highly organized Federal law-enforcement agency such as we have in the F. B. I. Attacks directed against that organization savor of ingratitude and envy. May we assure you that the F. B. I. as now constituted will continue to have our highest regard and fullest cooperation.

Very truly yours,

JOS. KLUCHESKY,
Chief of Police.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I may add that the State of Wisconsin has always pioneered in every forward-looking police training and safety program. Wisconsin was the first State to have certain of its officials meet with representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and to join forces in the first State-wide police training program in the United States. That training program was approved on January 4 of this year, and I ask that the Department of Justice memorandum on this matter be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
January 4, 1940.

Wisconsin police officials, after conferring with representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation at Milwaukee, approved the Nation's first State-wide police-training program, it was announced here today.

More than 1,300 police officers attended the first series of sessions, which were held in 17 schools. The sessions opened on September 11, 1939, at Ashland, Wis., and concluded at West Allis, Wis., on December 22, 1939.

The completion of the initial series distinguished Wisconsin as the first State in the country to provide instruction on a State-wide basis to all law-enforcement officers, J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, pointed out today.

The first schools, for which all instructors were furnished by the Federal Bureau of Investigation from its official staff, were so successful that the conference in Milwaukee approved a proposal for the establishment of a permanent program of training.

This action followed formal approval of the original 17 zone schools by all of the official law enforcement associations of Wisconsin which include the Wisconsin Chiefs of Police Association, the Wisconsin Sheriffs' Association, and the Wisconsin Police Protective Association.

The conference held yesterday was composed of Chief of Police Joseph Kluchesky, Milwaukee, president of the Wisconsin Chiefs of Police Association, representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation designated by Director J. Edgar Hoover, and members of the police training committee of the Wisconsin Chiefs of Police Association.

Chiefs of Police Walter English, of Wausau; Glenn Zimmerman, of Plymouth; and Alfred Quest, of Watertown, composed the training committee.

The conference pointed out that, although a maximum of 1,050 police officers was expected to attend the first courses, more than 1,500 had been enrolled.

Despite the fact that many of the officers scheduled to attend school on particular dates were required to handle emergencies and respond for appearances in court, the average daily attendance at the schools was in excess of 1,300.

These officers reported from their local communities to the zone centers at Appleton, Oakland, Eau Claire, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Janesville, Kenosha, La Crosse, Madison, Oshkosh, Racine, Sheboygan, Stevens Point, Superior, Watertown, Wausau, and West Allis.

Attendance at the schools was made up of representatives from police departments, sheriffs' offices, county highway police, State highway patrol, State motor-vehicle inspection, district attorneys' offices, coroners' offices, constables, and other law-enforcement agencies.

The Milwaukee conference approved the establishment of a permanent program of training at each of the zone centers at which the first schools were held.

The new series will begin on February 5, 1940, and continue until June 1, 1940.

Continuation of the series is contemplated for an indefinite period, with the prospect that the third group of schools will open in September.

A 17-week course of instruction in advanced law-enforcement procedures will be covered.

During the intensive 2-week full-time courses offered originally the groundwork was laid in outstanding fields of law-enforcement practices, including the technique and mechanics of arrest; firearms usages; raids and road blocking; fingerprint identification; the handling of crime scenes; the collection, preservation, and identification of evidence; descriptions; interviews; report writing; and public relations.

Consultant service in the preparation of the curricula was rendered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The new schools will concentrate upon a detailed study of two of the original subjects.

It was agreed by the conference that details concerning the subject matter would not be disclosed.

Strict regulation of attendance at the schools will also be required in order to protect the confidential character of law-enforcement techniques.

With approval of the general plan for a permanent system of instruction, Chief Kluchesky announced the formation of a permanent advisory board to the police training committee of the Wisconsin Chiefs of Police Association.

The advisory board will consist of the president of the association, members of the police training committee, and the special agent in charge of the Milwaukee division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, for some time it has been evident that some kind of "left-wing attack" is being made on the F. B. I. I do not mean to imply that congressional criticism of the F. B. I. emanates from left-wing sources. In fact, the congressional interest in the matter originates from a very commendable concern with the preservation of American civil rights. I believe, however, that the bulk of the current criticism of the F. B. I. is in reality part of a tangled webt of intrigue seeking to discredit both the Director of the F. B. I. and the Bureau itself.

I shall not discuss the hue and cry which has been raised about wire tapping by the Bureau, because I believe the issue involved is well known to every Member of Congress. Here again we are concerned with the question of a possible abuse of personal and private rights. It is not my purpose to discuss the pros and cons of that question at this time. I believe, however, that it is desirable for us briefly to consider the question of public rights which is involved in the present barrage attack on the F. B. I. from left-wing quarters.

I do not wish to be an alarmist, nor do I wish to be placed in the same class with that group of fertile and imaginative minds which see foreign plots everywhere about us. On the other hand, I believe that the example of Norway indicates clearly that in any Government there is a definite menace from alien termites boring from within, and such termites are even more dangerous than those in foreign lands.

There are today a great many people who are not influenced by jittery war headlines, yet who believe it entirely possible for agents of foreign governments to be engaged in espionage in connection with the large amount of war contracts placed here by the Allies. Naturally, this would result in a certain amount of skirmishing between the F. B. I. and foreign agents who would find it distinctly to their advantage to discredit the Bureau.

There is another phase to this "smearing" campaign. The F. B. I. has been actively concerned with the investigation of Communist activity. That investigation has in recent months been more effective than ever before. The arrest of certain persons in Detroit for securing enlistments for the Spanish loyalists is an example of one investigation which has resulted in a verbal bombardment of the Bureau.

Mr. President, I do not want an Ogpu in this country. I do not believe in an American Gestapo. I realize that a Federal bureau set up as an investigational agency of the Government might conceivably, under an autocratic and dictatorial administration, invade private rights and trample rough-shod on our traditional sacrosanct American civil liberties. But, Mr. President, such an abuse of power appears unlikely at this time. Despite all efforts to besmirch the character of the F. B. I. Director on the basis of his record, I, for one, am willing to believe that his character and known integrity would prevent any misuse of his powers.

This does not mean that I subscribe to a blind, unreasoning trust in the F. B. I. On the contrary, I believe that we must exert an unceasing vigilance to see that there is no unwarranted growth in its power. However, I believe that the possible menace inherent in a Federal Bureau of Investigation lies not in the Bureau itself, but in the suspicious activities of any left-wing groups who would seek to discredit the Bureau, so that they themselves may control it and then undermine its vigilant enforcement of Federal statutes.

Mr. President, during the past 12 years, in more than 52,000 cases, convictions have been obtained on the basis of evidence which the F. B. I. secured. In all those 52,000 cases no conviction has ever been reversed in a court of appeals because of any alleged third-degree tactics or violated civil liberties. As a matter of fact, the record of the F. B. I. in this respect has been so splendid that on April 4 of this month here in Washington at a meeting of the Federal district attorneys from the entire Nation, a resolution was unanimously adopted commending the F. B. I. for its effectiveness in preserving the constitutional rights and civil liberties of persons who have arrested by the F. B. I.

Mr. President, there were days—dark days—when the grimy hand of gangsterdom reached into every nursery in the land. The menace of those days has almost been forgotten. That it is only now a grim memory is a testimonial to the effectiveness of the F. B. I. But there are other thugs—thugs who may have a place in the international underworld of espionage or propaganda. There are Communists and other alien forces which, operating under the constitutional protection of American civil rights, may capitalize on apathy and venality to expand their activities and their membership.

On April 18, in a speech delivered before the Daughters of the American Revolution meeting at Constitution Hall in Washington, Director Hoover in his closing remarks gave the answer to any charges hurled at an investigation of subversive activities. He said:

> And I hope that today you will pledge yourselves with me to a solemn rededication of citizenship. That you will give more of your efforts, more of your being, and of your hearts to the task of teaching and emulating Americanism. That you will strive ceaselessly to focus the spotlight of truth upon the "ism" scum which seeks to undermine the foundations of our Nation. By doing so you will illuminate the world with the brilliance of American democracy and demonstrate the sacred character of honest, decent, human elements which, God willing, our Stars and Stripes may forever symbolize.

Mr. President, I believe we are all in accord with these sentiments. I believe the statement of Mr. Hoover will do much to "clear the air" of the accusations directed against the F. B. I. Similarly, I believe the charges made against the F. B. I. served a constructive purpose also, because it is only by a continual examination of Federal agencies that we can prevent them from cracking a bureaucratic whip over American rights.

I believe that the F. B. I. has not abused its power, and I believe that in these chaotic days it is particularly vital that we reaffirm our confidence in this important agency of the Government. An investigational bureau thus reassured by demonstration of congressional confidence can continue to ferret out the truth. A continued sifting and winnowing of alien activities in this country should result not in a heavy-handed crushing of civil rights, but in a renewed vigilance in defending the cherished American doctrines.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article published in the Christian Science Monitor of Monday, April 22, 1940, entitled "This Changing World." The article deals with the Trojan horse in foreign countries.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor of April 22, 1940]

THIS CHANGING WORLD—THE TROJAN HORSE—LESSON FROM NORWAY TAKEN TO HEART BY NEUTRALS IN PATH OF AGGRESSORS—NETHERLANDS IN A STAGE OF SIEGE

(By H. B. Elliston)

Something out of Greek mythology has lately come into the news as the chief danger to the continued independence of those neutral countries in Europe which are unfortunate enough to lie in the path of the aggressor powers. That something is the Trojan horse. You may recall the animal from school days—how the Greeks, after laying siege to Troy for 10 years, at last reduced Troy with it. And it was made of wood, too. What happened was this: The Greeks simply retired from the Trojan walls as if they had tired of war making. But outside the gates they left a huge wooden horse, and the Trojans, celebrating their release from siege, hauled the beast inside. They didn't know that before retiring the Greeks had secreted half a dozen of their warriors inside the horse's tummy. These came out when Troy went to bed, opened the gates, and let in the Greek Army. Troy was sacked before it woke up.

Norway almost became a modern Troy and might have shared Troy's fate but for the wide-awakeness of one or two of the officers in the shore batteries in the Oslofjord. It was a narrow squeak. The Trojan horse had already been secreted inside the city in the shape of traitorous Norwegians and German "refugees." The experience has come as a tip to other governments, and in Yugoslavia, in Holland, in Switzerland, in Belgium, in Sweden, the hunt is on for like quadrupeds within their midst.

The only country where I made any inquiries about a Trojan horse was Holland. It so happened that the Dutch, with their admirable regard for free institutions, have been less disposed than any other people to clamp restrictions either on their own people or on incoming foreigners. The Netherlands was the only country I visited where no visa was required. At the frontier the Dutch bade me welcome without more than a perfunctory examination of my baggage. They made me fill out no forms concerning the money I carried.

It looked as if the Dutch in their situation on the very balcony of war-torn Europe were taking chances. And arrived in the country I quickly found that Dutch hospitality had been abused by the concentration within the Netherlands of hundreds of spies and undesirable aliens. At The Hague one hotel was so crowded with them that it was called spy hotel.

Need I say that most of this fraternity were German? Some of them, indeed, had diplomatic status from Berlin, though you couldn't find their names on the diplomatic list. I talked with the general at the head of the Dutch Intelligence Service about the crowded appearance of the German Legation. How many officials were there? According to the list, was the reply, there were only 25, but the Dutch knew there were no fewer than 130 directly attached to the legation. But the general didn't seem unduly worried that they might be the Trojan horse in the event of invasion. The modern Trojan horse, of course, generally hides Trojans in its bosom, not Greeks. I mean the gate openers are natives, not foreigners—members of what is sometimes called the fifth column, or friends of the enemy. We in America are apt to forget this fact in the hue and cry against undesirable aliens.

What, then, of the Dutch Quislings? Yes, they have a Nazi party, and it is under a man who feels he's got the makings of a fuehrer, his name being Anton Mussert. The only warrant for the title that I could discover was a wispy lock of hair which he cultivated assiduously. He's neither a good organizer nor a good rabble rouser. And the party meetings always have a habit of ending in rows when the eternal issue was brought up between union with Germany and an indigenous movement. Mr. Mussert, a former hydraulic engineer, has a following of about 10,000 members, and there are four members of the party in the Netherlands Parliament.

The modern Trojan horse, of course, is not satisfied with getting inside a country. The enemy seeks to plant it inside the army. There had been some suspicion before I got to Holland that a number of officers in the army were Nazi, if not Mussert sympathizers. It was rumored that in the big scare last November 11, 150 officers had been arrested.

My Netherlands friend felt that there was no longer any such danger. He told me that the army was so solidly anti-Nazi that "everybody from the rank of sergeant down" was a kind of intelligence service. On an average he got a letter a day from men in the ranks reporting something that to them looked like pro-Germanism in a higher-up. The officer told me that the complaint generally was traceable to an innocent remark that had been misconstrued.

Now the Dutch are taking extraordinary precautions against any gate-opening by the inhabitants of the Dutch Trojan horse. They are looking the gift horse in the mouth, as it were. Specifically, the entire country has been put in a state of siege.

Only a grave emergency could have persuaded the great Queen of the Netherlands to take such a step. With reluctance, I know, she gave the orders. For she has hitherto clung to the hope that the Netherlands might keep a civilian flag flying inside the country, even though of necessity the frontier Provinces had to be put in a state of siege. While I was in the Netherlands she changed the army command on this very issue.

The sturdy Netherlanders, unless my observation was at fault, will know how to deal with those who come out of any Trojan horse, as well as with any invaders, if the one ever comes out or the other comes in. Norway has served a purpose in Holland as elsewhere as the voice of Cassandra, which ancient Troy ignored.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, we do not want any American Hitler or Stalin in American industry, American labor, or American politics. We do not want any "fifth column" in America. If I had my way, in these perilous times I would double the appropriation for the F. B. I.

In this land of ours there are many persons who call themselves Americans who have gone wrong in recent years because of material inequalities. They have been listening to the lilting voices of those who want us to go the way of Europe. As a result there have grown up in this country certain organizations whose taproots cross the Atlantic and reach down into the heart of foreign capitals.

Because of the demagogic doctrines which are preached in our land, the clergy and the learned men in our universities have today a priceless opportunity to display farseeing vision by leading American youth away from radical organizations and into sound American activities.

Under the policies that have always obtained in America we have proceeded on the theory that years would bring light, and those who had gone astray would see the light and return to the fold. Under ordinary circumstances I still believe that is a correct theory. But, Mr. President, we do not live in ordinary times. We live in a period in the world's history when foreign nations send to other countries men who come in ostensibly to enjoy the hospitality of their hosts, but when they enter the house they take it over. I, for one, am ready to say to any foreigner who comes to this country: "You are here as the guest of this Nation; obey the rules of the house and you can remain here."

And to American citizens who have joined up with un-American organizations I am ready to say: "Cease having intercourse with those who would despoil America. Give up your membership. Give the Government the benefit of information you now have. Your obligation to America is the greatest obligation in life. Prove faithful to it."

Every country in Europe now knows what the "fifth column" is. Every country in Europe now, since Norway has been martyred, has taken steps against spies and termites. You, Mr. President, and I can do very little personally, but the F. B. I. can guard our treasures; it can guard the portals to America. It can protect our rights not only against the foreigner whose presence in our midst would abuse our hospitality but against those Americans who have been inoculated by the fever of hate and deception and class warfare brought into being by the dictators of Europe.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, lest my silence now be misconstrued later, when I expect to address the Senate on the subject, I wish to say only that I have listened with much interest to the address of the Senator from Wisconsin. I do not find fault with the abstract propositions which are laid down by him or which are laid down by Mr. Hoover. I am the last one in the world who would be inclined to try to interfere with the good work of any organization. I have read speeches and have listened to speeches over the radio by Mr. Hoover which I commended. I think on one occasion I wrote him a letter in commendation of a speech of his to which I had listened.

The Senator from Wisconsin has referred to the Detroit arrests. While I would not put a thing in the way of an honest, fair, and competent investigation of anything that pointed to an act disloyal to my country, I do insist that those who have authority to investigate crimes and violations of law should not themselves violate the very law which it is their duty to uphold. I shall not go into the question now, because one case is now pending and being tried, and I do not want anything I say to have even an indirect effect upon that case. I should not have referred to it had not the attention of the Senate and of the country been called to the actions of the F. B. I. in words of praise and exaltation. In doing so the Senator has referred to the Detroit cases.

After I had read some of the newspaper accounts of the Detroit cases I wrote to the Attorney General a letter in regard to them which was given to the press. I received from the Attorney General a reply which he has given to the press, in which he agreed with what I had said, and said he would investigate those cases, although in my letter to him, to which I refer, I called his attention to them merely as an example of what seemed to me to be going on, and what seemed to me to be wrong.

The Attorney General has appointed an assistant to investigate those cases. His report has not yet been submitted; or, at least, it has not been made public. I have had no access to it. When it is made public, I shall comment in the Senate upon what I believe is a just criticism of the F. B. I.

Mr. President, the fact that a man has been a good soldier is no defense if afterward he violates the law. The fact that a man has run many criminals to earth, and has done a magnificent work, is no defense to him if he in turn violates the law. I am not content to leave the matter now, because, following my correspondence with the Attorney General, which was given to the public with my consent—I am not finding fault with that—some newspapermen, one of whom was referred to by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] in his able address to the Senate today, have charged me—perhaps indirectly, but in language which no one can misunderstand—with being a part of a conspiracy to "smear Hoover," something of which I am as innocent as an unborn child.

Mr. President, I want to help the F. B. I.; but I do not want that organization, in making arrests, to violate the liberties of American citizens which are protected under the Constitution of the United States and by our courts, including the court of last resort. I want them protected. In making arrests or investigations, no bureau or organization—political, governmental, or religious—is justified under any circumstances in doing some of the things which I think have been done by the F. B. I. in violation of the sacred rights which ought to be preserved to every American citizen.

When the report to the Attorney General is made, I expect to take up the Detroit cases and perhaps some other cases. I say the few words I am now uttering only because I fear that my silence might be misconstrued by the Senate.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have listened with much pleasure to the generalities of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. I am sure nothing I said was directed to him personally. I know of one occasion when a fiddler played the fiddle while Rome burned. Let us not fiddle in America while our land is in danger. I know there are other occasions when we make mountains out of molehills, and as a result we do not see the real problem in front of us.

Violations of personal rights may occur at times, and I stand with the Senator from Nebraska in saying that there should be no violation of any personal rights by any agency of government or any individual in the Government. However, the point I was making was that in other lands the house is set on fire by insidious forces—yea, by treasonable forces. In this country we have an agency which can cope with such treasonable forces; so, instead of permitting criticism and damnation to destroy the efficiency of that agency. I thought it was time to give credit where credit is due.

Mr. Hoover and his agency have stamped out racketeers. They have stamped out kidnaping in this country. Mr. Hoover and his agency can stop the inflow of the "fifth column" into this country; and it is to such an agency that we should give credit. The cost to the Government is as nothing compared to the constructive results.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator refers to making a mountain out of a molehill. He has constructed a mountain out of a molehill, and, standing on the top of that mountain, he waves the American flag and says that if a man has hunted down a criminal anything else he may do is insignificant and unimportant.

I want to help, if I can, any organization which will run down criminals and ferret out crime; but I want to stop the same organization if it undertakes to violate the rights guaranteed to us under the Constitution of the United States. That is all I want to do. I do not want to smear anybody; but I will not stand idly by and have the charge made that, because I want to defend the civil rights of American citizens, I am trying to smear somebody.

It is said in defense of Mr. Hoover that he has done some great and good work, which I frankly admit and have never denied. However, if he is trespassing, if he is going wrong, I want to stop him in his tracks and help him to go right, which I hope he will do.

Mr. President, I realize that if our civil rights are trampled underfoot, our Government must go the way of other governments which have been lost to some kind of secret organization having a different motive from what we expect—a different motive from the F. B. I.

I admit the greatness of the F. B. I. We are giving them $10,000,000. However, they are still bound to respect my rights, your rights, and the rights of the poor, wherever they may be. The F. B. I. is not called upon to strip men and women or to search them when they are charged with some minor offense, handcuff them, parade them through the streets, and subject them to the third degree. That sort of thing cannot go on in any free government without eventually bringing ruin. It will bring ruin to us, as it has to many others, and as it is doing now.

What I have said cannot be construed to intimate that I do not want crime punished and evildoers arrested; but we have a Constitution and laws; we are trying to preserve certain rights; and we must be fair to our enemies as well as to ourselves. Our courts must try our enemies as fairly as they try our friends. If I am a private citizen and an enemy and am charged with crime, I am entitled, under the Constitution of the United States, to as fair a trial as the Senator who sits at my right would be if he had committed a crime. That is all I am asking for; that is all I want; that is what we must have if our Government shall continue to live, and we will have it.

History is strewn with the remnants of governments that have undertaken to violate that rule. Our Government, with its civil rights, particularly the fourth amendment to the Constitution, was set up by our forefathers in order that we should not fall by the wayside, as others have done.

I have no fault to find with what the Senator has said. He has read from Mr. Hoover's speech. I have read the whole speech, and I thought it was a good one. I am not finding fault with it; but I am finding fault with the suggestion or insinuation that any man, whether he be of high or low degree, who even criticizes anything the F. B. I. may do must be "smeared" as a man who is against his country, who believes in communism or Hitlerism. We can purge them; we can have our people respect the laws if we obey them ourselves and insist that those whose duty it is to enforce the laws shall likewise obey them.

Communism comes when we fertilize the soil of America with such ideas as that we have a right to trample underfoot the rights of the common, ordinary citizen. No matter what he may be charged with, under our law he is entitled to be tried as a man and be treated in the same way as the most respectable citizen in the community would be treated. That is all I want.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I do not desire to continue this debate interminably. I merely wish to say, so that the matter may be settled, that I can agree with everything the distinguished Senator from Nebraska has said. We probably both have indulged in generalities and platitudes. We probably have in a way pulled the flag up and unfurled it to the breeze. I agree with him that civil rights, under our Constitution, should be protected; but I am not willing to let it be inferred, until it is proved, that Mr. Hoover and his fine organization have done anything to impair civil rights. Rather, the history of his organization is that it has made the civil rights we possess more secure in America than they were before his organization came into being; that it has made life safer; that it has made it better for us. If he or his agency of the Government has violated the law, he is amenable to it. But let us remember that we are not living in ordinary times.

I wish to say to the distinguished Senator that I did not attribute any "smearing" to him; I am sorry I irritated the Senator; I said nothing of that kind. I said certain newspapers had published certain articles of that kind, but specifically exempted congressional criticism from my comments. So we can agree and go along and root up any treasonable action of any kind, whether it be within or without our country.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the subject of the Federal Bureau of Investigation has been briefly discussed here on the floor of the Senate, I should like to make a short statement. I wanted to say that I learned, to my consternation, from a friendly Senator that since I made some remarks on the floor of the Senate on this subject, expressing my general sentiments on the subject, the report had been circulated by somebody that my toes had been stepped on by the F. B. I. because my brother had been arrested for the operation of a gambling house in Miami, Fla. Having but two brothers, one of them being in New York and the other with my mother and father in Tallahassee, Fla., I naturally had not been aware that any such rumor had been insidiously circulated among Senators and around Washington. I am glad the Senator was good enough to tell me that it had been circulated, so at least I could denounce that statement as false.

It does happen that a man named Frank Pepper, who is not in any way related to me, has an interest in the Royal Palm Club, which is a night club operated just behind Bay Front Park in Miami, Fla., and which, so far as I know, has been respectably conducted. Whatever may be its virtues or its shortcomings, they are not in any way related to me or to any person who is related to me.

Mr. President, when I rose on the floor of the Senate and made some comment upon the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, I made those remarks, in the first place, as a friend of this administration, and, in the second place, as a friend of honorable and effective law enforcement in America. My father has been a sheriff; he has been a police chief and police officer for many years, and my sympathies go strongly out to those men who are trying to enforce the laws of our country and to protect citizens in the enjoyment of their property and their personal rights. But I know that there is a strong tendency in any centralized police agency, in its zeal and in its enthusiasm, to exceed the discretion which, perhaps, it should always exercise.

I read upon the front page of the newspapers of my State declarations that were issued by the Chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, at least he was quoted as having issued them, denouncing official corruption in Florida. I knew that, like all other States, Florida has perhaps had some officers who were not what they should have been, but I also knew, from personal knowledge, that all official life in my State was not corrupt, and it was not fair to make such a charge and issue a generalization of that character. A little later I read a statement by another Federal agency to the effect that Georgia was brimming over with corruption; but again there was no distinction between somebody who might have done wrong and all the officials of that great State who have led honorable lives and who were rendering creditable public service.

It was against that kind of generalization that I protested; it was against the growing tendency on the part of this organization to take upon its own shoulders, of its own initiative, the investigation and, it may be, the suppression of matters that are outside the legitimate scope of Federal investigation and even of Federal prosecution that I protested. What may be the sentiment of the people of South Carolina relative to local matters is a South Carolina police problem, and the same statement applies to every other State in the Union.

I know, Mr. President, as you know, enough about human nature to understand that if a man is given a trained personnel, unlimited authority, and unlimited funds, he would not be human if he did not tend to extend his activities into realms which are questionable so far as Federal jurisdiction is concerned. Of course, the Federal Government, with unlimited personnel and funds and with its own court procedure, can enforce the laws of this country better than can the local agencies; but I was not aware of the fact that the American people were willing to turn over all law enforcement even to a good Federal agency.

So what I said sprang from a conscientious conviction which I entertained. I have nobody to protect in my State or anywhere else. So far as I am aware I have no relatives who have been affected by the F. B. I. I have been a booster for the F. I. B. I appreciate the fact that in the past Mr. Hoover has invited me to make speeches at the Bureau. I accepted on at least one occasion and spoke last year at one of the police schools which have been conducted here in Washington and which constitute a splendid activity. I do not have any quarrel with any Federal agency, but I do tell my fellow citizens and I venture to say to my fellow Senators that that agency had better be under the eye of the American Government or it will get out of hand. I know without some restraint that it is too much to believe that any man of Mr. Hoover's skill, knowledge, great ability, and zeal is not likely to transcend the legitimate activities of a Federal agency, and as his friend and admirer I merely want the sign of caution held up to him before resentment comes about and reaction arises which will undermine the good, the just, and the desirable work which his agency has performed and was designed to carry on.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the speeches just delivered in the Senate regarding the F. B. I. are timely and pertinent; and it would not appear to be odd that I should agree with all that has been said.

Charging the able senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] with attempting to smear somebody is about like charging Abe Lincoln with engaging in a similar endeavor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. When Abraham Lincoln lived he was charged with that and everything else imaginable in the category of crime and ridicule.

Mr. ASHURST. No one believed it.

Mr. NORRIS. They do not now; they know better now; but many believed it then.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, no one believed it then.

Mr. President, it is not my function, certainly not my duty, to make any elaborate defense of the F. B. I. or of the Department of Justice. Some 1,600 men make up the personnel of the F. B. I. It would be impossible to imagine that out of 1,600 men there could be no weak member, no rotten bough. The greatest Wisdom, the greatest Mind, the greatest Good on earth, in choosing a cabinet found that he had a denying Peter, a doubting Thomas, and a bribe-taking Judas. Finite man will labor in vain to select men in large numbers without finding some weak one. Therefore, I do not doubt that out of 1,600 men there may be, and doubtless is, some unworthy man.

I speak now as a whole regarding the work of the F. B. I. I shall not even refer to the Detroit cases, because it is my habit never to discuss a matter pending in the courts. It was wise on the part of the speakers who preceded me not to descend into the details of those cases. It is proper in such circumstances to stand in awe of justice and let justice speak.

The members of the F. B. I.—that is, the Federal Bureau of Investigation—are trained men. In my service as a Senator I have made but one recommendation to the F. B. I. I did recommend that a young gentleman be appointed. He was given an examination and could not pass. I requested a reexamination. Still he did not pass. So far from feeling any resentment against Mr. Hoover, I admire him rather for the strong and sterling way in which he disregarded what might be called a political endorsement.

The F. B. I. requires men of unusual types, sagacious, prudent; they must know when to speak and when to withhold speech. They must know what a criminal would do in certain circumstances. They must even know who would be likely to commit a crime of a particular nature. They must be trained to know what a suspected person will do in certain circumstances. In order to be a successful member of the force of the F. B. I. one must understand physics—that is, natural philosophy—one must understand psychology—that is, the science of human emotions—to an almost perfect degree.

The persons against whom the F. B. I. agents are operating constitute some of the boldest, most desperate, most cruel and inveterate criminals ever known. Such criminally disposed or antisocial persons desire sensations, wines, high-powered cars, bright lights, ease, comfort, luxury, but lack the ability to earn these things. Therefore, they seek to take them by indirection and in violation of the law.

As to communism, I suppose one has a right, under our Constitution, to preach communism. Communism cannot prevail, because it is contrary to the inborn, ineradicable sentiments of the human heart. Deep in the human instincts and enshrined in the hearts of all humans are three things that may not be repealed by any government or any law:

Something to possess. That desire cannot be repealed. Therefore communism will fail because it cannot wipe out the desire to possess something tangible; some property.

Something in which to believe.

Someone for whom to care.

These three things are invincible and communism will attempt in vain to repeal them. They are part of human life and human destiny.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] opened the debate. I listened to him with care, as I listened, of course, with care to what was said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. I agree with them that a man charged with murder or any other crime should be tried strictly according to law. The only hope we have of maintaining this Government is to assure the accused person, no matter how lowly, how poor, how despised such person may be, that he will be tried by the same system of government, the same law, the same rule of evidence, and possibly by the same judge and the same system of jury selection under which the wealthiest, most eminent, most learned citizen would be tried.

Mr. President, more than a hundred years ago—yes; longer ago than that—an eminent orator—I leave it to some surer scholar to discover who it was—said:

> If all the men who have fallen under American justice and have suffered the death penalty in America could be resurrected at the foot of the gallows and, after their resurrection, were to form a government, they would form a government of the same kind as the one under whose justice they fell.

There is no doubt about that, because it is the fairest system ever devised by man. Therefore, of course, it behooves us all to see to it that the civil liberty of citizens shall not be swept away, and that the lowliest and poorest citizen, the most meager in funds, shall be tried by the same law as the most opulent citizen.

It is a singular circumstance which, if it were not so poignant in its tragedy, would be ironical to the point of humor that when a cold-blooded, desperate, cruel, and inveterate gangster is arrested after spending a lifetime inveighing against the Constitution of the United States, after spending much of his ill-gotten gains in an attempt to subvert our system of government, the first thing that gangser does when brought into court is to appeal to this very Constitution for the preservation of his own liberty and for a fair trial. Sirs, the document he tried to destroy, the system against which he inveighed, and against which he bored from within, is the system to which in his day of trial and trouble he appeals for his freedom and his acquittal, if he is to have such. That statement shows the strength, the power, the beneficence, and the justice of the American system of government under our Constitution.

As to Mr. Hoover, let me say that he is a young man. So far as I know, he is a good man. He is not a great man, for no man is ever great until he has had much sorrow, humiliation, and disappointment. No man will be great, or can expect to be great, until he has had full measure of those chastening and refining influences. But measuring Mr. Hoover by his accomplishments—of course, he is not without error—measuring him by what has been done, the record seems good.

When Mr. Cummings was appointed Attorney General in 1933, I happen to know that tremendous pressure was brought to bear upon him to try to induce him not to retain Mr. Hoover as the Chief of the F. B. I. Mr. Cummings made an investigation, which lasted nearly a year, and at the conclusion of the investigation made by Mr. Cummings he determined—and I think wisely determined—to retain Mr. Hoover.

When Mr. Murphy succeeded Mr. Cummings, the same pressure was not brought to bear on Attorney General Murphy to release and discharge Mr. Hoover, but there was some opinion that it should be done. Attorney General Murphy retained Mr. Hoover as Chief of the F. B. I.

When Mr. Jackson succeeded Mr. Murphy as Attorney General—I do not now speak with authenticity or with any real degree of accuracy—he considered the question, and after his investigation he also retained Mr. Hoover as the Director of the F. B. I.

It would be childlike in simplicity to pretend that in such a wide field, a field so pregnant with possibilities for mistakes, no mistake has been made. Whenever you find a public man who has made no mistakes, you will find one who has been asleep. I say to my fellow Senators, when they go out into the field to begin their campaigns for reelection, they will be charged with having made mistakes. Admit it, certainly, for it shows that you are active; you are trying to do something. Those in the graveyard and those who are asleep probably make no mistakes. I have no doubt Mr. Hoover has made mistakes. I hope he has not made as many as I have made; but it should not frighten one to be accused of having made a mistake.

Mr. President, again referring to the men required in the F. B. I., some Senators may have a phonographic brain. I congratulate them if they have. It is not, however, conclusive evidence of mental strength to have a phonographic brain, one which can reproduce like a phonograph. While it happens to be no sure evidence of mental strength, the F. B. I. man must have it.

How many Senators have a photographic eye? I congratulate such as have. With the photographic eye, what you see in a flash is engraved on your mind forever. If you have such an eye, you are a remarkable man. The F. B. I. man must have both a photographic and a phonographic brain.

The F. B. I. man must be cool. He must be so deliberate and so cool that he even appears to be like a gangster in temperament. Gangsters are the coolest of all men. There is no excitement about them. The first thing they learn about gangster warfare is to keep cool. A false move and the game is over.

Mr. President, these men in the F. B. I., moreover, must be above reproach. They must have no social ambition; they must have no political ambition, and, above all, they must have no financial ambition. It is not easy to find men, certainly regiments of men, who can meet such a test, and that is the test they must meet, otherwise the inexorable law of efficiency soon will exclude them from their positions in the F. B. I.

As for Mr. Hoover, I have never had sip or sup with him. We are not social, fraternal, political companions or comrades, and when I speak of him, as I have done before, I do it because I believe I would exhibit a sort of cowardice, I would certainly exhibit a sort of timidity, if I did not lay before the Senate and the country these observations concerning impressions of the F. B. I. which have come to me down through the years.

I could tire the Senate by a long and detailed account of hundreds of cases which have been solved by the F. B. I., cases so startling in their nature, so remarkable, that one might imagine that the F. B. I. men themselves were endowed with some sort of telepathic sense, so remarkable and so startling have been their achievements.

Having said this much, I yield the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 289) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899, with his objections thereto, the House proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 16, to insert:

SEC. 8. That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a dam and dike for preventing the flow of tidal waters into North Slough in Coos County, Oreg., in township 24 south, range 13 west, Willamette meridian, authorized to be constructed by the State of Oregon, acting through its highway department, the North Slough Drainage District, and the North Slough Diking District by an act of Congress approved August 26, 1937, is extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from August 26, 1939. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this section is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 9. The sum of $231,090,950 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for carrying out the improvements herein, over the 7-year period beginning July 1, 1941.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). That completes the amendments of the committee. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its consideration. It is an amendment requested by the War Department.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have seen the amendment and I have no objection to it. It is consistent with the bill, and is approved by the engineers.

Before the amendment is acted on, however, I should like to call attention to the fact that in section 9 an appropriation of $231,090,950 is authorized. That is not necessary now, because two projects, amounting to a little more than $90,000,000, have been eliminated from the bill. Therefore, I think we should change the authorization to read "not exceeding $150,000,000."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let us have the amendment reported before discussion is had on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 22, between lines 24 and 25, to insert the following:

Channel to Hog Island, Hingham Bay, Mass.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this is requested by the Secretary of War for the purpose of widening a channel. It involves the question of national defense.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. WALSH. The amendment merely asks for a survey. No cost is involved.

Mr. KING. What will the project cost if approved as a result of the survey?

Mr. WALSH. No one will know until the survey is made.

Mr. KING. Is it what might be denominated a great project, running into the millions?

Mr. WALSH. I understand it is not. It is proposed to widen the channel so that 50-foot boats can enter the channel and go to Hog Island, where there is a fort of the United States Army.

Mr. KING. We are making such huge appropriations on the theory of national defense that I suppose any suggestion for national defense will meet with hearty approval. While I do not know anything about this particular matter, it seems to me that if we could have some projects which are not alleged to be for national defense acted on, it would be well.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, let me say that the improvement covered by the amendment is proposed by the Secretary of War in the interest of national defense.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment provides for a preliminary survey involving engineering and economic problems?

Mr. WALSH. That is all.

Mr. McNARY. And in nature it is in conformance with the other surveys proposed to be made?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I send forward an amendment, which I understand has been submitted to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and which he has approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That penstocks or other similar facilities adopted to possible future use in the development of hydroelectric power shall be installed in any dam herein authorized when approved by the Secretary of War upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and of the Federal Power Commission, and such recommendation shall be based upon consideration of the proper utilization and conservation in the public interest of the resources of the region.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, between lines 6 and 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

Noyo Harbor, Calif.; House Document No. 682, Seventy-sixth Congress;

Crescent City Harbor; House Document No. 688, Seventy-sixth Congress;

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from California to explain the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. There are two harbors in the State of California which are necessary to provide shipping facilities for commodities produced in that region. The expenditures that have been made are not elaborate. They were made in accordance with the plans of the War Department, which had full charge of the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, certain Senators have asked me to submit amendments proposed by them. None of them call for large authorizations. The first amendment I send forward deals with Salem Harbor, Mass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, between lines 14 and 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

Salem Harbor, Mass.; House Document No. 701, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. The next amendment which I offer deals with Jamaica Bay, N. Y. I offer it at the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD]. If he is present, he can explain it himself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do these amendments provide for surveys or authorizations?

Mr. BAILEY. Authorizations?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator from North Carolina know how much the amendment in question involves?

Mr. BAILEY. No. The Senator from New York. [Mr MEAD] is present, and I shall ask him to explain the amendment. The amendment simply refers to the House document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, between lines 16 and 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

Jamaica Bay, N. Y.; House Document No. 700, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the amendment which, I understand, has been presented by the chairman of the committee, has been approved by the Board of Army Engineers and by the War Department. I have a copy of the approval of the Board of Army Engineers, and I also have a report of the War Department.

This is an improvement which contemplates the community and the area known as Jamaica Bay. It is on the south shore of Long Island, 17 miles southeast of the Battery in the city of New York. It is approximately 8 miles long, 4 miles wide, and is entered from the ocean through Rockaway Inlet.

The authorization is subject to the condition that funds may be applied whenever and to such extent as the city of New York shall construct or provide for construction of terminals, with facilities suitable to channels of that depth.

Commercial and industrial facilities planned for the bay area by the city of New York about the time the project was adopted have been only partially constructed, and the project is only 36 percent completed.

Local interests now request an improved channel from Rockaway Inlet extending along the south shore through Beach and Grass Hassock Channels to the head of the bay, thence by way of Grassy Bay on the north shore to a point near Canarsie.

Mr. President, the city of New York is pledged to complete its part of the work. The industrial and the local interests require this added facility. The War Department under the circumstances has agreed to approve the authorization. It is essentially necessary for the increased marine activity of the Greater City of New York.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, the project has been investigated by the Board of Army Engineers and meets with their approval. It also has the approval of the War Department, and is one of those projects that has received no opposition, and is in the same category with every other project contained in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much money is involved in this project?

Mr. MEAD. There is an estimated additional cost of $270,000 for new work and maintenance. The report covering that is signed by Brig. Gen. Thomas M. Robins, and I imagine that is probably the outside cost of the new work.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will say that the whole controversy we went through yesterday was as to the ultimate cost of the bill. We struck out two big projects yesterday on the ground that they increased the bill to too high a figure. If we are going to put in 40 or 50 or 60 little projects which in total make the same amount we have hitherto stricken out, the arguments which actuated us in our action yesterday disappear.

Mr. President, I have no desire to oppose the amendment of the Senator from New York. However, yesterday we struck out the meritorious amendment advocated by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], providing for some $20,000,000. If now we add by small amendments a half a million dollars here, a million dollars there, and a million and a half some other place, the whole argument for leaving out the Columbia River project, as we did yesterday, disappears.

As I said, I do not wish particularly to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. It provides for only $270,000. That is a little more than a quarter of a million dollars. But if we are going to build up the bill by little chicken-feed items to the sum total of the bill as it was before we struck out the large items referred to, we may as well go back and put in the Tombigbee and the Columbia River projects.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this improvement is merely a harbor improvement, a channel dredging project. The facility is already here, but it is not in shape to be useful under existing conditions. Industry is expanding the demands for greater areas for shipping. If we added a hundred amendments such as this, if we added 500 amendments such as this, we would not approach the amount involved in the project which the Senator mentions. The amendment offered by me involves no power; it involves no flood control. It is purely a channel-dredging proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New York that I am not concerned about whether it involves flood control, power, or anything else. My reason for voting against the Tombigbee and the Columbia River projects yesterday was that I thought we had made the bill too big. As I said, I am not going to oppose the Senator's amendment, but I give notice that I shall vote against future amendments of the same sort. If we are going to put back by chicken-feed amendments as much money as we struck out of the bill yesterday we might as well put back the two large projects which we struck out.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the able Senator from New York says his project does not involve power, reclamation, or flood control, but that it involves navigation. I had a similar project yesterday, on which a favorable report had been made. That amendment went through the same course as the Senator's amendment. What is the difference between the two in principle?

Mr. MEAD. I mentioned power and flood control only because those two items were mentioned by the opponents of several amendments which were considered yesterday.

Mr. McNARY. I am not talking about that. I was interested in a project which was considered yesterday which involved pure navigation. The Senator, economically minded, voted against it. He now comes forward with a proposal coming from the same source, and with no more merit to it than the one in which I was interested. I should like to know the reason for the difference in his attitude yesterday and today. Are we becoming so provincial that we think only about our own little sections?

Mr. MEAD. I make the point that yesterday, when the amendment to which the Senate refers was under consideration, the questions of navigation and power were discussed and were used by opponents of the amendment as reasons why it should not be included in the bill. It was stated by the proponents of the bill, and by the Senator's colleagues, that the bill ought to be confined to the ordinary river and harbor work and should not include new projects, projects involving flood control or projects involving power production, but only projects for the improvement, maintenance, and operation of going river and harbor improvements.

This is a minor river and harbor project. It is already in existence and is used. This amendment would merely improve it and extend existing facilities. It is not in the same category with the Tombigbee project or the project mentioned by the Senator from Oregon. They were new projects which would have required new outlays and new maintenance charges, while this is part of a going project. It is merely the extension of an existing facility which is already in use.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is very much mistaken. The project in which I was interested yesterday provided for the completion of navigation on the second largest stream in America, on which work has been done for 90 years. I was trying to reach the poor farmers in the hinterland. That project is much older than the project mentioned by the Senator. It came from the same sources and had the same careful work upon the part of the engineers and the committee. It came here as a navigation project, but it was out in Oregon. I want to know what makes the difference. Is the Senator voting for his project because it is in New York and against mine because it is in Oregon? Both projects are similar, except that the project in which I am interested is in Oregon.

Mr. MEAD. I voted for projects similar to the one under consideration in the Senator's section of the country and in other sections of the country; but there was a difference, and there still remains a difference——

Mr. McNARY. What is the difference?

Mr. MEAD. There is a difference between the Senator's project and projects in the category of the one now under consideration. That difference was brought out in the committee. It was explained when the project in Georgia was brought up. In my estimation the project in Georgia and the project to which the Senator refers were exactly alike. The project in Georgia was denied admission into the bill because it involved not only navigation but power. In my judgment, if the committee were to accept the Senator's proposal, it should accept the project which was proposed by the Senators from Georgia. In my estimation their project and the Senator's project were exactly alike. Both projects involved navigation and both involved power. If they were approved by the committee, and if they were brought out with a chance of being passed by the House and Senate, I should be very glad to vote for them. I believe they ought to stand by themselves as projects involving more than ordinary channel dredging. Under those circumstances I favor them.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator is again mistaken. The project against which he voted yesterday was purely a navigation project, as is his project. It has no power at all in it. His illustrations are far-fetched and irrelevant. The two projects stand on exactly the same basis.

Mr. President, I shall not oppose the Senator's project. I merely wish to draw the moral that when two projects are brought forward, and one happens to be located in Oregon, it is too bad. If a project is located in New York, it is a wonderful, feasible project. I shall accept the feasibility of the Senator's project, and shall not oppose it.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the able Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I think the moral is one which we ought to keep in mind. This is a great country, consisting of 48 States; and the far West ought to receive—it does not always receive—the same cordial, generous treatment accorded projects in the East, particularly in New York.

I shall support the Senator's project.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the able Senator from Oregon; and I shall support every project in the bill similar to the project I am now suggesting.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Was the project which the Senator has in mind submitted to the committee?

Mr. MEAD. It was submitted to the committee before it was approved by the War Department. It was then approved by the Board of Engineers, and by them sent to the committee. It is now receiving the same treatment which every other project in the same category receives—that is, inclusion in the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is a member of the committee.

Mr. MEAD. I am.

Mr. ADAMS. The amendment does not come from the committee, with the approval of the committee.

Mr. MEAD. The amendment is reported by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. At the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. Such amendments are offered at the request of Senators who have projects in the same category—that is, projects approved by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and by the War Department. They make up the category of projects included in the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I thought the committee did that.

Mr. MEAD. The custom of the committee is to accept projects in that particular category.

Mr. ADAMS. Regardless of the aggregate amount?

Mr. MEAD. No. Considerable judgment is exercised, as the Senator noticed yesterday.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Colorado I will say that always after a bill is prepared by the committee there is a lapse of time. In the present instance there was a lapse of 4 or 5 weeks. Surveys were in process, and reports came from the engineers and were made public documents. On the basis of those reports, according to the custom which I think has always obtained, Senators offer amendments. Those amendments stand on their own merits. They have not been before the committee. I think the pending amendment is fully in accord with the bill, and I am for it; but that is a matter for the Senate. The practice now being followed is precisely the practice which has always been followed since I have been a Member of the Senate. I cannot speak with authority of the time prior to 1930.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before a vote is taken on this amendment I wish to make a few observations which I think are pertinent.

I have no quarrel with the Committee on Commerce for its decision to separate the items into navigation and flood control or multiple-use projects; but I think the Senate ought to take a realistic view of what is going on and what has happened in the past few years.

Until a comparatively recent date no one heard anything about the Federal Government going into the development of power projects. Now, when any worthy navigation project is submitted, someone in the departments makes the suggestion—if it is not made in Congress—to add power to the project. The result is that if one is really trying to further a navigation project which calls for the construction of a reservoir, under the rule we are now following he is confronted with the necessity of eliminating power altogether or never getting his bill through the Senate.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that before the committee, and included in the original bill before it was cut up into three or four parts, was a project known as the Clark Hill project on the Savannah River, one of the largest rivers in this country flowing into the Atlantic Ocean. I call attention to the fact that that river is now navigable for a distance of 220 miles. It has deep water—30.26 feet—for a distance of some 22 miles from the Atlantic. I call attention to the fact that the failure to provide navigation upon that river is stagnating the growth of eastern Georgia and of western South Carolina. Those of us who originally favored this project favored it for navigation purposes. Incident to navigation, of course, was a degree of flood control for the city of Augusta and for the lands down the river between the city of Augusta and the city of Savannah, a distance of 222 miles.

Through the open river work going on from the time since the first steamboat sailed the Atlantic out of the port of Savannah, in the lower stretches of the Savannah especially, the Government has been spending money to make it navigable. Years ago we succeeded in obtaining an appropriation from Congress for the construction of a dam and lock 13 miles below the city of Augusta, which we thought would provide year-round navigation upon the river as far north as Augusta. It turned out that it did not do so. Instead of a 6-foot channel we now have approximately 3.8 or 4 feet of water in low-water periods. How can we remedy that situation? By building a reservoir on the Savannah River somewhere north of the city of Augusta. That is what we propose to do.

When a reservoir is built, of course, we have vast potential power possibilities; but we cannot utilize this potential power in a navigation bill under the rule adopted by the committee. Yesterday I prepared an amendment proposing to sacrifice every kilowatt of power in the project to which I have referred, proposing to make of it strictly a navigation project. I voted with the Senator from Oregon yesterday, but we lost that vote. I have hesitated to offer the amendment in a form to provide purely for a navigation project, because it would run up the cost of the pending bill. I do not know precisely how much, but it would run it up possibly as much as $17,000,000 or $18,000,000. However, by the addition of a relatively small amount of money to the appropriation, an addition recommended by the Board of Army Engineers, by the Power Commission, by the National Resources Committee and by another agency, to wit, a special commission appointed by the President of the United States, a vast amount of power could be produced which would make this a self-sustaining project. However, navigation on the Savannah River is so vital that those of us interested in this particular project are willing to sacrifice the power, let it go, and simply ask the Senate to provide navigation on the Savannah River.

The Board of Army Engineers estimates that more than a million tons of freight will move on this river by the construction of this reservoir which would give a continuous flow of water in the Savannah River sufficient to carry on commerce. More than 100,000 tons per annum are moving up and down the river, with virtually no water in its upper reaches. It is one of the largest rivers that enter the Atlantic Ocean; it flows through an area that is a heavy buyer of petroleum products, one of the heaviest buyers of commercial fertilizer in the United States, an area which has large timber resources, and vast kaolin and other clay deposits which could readily, promptly, and quickly move if there were sufficient water in the river.

How can we get the water? We can get the water by building a reservoir or, if you please, by putting another dam in the river, which would make it possible to generate power.

It would seem indefensible not to utilize the power. We were willing and anxious to use the power; we went to every known agency of the Government having to do with the question, and every one of them recommended it. We want to use it yet; but if the bill is to be stripped down to plain navigation projects, and only to navigation projects, it will not be possible to provide for the utilization of the power. If the Columbia River project had been adopted yesterday by the Senate we had contemplated offering the amendment purely for navigation purposes, eliminating all cost for the power. But what is the situation with which we are confronted this morning?

The Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Missouri very well said that the projects now being placed in the bill are only minor projects. That is the only special virtue they have. They do not call for quite so much money individually but, in the aggregate, their cost may foot up as high as the cost of the Columbia River or the Savannah River project. They may be most meritorious; undoubtedly they are; but if the line is to be drawn, first, because there is the possibility of power which legitimately and of necessity should be developed and for which there is an absolute outlet and a demand in the area, with the assurance of the Power Commission that purchasers stand ready to take over the power; and, second, we are to lose the project even if we should eliminate the cost of developing power because the cost of the bill will run too high. I do not see how I can refrain from offering the amendment and letting the Senate do as it wishes about it, because, in principle, there is not a particle of difference between a large meritorious project and many small projects, equaling the cost of the large project.

Actually, of course, the amount of money may be a little large; but, Mr. President, the South and the two States touched by this river are daily losing industries of magnitude. Why? Because industries desire to locate on navigable streams. They may not use river transportation; for the most part they would use it only for certain kinds of traffic; but they want to be on navigable streams. The city of Augusta, Ga., and the city of Columbia, S. C., and various other communities up and down that river are losing industries.

Other sections of the country have had their rivers developed to a very high degree and are constantly improving their harbors and their river navigation.

A little while ago some people were talking about the South being economic problem No. 1 of this Nation. It is that, and it always will be if we cannot have proper development there.

I am not complaining of the development that has been made elsewhere; I am not complaining of the great power projects that have been built in the Northwest or in other sections of the country; not at all; but here is a section which, as we are constantly reminded, presents the Nation's economic problem No. 1, and industries will not locate there because they want to be on navigable streams. We cannot have navigable streams because, forsooth, it would cost a little more money than a large number of various other kinds of projects of the same general character, the total cost of which, added up, perhaps, is more than the cost of this particular project and of the Columbia River project combined.

Mr. President, it is true, as has been said, that the other House has two committees in connection with waterway developments. I was very much impressed by the statement of the distinguished chairman of the committee yesterday. The House has a Committee on Rivers and Harbors and also a Committee on Flood Control. Each committee, of course, insists upon handling the projects which fall within its jurisdiction. It therefore seemed wise to restrict this bill. But, Mr. President, the Savannah River project will not be strictly a power project; it will still have a very large interest, as found by the Board of Army Engineers, chargeable to navigation. It is practicable and seemingly very proper to include provision for power where, of necessity, in a low-lying, level region such as Georgia and South Carolina and the Southeastern States generally, in order to impound the water, reservoirs must be constructed to assure a year-round flow so as to make a river navigable. Unless we can provide for such a development, I do not know how we are going to get any relief down there, and we will always be the No. 1 economic problem.

Mr. President, I do not know how many small navigation projects may be included in the bill, but before its passage I expect, after eliminating all power from it, to offer the amendment providing for the Clark Hill project, and let the Senate pass upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Georgia. I could not hear his last sentence. What was the amendment the Senator said he would offer?

Mr. GEORGE. I said I proposed to offer the amendment, after eliminating power development, so as to make it strictly a navigation project. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska I would rather not do that, but I recognize the situation which now exists.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I might as well now as at any other time say what seems to me ought to be said, and I am reminded of it by listening to the Senator from Georgia. I am not satisfied that it is advisable to separate the projects and place them in different bills. I realize the position taken by the committee, and I realize the strength of the argument presented by the chairman of the committee. It is true, as he says, that the House has two committees, one on flood control and one on rivers and harbors. While I frankly admit that many projects are 100-percent navigation projects, and many projects are 100-percent flood-control projects, still many projects are part flood control and part navigation. I do not see how we can logically divide flood-control projects and separate them from navigation projects. That seems to me to be an impossibility.

A multipurpose dam is absolutely demanded in some cases. That is admitted by everybody. There is no denial of it. On all flood-control projects, so far as I can see, there must always be a high dam. Flood-control projects hold back the water near the source, if possible, and prevent damage farther down the tributary, or farther down the main stream where a good many tributaries come in and in the aggregate create a large amount of damage and destruction of life and property. If the floods from the Rocky Mountains and the floods from the Allegheny Mountains happen to come at such a time that they meet at the Mississippi River, then we have the maximum amount of damage that can occur from floods. It may be that they will happen at different times, and in that event there is perhaps no damage from floods which, if put together, would do a great deal of damage.

That is the same principle, if we follow it down, which applies to the tributaries on each side of the Mississippi River. If we can retain the floodwaters of the Ohio and the Cumberland and the Tennessee on the east, and the rivers that come through Arkansas and Missouri and farther down on the west, and hold those floodwaters behind huge dams, they will be under the control of man. Instead of doing damage, they can be used so that they will become the servant of man and bring about a great deal of profit and happiness to the American people, because the water will be let out when it is needed to make the streams navigable. The water will be let out in one stream at a time. It will never be let out so that the water from several streams will congregate together and create a flood.

If a high dam is built to hold back floodwaters, it follows as night follows day, in almost every case—not in every one, but in almost every case—that the falling water will make it possible to produce electric power. Electric power is subsidiary, it is secondary, to flood control. I have always conceded that. The primary object is control of floods; but if, while controlling floods we can at the same time produce electricity, we are unmindful of our duty if we do not do so. If by the expenditure of a little more money we can produce a huge amount of electricity, it is perfectly foolish to fail to do so. If we separate these measures, however, we shall never be able to do anything of that kind.

I listened yesterday to the discussion of this phase of the subject by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], and I wish Senators would read what the Senator from Oklahoma said. It seems to me that what he said was perfectly logical. It cannot be disputed. It is as logical as to say that 1 and 1 make 2. We may pass a law saying that 1 and 1 make 3, but they will make 2 just the same. There are some things that we cannot change. Neither we nor the best engineers in the Army or out of the Army can hold back floods on the level prairie by building a dam out on the prairie. That cannot be done. God created the places where reservoirs can be built large enough to hold floodwaters. If He did not create such places, then the floodwaters cannot be held. It is then beyond the control of man to build a dam and have a large reservoir of storage water held back, first, to prevent too much water from coming down and, second, ready to let out when the stream is in need of water.

Therefore it seems to me that when we start to improve a river for navigation, unless it has been thoroughly surveyed and understood, it is foolish to say, in the present stage of civilization, that we shall have no flood control on that river, and—as will follow—no power. We can improve almost every river in the United States by low dams, and make them navigable during portions of the year at least; but we cannot control floods by dams of that kind.

The Ohio River is an illustration of what I have stated. It is improved by dams so as to make it navigable from Pittsburgh to its mouth. That is an undertaking which was commenced many years ago, when the late Representative Burton was in the House, and was chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It was my good fortune to serve in the House while he was there. Of all the acquaintances of my life, he was one of the men whom I regarded most highly. I thought he was one of the greatest statesmen of his time. He was an expert on river and harbor improvements, among many other things, and the Ohio River was his particular pet; and during his service in the House he succeeded in having the Ohio made navigable from Pittsburgh to its mouth.

That was many years ago, Mr. President. At that time no engineer thought of preventing floods by building high dams on the rivers and their tributaries near the source. The only way in which we then handled floods was by building huge levees. As the bottom of the river became higher, we built the levees higher; and the higher we built the levees, if a break came, the greater was the damage.

Mr. Burton afterward served a full term in the Senate, and part of another term. If he were here now, in the light of the wisdom that civilization has gained since the day he led those fights in the House and had the Ohio River made navigable, I think he himself would see that after all, while the plan he then advocated was the best thing the world knew at that time, it is out of date now. Instead of making the river navigable by low dams, if it were made navigable by high dams and the holding back of millions of acre-feet of water, that condition would be so far superior to the present navigation of the Ohio River that the two things could not be spoken of in the same breath. It is the most modern way. It is now admitted by the best engineers in the world that what the present civilized age needs in the improvement of rivers is multipurpose dams. That means dams that will be useful for flood control, that will be useful for navigation, and that will, if they can be so located, produce electric power; and that is what we ought to have.

It seems to me—I hope I am wrong about it, but it seems to me—that it is a mistake to deal with navigation and flood control in two separate legislative acts. In the case of many of the dams, we cannot say that they are more beneficial as navigation dams than as flood-control dams. The very dam about which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has so eloquently told us will hold back large bodies of water. If the water is not held back, at times of low water the stream will become unnavigable when it would be navigable if the stored waters were available to be let out at such times.

That is true when a series of low dams is built. That is what the Power Trust advocated for years: "Do not build anything but low dams." If low dams are built, however, in the first place it becomes impossible to control floods, because that cannot be done with low dams. In the next place, low dams will not be as good as high dams, because some of the rivers, most of the rivers, are too low for navigation in the dry season. That is true even of the Mississippi. In the wet season there is too much water unless it is held back; and that is true of almost every stream, with very few exceptions.

So, when low dams are built, if the water in the river gets low, and there is no more water to come from the source, navigation fails. That is not true with high dams. Ships will go more rapidly, there will not be as many dams. The great lakes which will be created will enable vessels to proceed with greater speed. There will not be so many locks on the stream. So now, in this day of civilization, it is admitted by practically all of the experts that the best way to control floods is by building dams as near the sources of the streams as possible at places where God has made reservoirs which will hold large quantities of water.

Mr. President, I was in the Senate when we began to change from the old system to the new. I saw the change come about. I remember the great Pathfinder Dam on the Platte River in Wyoming. I tried to provide by an amendment that one-half of the cost of that great dam should be paid out of the Federal Treasury, on the ground that it was a flood-control dam, on the ground that every gallon of water it held back saved settlements along the Mississippi, saved New Orleans, saved people along the entire route of the Mississippi River from what might otherwise have been great damage. I contended that the proper way to control floods was to build hundreds of other such dams, and that in the aggregate we would make our streams steady, practically the same in high water as in low water, and in the end we would have the best system of navigation to be found anywhere in the civilized world. At the same time, by the self-same act, we would save our people from millions of dollars of damage that would be caused every year by floods, and would save hundreds of lives that would be taken every year by floods.

The suggestion was denounced by some eminent engineers as a foolish theory. I remember that I was denounced for advocating it at the outset. It has now become the chief cornerstone of the temple, although the time was when it was rejected by all the able builders.

Mr. President, it seems to me the method proposed is the only way to control the floods which occur in the United States. We must control them no matter what the cost, no matter how long it takes. We have to control floods. When we have accomplished that, in addition to the things I have mentioned we will be conserving the soil of the United States. There are millions of tons of the best soil of the Mississippi Valley now out in the Gulf of Mexico and in the Atlantic Ocean. Every year on an average 400,000,000 tons of the most fertile soil in that great breadbasket passes out of the mouth of the Mississippi River into the Gulf of Mexico. A system of flood control will stop all that.

We will start with the high dams, with which we can hold back a large amount of water, like the dam, for instance, on the Missouri River, in Montana, which will hold back 20,000,000 acre-feet of water. We will extend that system to smaller dams as we pursue the subject further. Every stream flowing down a side hill will be controlled. There will be no end until we will have under control every flowing stream in the United States. It will cost hundreds of millions of dollars, it will take us a hundred years to complete the program, but when it is completed we will have a stable agriculture; we will have a soil which will remain on the land, to be cultivated by the farmer; we will have streams which will not vary between high and low water to any damaging degree. We will have produced an immense amount of electric power. We will have also a navigation system superior to any navigation system in the world. It is all ours, if we go about it in the right and proper way.

To accomplish this we should not differentiate in a bill like that now before us, and say that no amendments having for their object flood control, will be permitted on the bill; that everything in it must relate to navigation. Yet there is not one dam in one hundred built to control large floods which does not have a great value for navigation purposes. The two are intermingled. We cannot differentiate them. We might as well try to put together a scrambled egg as to try to take a dam and say how much is for flood control and how much is for navigation, and when a navigation amendment will cease to have to do with navigation and be mixed up with flood control. The two are naturally mixed up; they cannot be separated.

That is one reason why I am fearful of this bill, and I am fearful of the next bill, which will follow, which is to be called a flood-control bill, because there may be in some instances a dam built for flood control whose primary and greatest use will be for navigation. Such instances often occur. It is not possible to draw the line and say, "This is navigation and this is flood control."

Moreover, in the development of a stream for navigation it will sometimes be necessary to expend large amounts of money on a very short distance along the stream. There will be other segments where dams can be much farther apart. It is not possible to say, to begin with, that every 10 miles so much money shall be spent and no more, because there will be places where the amount appropriated will not be needed and other places where it will be needed. Everything must be taken into consideration and often navigation and flood control must be considered as one.

Speaking of flood control particularly, it is true almost without exception that flood-control works bring about improvement in navigation facilities. We might just as well as not call a flood-control bill a navigation bill. It would be proper thus to name it.

Mr. President, I regret that the committee have seen necessary to make this arbitrary division. I think it is illogical. I am afraid we are going to have trouble with it, and it makes me halt when it comes even to voting on the bill. I am afraid we would be establishing a precedent which would be damaging to the cause of conservation, the attempt to widen from year to year the possibility of the conservation of water, the soil, and all our natural resources.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD]. (Putting the question:) The "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division.

Mr. McNARY. Just a moment, Mr. President. Is this the amendment offered by the able Senator from Georgia?

The PRESIDING OFFICER: It is the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. McNARY. I am not advised as to what the amendment is. I observed just a moment ago that an amendment went through yesterday which carried only thirty-four million and a half dollars, for improvement of the East River, N. Y. I did not hear any economy-minded Senator object to that. It was in the same class with others which were defeated, but only cost a little more money. I am curious to know what is the nature of the amendment which is being offered for New York.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the amendment was fully explained by the Senator from New York, who is present. I much prefer that he respond to the inquiry of the Senator from Oregon. It was explained in the absence of the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. The amendment has been fully explained.

Mr. McNARY. Oh, I thought that amendment had been acted on. I was quite anxious that the amendment be adopted, because it related to a locality where projects were located which met with our approval. I have no objection. I am very happy to agree with the Senator that the amendment should go into the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division has been called for.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which increases the cost of an existing project $10,000. The project will enable vessels coming into the port to reach the municipal docks recently built.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, between lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

Sabine-Neches waterway, Tex.; House Document No. 685, Seventy-sixth Congress;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer an amendment for a survey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, between lines 13 and 14, it is proposed to insert:

Waterway from Alvin, Tex., to Intracoastal Canal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. I offer an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who is necessarily absent from the Senate today, respecting Cleveland Harbor, Ohio. It would alter the existing project, according to House Document No. 84, but would not add anything to the total appropriation. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, between lines 19 and 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

Cleveland Harbor, Ohio: The existing project set forth in House Document No. 84, Seventy-fourth Congress, and authorized by Public Law No. 392, Seventy-fifth Congress, is hereby modified to provide that cuts or partial cuts may be made before the related railroad bridges are modified or rebuilt when in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers such procedure will be advantageous to navigation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the amount involved in this item?

Mr. BAILEY. None at all. It does not add anything to the expense. It has to do with a harbor at Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. McNARY. Is it one of those flood-control projects brought about by reason of the recent high water?

Mr. BAILEY. Not that I know of. I am persuaded, on the assurance of the engineers, that there is no flood control in these amendments or in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. On behalf of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who is absent, I send forward an amendment which provides only for a survey in the ordinary course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 23, between lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

Channel from Havre de Grace, Md., to Red Point, Md., via Stump Point and Carpenter Point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the final amendment is recommended to me by the Board of Engineers. It deals with Seldovia Harbor, Alaska, and is described in House Document No. 702, Seventy-sixth Congress. It calls for $75,000. This harbor improvement is recommended as being valuable to our national defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, between lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

Seldovia Harbor, Alaska; House Document No. 702, Seventy-sixth Congress;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I rose to ask for recognition, but the distinguished Senator from North Carolina has already taken care of the amendment in which I was interested.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I have two additional amendments at the desk, which are in the same category as the amendment presented by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, between lines 23 and 24, it is proposed to insert the following:

Wilson Harbor, N. Y.; House Document No. 679, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is this for a project or a survey?

Mr. MEAD. It is for a project.

Mr. McNARY. What is the amount involved?

Mr. MEAD. One hundred thirty-one thousand dollars, with a local contribution, and an annual maintenance charge of $2,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I referred a little while ago to East River. A committee amendment dealt with East River. It called for an appropriation of $34,500,000. The amendment was adopted without any objection being made or voice raised in protest against it. Why was not the amendment now before us offered as a committee amendment?

Mr. MEAD. This amendment is in the same category as the amendments presented by the chairman of the committee. That is, it was approved by the Board of Army Engineers and the War Department, and sent to the committee after the bill had been written. I am presenting the amendment for the Representative from that district, who has been following the matter for a number of years. The original authorization was sponsored by my predecessor, the late Senator Copeland.

Mr. McNARY. This is a navigation project?

Mr. MEAD. Purely navigation on Lake Ontario, where the facility now exists.

Mr. McNARY. It is the same sort of project with regard to navigation as the Umatilla project, which was acted upon yesterday?

Mr. MEAD. It is the same as the Umatilla project was written. It is exactly the same.

Mr. McNARY. I am for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, between lines 14 and 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

Larchmont Harbor, N. Y.; House Document No. 697, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the amount involved in the last amendment?

Mr. MEAD. The estimated cost is $104,000, and the local contribution is $52,000.

Mr. McNARY. Does it provide for navigation?

Mr. MEAD. Purely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I send forward an amendment providing for a survey and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 25, between lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

Bransons Cove, Lower Machodock River, Va.
Davis Creek, Mathews County, Va.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, between lines 16 and 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

Cranes Creek, Va.; House Document No. 687, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, between lines 18 and 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

Totuskey, Va.; House Document No. 686, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I present one other amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 7, it is proposed to insert "s" after the word "Document", and in line 8, it is proposed to strike out "224" and insert in lieu thereof "224 and 683."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. What was the cost of the amendment offered by the Senator a moment ago?

Mr. BYRD. The cost of the first amendment was $7,500. The project is approved by the Army engineers in the report which has just come in.

The cost of the amendment providing for Totuskey Creek, Va., is $45,000.

The cost of the next amendment, which relates to Norfolk Harbor, and improvements which are necessary for the use of the Government largely, is $182,000.

Mr. McNARY. Are they all navigation projects?

Mr. BYRD. They are all navigation projects.

Mr. McNARY. And located in Virginia?

Mr. BYRD. Located in Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I send forward an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 29, after line 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

Bayou Lafourche, La., from Donaldsonville to the Intracoastal Waterway, via Bayou Boeuf, Assumption Parish.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does the amendment provide for a preliminary survey?

Mr. OVERTON. The amendment provides for a preliminary survey, but calls for no money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. I offer another amendment providing for a preliminary survey, but involving no appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, line 3, after the word "Louisiana" it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

Channels in Louisiana between the Gulf of Mexico and the Intracoastal Waterway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, we have adopted section 9, being a Senate amendment, fixing the sum authorized to be appropriated at $231,090,950. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider that vote in order that we may correct the sum. The sum now would not be in excess of $150,000,000, and if there is a reconsideration I shall ask that we strike out the "$231,090,950" and insert "not exceeding $150,000,000." The purpose is to correct the amount.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from North Carolina as to what effect the additions that have been made just now would have upon that proposal, because even surveys cost money. I assume the Senator included them in the total amount.

Mr. BAILEY. The calculation indicates between $144,000,000 and $145,000,000, and as there is a reasonable doubt there, and a possibility of mistake, I was going to offer the amendment "not exceeding $150,000,000." I have the exact figure on my desk.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Was the Senator correcting the total to take care of these new improvements?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. That takes in all of them.

Mr. PEPPER. The reason I asked the question was that there is one more amendment in the same category affecting Florida.

Mr. BAILEY. All the amendments submitted by me have been taken into consideration in arriving at the sum of $150,000,000, and unless the Senator has a $5,000,000 project, or something like that——

Mr. PEPPER. If the amendment is the one the chairman had a moment ago, I have no objection, but it has not yet been acted on by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will be authorized to correct the total as provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, between lines 23 and 24, it is proposed to insert the following:

Waterway from Punta Rasa to Stuart and Fort Pierce, Fla.; House Document No. 696, Seventy-sixth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	King	Reynolds
Ashurst	Davis	La Follette	Russell
Austin	Donahey	Lodge	Schwartz
Bailey	Ellender	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Frazier	Lundeen	Sheppard
Barbour	George	McKellar	Shipstead
Barkley	Gerry	McNary	Slattery
Bilbo	Gillette	Maloney	Smathers
Bone	Glass	Mead	Smith
Brown	Green	Miller	Stewart
Bulow	Guffey	Minton	Thomas, Idaho
Burke	Gurney	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Townsend
Caraway	Hatch	Nye	Truman
Chandler	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Chavez	Herring	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Pepper	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, between lines 15 and 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

Olympia Harbor, Wash.; House Document No. 699, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I send to the desk a letter of explanation from the War Department, and ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: 1. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, by resolution adopted April 4, 1939, requested the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to review the reports on Olympia Harbor, Wash., as contained in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 75, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, and previous reports, with a view to determining if it is advisable to modify the existing project in any way at this time. I enclose the report of the Board in response thereto.

2. After full consideration of the reports secured from the district and division engineers, the Board recommends modification of the existing project for Olympia Harbor, Wash., to provide entrance channel 500 feet wide to and including a turning basin 3,350 feet long and generally 960 feet wide, suitably flared at the entrance, substantially as shown on the accompanying map, all at a depth of 30 feet at mean lower low water, at an estimated first cost of $88,000, with no increase in the estimated annual cost of maintenance; subject to the provision that local interests furnish, free of cost to the United States, suitably bulkheaded areas for the retention of dredged materials when and as required.

3. After due consideration of these reports, I concur in the views and recommendations of the Board.

Very truly yours,

J. L. SCHLEY,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, a few minutes ago, in the course of some remarks in the Senate, I said that I intended to offer an amendment providing for the Clark Hill Reservoir project, eliminating all the cost of installation and operation of power facilities. On consideration and after consultation with others who are equally interested in the project, it seems unwise to separate the power from the navigation features of the report made by the Board of Engineers. For that reason I shall not offer the amendment which I had intended to offer.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, between lines 14 and 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

Newburyport Harbor, Mass.: House Document No. 703, Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator state the cost of the project?

Mr. WALSH. It is intended to modify an existing project. The estimated cost of the entire project is $102,000. The cost of park improvements is $27,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have examined the bill under consideration and have reached the conclusion that this is not a propitious time for the enactment of the so-called river and harbor bill. Large demands are made upon the Federal Treasury for appropriations to meet the imperative needs of the Government. Prudence and wisdom demand that economies should be effected wherever possible. That means that appropriations should not be made unless there are compelling reasons for the same. It is obvious that notwithstanding the very large revenues obtained by the Government there will be a deficit of several billions of dollars for the next fiscal year. Senators are familiar with the fact that we are approaching—if we have not reached—the authorized limit of bonded indebtedness. The administration, as I am advised, is endeavoring to keep within the $45,000,000,000 authorized bonded indebtedness. Certainly Congress should refuse to appropriate for projects which, though worthy and meritorious, are not imperatively needed at the present time. There are so many pressing needs of the Government which call for large appropriations that, as I have indicated, projects, even though possessing merit, which are not imperatively needed during the coming year should not receive favorable consideration.

In the confused condition throughout the world we do not know what the future developments will be which may call for unusual and, perhaps, unexpected appropriations. Because of the disturbed world conditions, it is believed by many Americans that the question of national defense is of prime importance and that ample funds should be made available to meet any contingency or any danger that may arise. In this observation I do not mean that the United States will be involved in international conflicts; indeed, every reasonable effort should be made to avoid our country being drawn into any international controversy. However, in many parts of the world there are raging conflicts, and no one can foresee the area within which the fires will be confined. In view of the enormous demands which are being made upon the Treasury to meet the expenditures for the coming year, every possible effort should be made to introduce economies in all branches of the Government.

As I understand, there has been no request by the President of the United States for the passage of this or any river or harbor bill at this session of Congress. Indeed, my information is that the President has indicated opposition to this measure. In my opinion the position of the President is sound and should be approved by the Congress. Undoubtedly there are some items in the bill that have merit and which at a later date should receive favorable consideration, but, as I have indicated, there is no valid demand for their present consideration. Notwithstanding this fact the committee has reported a measure calling for more than $231,000,000, and since the bill has been reported this stupendous sum has been increased by the adoption of various amendments calling for further appropriations. In the light of the condition of the Treasury, and the large appropriations imperatively required, I cannot find justification for the enactment of this measure.

There have been many river and harbor bills since I have been in the Senate, and I confess that most of them carried, in my opinion, appropriations greatly in excess of any legitimate demand. We have appropriated, during the past 20 years hundreds of millions of dollars for so-called river and harbor bills, and in my opinion, from the records which I have examined, from the testimony adduced at the hearings, I have believed that a very considerable part of such appropriations were not justified.

Soon after coming to the Senate I undertook to acquaint myself with the provisions of river and harbor bills and with the appropriations which had been made from the days of Washington until that time for so-called river and harbor bills. A very able Senator from Iowa, Judge Kenyon, was courageously opposing many provisions in the river and harbor bills and demonstrating the unwisdom of such provisions. I undertook the task of examining every appropriation made for rivers and harbors from the days of Washington down to approximately 20 years ago. I read all the reports that had been submitted by the engineers and many of the hearings in support of the measures referred to. My recollection is that the appropriations for rivers and harbors, from the beginning of the Government down to the time when I made the examination, were over $1,000,000,000. Many of the projects in the measures referred to were unimportant and the money expended in their behalf brought no adequate returns. Many of the reports indicated that the projects dealt with little streams or bayous and swamps and unimportant and unnavigable streams.

I have examined the bill under consideration and find a large number of items for small and unimportant creeks and streams which cannot be regarded as aids to navigation.

The measure before us is similar to many of the bills which I examined during the past 20 years and deals with projects which are not of even local importance. These will not serve commercial purposes nor will they be competent to carry boats or to serve for the transportation of commodities.

Mr. President, I cannot help but believe that the measure before us possesses many of the infirmities and injustices found in former river and harbor bills. In view of all the facts I feel constrained to vote against the bill.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, it seems to me that as we proceed through this session, whatever subject comes up, meritorious as most of them may be, we keep on increasing the amount of the expenditure. At the same time somebody is holding back appropriations which will provide for relief, which will take care of the poor and hungry and the unemployed. When we get to that point, in all probability, we will look into the sack and say, "There is nothing left"; and that will be the reason why proper provision will not be made for those who most need it.

So far as I am concerned, I do not see any outstanding necessity for the passage of this bill at this session, proposing, as it does, to start a program 7 years ahead. I think we can well afford to let this measure go over until next year.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to express hearty concurrence with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ]. In all this debate not a single word has been said about any immediate or urgent necessity for the expenditures called for by the pending measure.

I disagree entirely with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and his theory of dams that can be used both for flood control and navigation. If a dam is to be used for flood-control purposes, it should be empty; if it is to be used for navigation purposes, it should be more or less full.

I do not intend to discuss the merits of the bill, but I think it ought to fail. I believe there is no justification for this body voting an authorization for any such amount as is included in this bill, when there are so many other things for which money is urgently and desperately needed. Therefore, I hope the yeas and nays will be granted, and upon the roll call I expect to vote against the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. BURKE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Lodge	Schwartz
Austin	Davis	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Donahey	McKellar	Sheppard
Bankhead	Ellender	McNary	Shipstead
Barbour	Frazier	Maloney	Slattery
Barkley	George	Mead	Smathers
Bone	Gerry	Minton	Smith
Brown	Glass	Murray	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Green	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Guffey	Norris	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hale	Nye	Townsend
Byrnes	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hayden	Overton	Wagner
Chandler	Hughes	Pepper	Walsh
Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	Wiley
Clark, Mo.	King	Reynolds
Connally	La Follette	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is unavoidably absent. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

Mrs. CARAWAY (when Mr. MILLER's name was called). My colleague the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] is detained at one of the departments on official business. He asked me to state that, if present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when Mr. STEWART's name was called). My colleague the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] is necessarily absent on important business. I do not know how he would vote if he were present. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who would vote "yea"; and

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], who would vote "yea."

I am advised that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], if present, would vote "yea."

All the Senators named and the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] are necessarily absent.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senators from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE and Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained in various Government departments.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is conducting hearings in New York for the Committee on Banking and Currency and is, therefore, necessarily absent.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on public business.

I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] would vote "yea."

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

Mr. PEPPER. I announce that my colleague the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] is detained in Florida. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD. My colleague the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] is necessarily absent. As has been announced by the Senator from Vermont, he is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and would vote "yea" if present.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—40

Bailey	Davis	Maloney	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Ellender	Mead	Sheppard
Barbour	George	Minton	Shipstead

Gibson	Holt	Taft

So the bill (H. R. 6264) was passed.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BAILEY, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. McNARY conferees on the part of the Senate.

RELIEF OF VOLUNTEER OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS WITH PHILIPPINE SERVICE, SPANISH WAR—VETO MESSAGE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States to the House of Representatives, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 289, a bill for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899.

The provisions of this bill are almost identical with the provisions of H. R. 2024 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, which I returned to the Congress without my approval on September 22, 1935, and the provisions of H. R. 2904, from which I withheld my approval and indicated the reasons therefor in my memorandum of disapproval dated June 20, 1938. The principal reasons for withholding my approval from the two bills in question are set forth in my memorandum of June 20, 1938, in connection with H. R. 2904, as follows:

> The effect of this bill is that the beneficiaries thereof "shall be entitled to the travel pay and allowance for subsistence provided in sections 1289 and 1290, Revised Statutes, as then amended and in effect, as though discharged April 11, 1899, by reason of expiration of enlistment, and appointed or reenlisted April 12, 1899, without deduction of travel pay and subsistence paid such officers or soldiers on final muster out subsequent to April 11, 1899."
> I am advised by the Secretary of War that there were approximately 15,000 officers and soldiers of the volunteer forces of the United States in the Philippine Islands at the conclusion of peace with the Kingdom of Spain, who would become beneficiaries of this act.
> The Comptroller General in his report on February 23, 1935, advises that the enactment of this bill would authorize payment of travel pay at the rate of 1 day's pay and one ration for each 20 miles, inclusive of the distance by water from the Philippine Islands to San Francisco, approximately 8,000 miles, and that such payments for the water travel alone will exceed 1 year's pay plus 1 day's ration for each day of such period. It is estimated the cost of the legislation will approximate $7,000,000.
> Congress has heretofore recognized the service of these officers and men by the award of a special medal, and there was also an allowance by the act of Congress approved January 12, 1899, of 2 months' extra pay to all volunteers who served honestly and faithfully beyond the continental limits of the United States. I join most heartily in recognizing and appreciating the patriotic service of these men.
> However, approval of this bill would result in the payment of a gratuity to each of the officers and men concerned, in an amount exceeding his pay for a full year, plus the value of rations for the period involved in sea travel from the Philippines to the United States, a benefit utterly without warrant, since each individual concerned has already received transportation and subsistence at Government expense for the journey performed in addition to full pay for the entire time.
> I have recently signed an act restoring pensioners of the War with Spain and Philippine Insurrection to their full rate of pension. I feel that no breach of trust has been committed by the Government as regards the men who served their country in the War with Spain and Philippine Insurrection, and from the facts in this case, general legislation upon this subject as provided in H. R. 2024 is not deemed advisable.

In view of the fact that the circumstances involved in this proposal are the same as they were when the previous bills were under consideration, I find no justification for changing my position with respect thereto.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 23, 1940.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the message just received from the House of Representatives, with the accompanying House bill 289, respecting the passage of the bill over the veto of the President of the United States, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9007, making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

PROTECTION OF CERTAIN FOREIGN PROPERTY WITHIN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside so that I may bring up a joint resolution of an emergency character, to which I feel very confident there will be no objection, and which will occasion no protracted debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection if the measure will take only a short time.

Mr. WAGNER. I feel very sure that is the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what is the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. What is the joint resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the title of the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 252) to amend section 5 (b) of the act of October 6, 1917, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a statement of the nature of the joint resolution should be made. I am not conversant with it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New York for that purpose.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I will briefly explain the joint resolution, if that is what the Senator wants.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; that is what I am requesting.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senate will remember that on April 10, 1940, the President issued an Executive order and the Secretary of the Treasury issued regulations, under authority of section 5 (b) of the Trading With the Enemy Act of 1917, as amended by the act of March 9, 1933. The Executive order imposed certain restrictions upon any transactions in foreign exchange; and upon the transfer of credits from one bank to another within the United States or from a bank of the United States to a foreign bank, and any transactions in evidences of indebtedness, or evidences of the ownership of property, in which a national of the Governments of Norway or Denmark, or the Governments of Norway or Denmark themselves, had any interest, by any person within the United States, or subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

The purpose of the joint resolution, of course, is very clear. We want to protect property within the jurisdiction of the United States which is owned by these governments or their nationals.

Shortly after the Executive order was issued, one of the large banking firms in New York raised the question whether, under the amendments of 1933 to the Trading With the Enemy Act, the President had power to issue an Executive order regulating transactions in evidences of indebtedness or evidences of the ownership of property; in other words, whether or not these regulations could be imposed upon transfers of stocks and bonds and other evidences of ownership.

The contention was that the power was limited to transactions in foreign exchange or the transfer of credit. There was no question that under the act of 1917 the broader power existed, from the wording of the act itself. Of course, that act operated only in wartime, not during peacetime emergency situations.

In 1933 Congress amended the act so as to make it applicable during peacetime emergencies, and to authorize the President to deal also with the hoarding of gold and the exportation of gold. In redrafting the act, the words "evidences of indebtedness" were omitted. It was clearly an inadvertence, because it was asserted here on the Senate floor, as well as in the House, that the amendment was not intended to weaken in any way the power of the President to deal with these matters, but rather to extend those powers to include the hoarding of gold and the exportation of gold.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was the report of the committee unanimous or substantially so?

Mr. WAGNER. The report of the committee was absolutely unanimous, and I am sure that the vote of the Senate will be unanimous.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It should also be stated—and I am sure the Senator omitted it by oversight—that the joint resolution is intended not only to protect the nationals of Norway and Denmark who have interest in stocks, securities, and other property in the United States, but it is also intended to protect American citizens in the event they have claims of any sort growing out of these transactions, and therefore we preserve the property not only for its owners but for the benefit of Americans who may have claims.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; we are also protecting the banks which may be called upon to make transfers of securities.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not read the joint resolution, but it is not restricted to Denmark and Norway, is it?

Mr. WAGNER. I said that the Executive order was restricted to Norway and Denmark. The President may deal with any similar situation arising in any country.

Mr. CONNALLY. The measure is general in its character. If war should break out in South Africa, it would apply, would it not?

Mr. WAGNER. It would apply anywhere, in Sweden, or Holland, or any of the countries which may be invaded. Wherever the President would feel that the emergency justified this protection, he would be authorized to afford it.

I was referring to the Executive order issued by the President, which dealt only with Norway and Denmark, because they are the countries which have been invaded just recently.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not desire to interrupt the trend of the Senator's thought, but the joint resolution would reenact the language heretofore used, "period of national emergency."

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator know of any distinction in the law as it exists at present, or as he is about to have it reenacted, between a period of national emergency and a period of limited national emergency? I can perhaps make my question clear to the Senator by adding that the expression has been used all over the country in the newspapers and magazines, and it has even been used by the President of the United States himself in a proclamation which he issued proclaiming a period of "limited national emergency." Does the Senator know of any such term in the law?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not. The authorization is to issue an Executive order if an emergency exists, and during the period of the emergency.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator, I think, does not quite apprehend my question. It has been said that at the outbreak of the European war the President issued a proclamation of "limited national emergency." As I have said, the President used that phrase. The President's proclamation, which he issued on the outbreak of the war, was an unlimited proclamation of national emergency, was it not?

Mr. WAGNER. I assume it was.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator has taken the trouble to read the proclamation, he knows that it was a proclamation of an unlimited national emergency. So that the term which is so commonly used, or misused, as I have said, even by the President himself, that it is "a limited national emergency," is an error, is it not?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not care to pass upon that question. I do not think it is involved in this joint resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think it is very much involved, because the Senator is using exactly the same phrase in this joint resolution that is used in the President's proclamation, and which has been misused in the proclamation, "limited national emergency."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator referred to any proclamation the President might issue relating to credits or other evidences of indebtedness while nations were at war. I have seen the joint resolution only within the last 5 minutes, and read it very hurriedly, but it seems to me the President would have a right to issue a proclamation as to any foreign country where there was war, or likelihood of war.

Mr. WAGNER. I did not say it was limited to nations at war, because Denmark, so far as our formal recognition of the situation is concerned, is not at war. What I meant to say was that there must be a situation with reference to other countries which presented the kind of emergency in which we would be called upon to act.

Mr. RUSSELL. The President would have the same power with respect to Italy, Japan, Spain, or any other country.

Mr. WAGNER. I think so. We are not proposing to give him any power with reference to the nations referred to by the Senator which he has not had, in one case, since the World War, and in the other case, since 1933. We are not proposing to add in any way to the powers the President now has, and has had since these laws were enacted. This is merely a clarifying amendment. There would be no problem if it were not for the one technical question which has been raised, which neither the Attorney General nor the counsel for the Treasury Department, or others who have studied it, regard as having any foundation. The amendment is proposed in order to protect our bankers and other individuals who may be called upon either to transfer credits or transfer securities or other evidences of ownership. Under the Executive order, they are not permitted to make such transfers without a license.

I wish to emphasize the point that this does not absolutely prohibit the transfers, it merely provides that the Government may investigate to determine whether the transfer was made voluntarily or under duress, to be perfectly candid. If the transfer is voluntarily made, our Government, of course, will in no way interfere. But where the transfer is induced, as can be easily established, by duress, we have a right to protect the national of any country against that sort of an imposition, using a very mild term, with respect to securities and other evidences of ownership subject to our laws.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that the purpose of the proposed legislation is to respect the fact that this property was sent to this country at a time when the countries concerned were in fact at peace, if not now at peace?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. And is not this measure for the purpose of preventing change of title of the property here in the United States by conquest, or by any other forcible or violent means?

Mr. WAGNER. That is exactly the purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. For instance, in Norway today the invaders, the newspapers say, are in charge of the city of Oslo, the capital, having taken over the local government, but it is entirely conceivable that under those circumstances banking institutions, or any individual, would be forced, through fear or otherwise, to issue an order transferring securities in the United States which those in control might wish to have transferred. Is not that true?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. Suppose the Senator and I were citizens of one of those countries——

Mr. CONNALLY. I would rather not make a supposition of that kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. Let us say, anyone.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have enough troubles here without having any more over there.

Mr. WAGNER. I have, too. Suppose, for instance, some of the citizens of Denmark had very large fortunes here, in the form of securities or otherwise, and the present Government of Denmark, under pressure from the invaders, made a call on such citizens and said, "We would like to have these securities." Suppose such a citizen refused. The Senator and I know exactly what would happen. He would be absolutely helpless. Under the proposed law the United States Government would inquire into the reason for the transfer, the circumstances under which it was asked. If we found that it was the result of duress, we would refuse to grant a license. It is a protective measure.

Mr. CONNALLY. In reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], I do not quite gather what he is aiming at when he talks about an emergency and a limited emergency. Of course, the powers of the Government of the United States under the Constitution are the same in time of war as in time of peace. They are no greater and no less. An emergency is some occurrence, either financial or physical, that is unusual, something which brings on a critical situation, something out of the ordinary. But even in that kind of a crisis or emergency, the Government cannot do anything except what is warranted by the Constitution.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. CONNALLY. So I think that much of this talk poking fun at the emergency is beside the point. If there is an extreme drought, during which large portions of the country are parched and people are dying, that is an emergency, and we take action. In an emergency of that kind, we exercise functions which we would not think of exercising in ordinary times.

Mr. WAGNER. As a matter of fact, in 1933 Congress exercised that power by amending the Trading with the Enemy Act so that the President might deal with an emergency which we then recognized, an emergency taking the form of gold hoarding.

Mr. CONNALLY. A financial emergency.

Mr. WAGNER. It was a financial crisis, but it was an emergency. We recognized it as such, and conferred that power upon the President. Pursuant to that authority, he issued the Executive order about which we all know.

But the point I wanted to emphasize is that this is a clarifying amendment, to protect some of our bankers against what I regard as a very technical objection that was made; namely, that while the President had the power to deal with foreign-exchange transactions and the transfer of credit, he might not have the power to deal with "evidences of ownership." I do not believe the point is well taken, but this resolution would remove any manner of doubt.

That was clearly set forth in the act of 1917, and in redrafting the section in 1933, I take it the draftsman felt that those words were sufficient to include evidences of indebtedness and evidences of ownership of property. There was no intention in 1933 to interfere in any way with the power the President already had, but simply to extend those powers to include emergency in time of peace, and dealing particularly with the monetary situation. In order to protect the bankers who have already acted, and who will be called upon to act, I think it will be wiser to clarify the law by including this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator how this matter comes to the Senate at this time. Was the joint resolution favorably reported by the committee?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. The committee was in session all yesterday afternoon. Nearly every member of the committee who was present is present now. We all recognized the matter as presenting such an emergency that Congress ought to act at once. I may say to the Senator from California that the House committee recognized the existence of the emergency, and they also unanimously reported the joint resolution favorably to the House. I do not know whether the House passed the resolution today or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Committee on Banking and Currency was in session yesterday and today considering the joint resolution?

Mr. WAGNER. We were in session yesterday, and both parties were represented. Most, if not all, members of the committee were in attendance. The Secretary of the Treasury was heard upon the situation. The committee, not only without a dissenting vote, but with approval, reported the bill and asked me to attempt to bring it up today if I could, because we recognized the seriousness of the situation. I am sure the Senator does.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am not anxious to delay the Senator from New York at all, but I should like an opportunity to read the joint resolution. It has just come to the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. I will tell the Senator what is proposed to be done by the joint resolution. The act of 1917 gave the President the power to restrict transactions in the war emergency situation, so that no transfers could be made by citizens of another country owning property here without a license from the Government. The purpose of that was to protect the property of innocent foreigners in this country from being—to use a very frank word—looted.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. How would it be looted in this country?

Mr. WAGNER. I gave an instance earlier in the day. Take the situation now existing. Let us say the Senator is a citizen of Denmark. The German Government has overrun that country, and now, as a realistic matter, while we have not recognized the existence of a state of war, the German Government is in complete control of the Danish Government and the Danish people. The Senator must have read of the amount of property which the German Government has already taken from thousands of Danish citizens, such as cows, dairy products, and the like.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. What is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent has been asked for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 252, which has not yet been read.

Mr. McNARY. Has any request been made for the regular order, so as to bring the unfinished business back before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. McNARY. It appears there is some controversy with respect to the joint resolution and some lack of knowledge of its provisions. I do not think there is any need to rush the measure through in this fashion. I shall therefore have to call for the regular order.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, of course if the Senator insists, I am powerless. But in this tragic moment, when two democratic countries have been invaded unjustly, countries which wanted to live at peace with the world and to maintain their neutrality, I appeal to the Senator that he permit action to be taken on this matter. We have read that the citizens, and the governments themselves, are subject to the wishes of the invaders. What I am pleading for is that we do nothing to help the invaders to secure by duress the properties of the citizens and nationals of the invaded countries.

The Executive order issued by the President met with universal approval by the country. Editorials in newspapers all over the United States expressed their approval. Now there is an interim period, because of the construction which has been placed upon that order, during which it may very well be that the securities and belongings of some of the nationals of the invaded countries will be taken from them by duress.

I appeal to the Senate not to waste a moment's time at least to protect those securities of nationals of the invaded countries which may be in this country. I do not even know what may happen overnight, because word has undoubtedly reached there that we are proposing to amend the existing law. The transfers of credits and securities may be accomplished very quickly by cable or radio message. If the construction that has been placed upon the law by some bank in New York is correct, the transfer will have to be made to the invader, who will secure that property. That is why I do not think we ought to waste a moment's time, and I know the Senate does not desire to waste a moment, in an emergency matter of this kind.

Mr. BARKLEY. The joint resolution simply proposes to amend the law with respect to the transfer of property.

Mr. McNARY. That may be. I may be in sympathy with the proposal, and others may be in sympathy with it, but no one has had an opportunity to read the joint resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was favorably reported by the committee today.

Mr. McNARY. Nothing has been said about it. I do not know whether it has even been placed on the calendar as yet.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is on the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. I do not think I should oppose the adoption of the joint resolution, but I think that at least we should have time to read it. We should not act upon it in so short a time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator from Oregon is mistaken. There should not be any time allowed to read a joint resolution offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest that the Senate proceed with the regular order, and that Senators be given an opportunity to read the joint resolution. Is there a report on it?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. Yesterday when I introduced the joint resolution I said it was a matter of great importance, and that I hoped to bring it up today. I thought that would be notice to Senators that it would be brought up. It is only a technical matter.

Mr. McNARY. The joint resolution was introduced yesterday, and reported today, and an attempt is now made by unanimous consent to have it acted upon, without giving an opportunity to Senators to read the joint resolution. I think a matter of a few hours' delay would not change the complexion of the situation.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator means to delay action until sometime later during the day?

Mr. McNARY. That may be. I wish an opportunity to read the joint resolution. I am speaking not solely for myself. I hope to be entirely in sympathy with the proposal, but I think we ought to have a chance to read the joint resolution and the report. There is no use of reporting a measure unless Senators are given an opportunity to read the report.

Mr. BARKLEY. In line with the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon, I suggest that the Senate proceed with the measure under consideration, and in the meantime Senators can examine the joint resolution, and it may be that we can conclude action upon it this afternoon.

Mr. WAGNER. I will say to the Senator that I would not have made this fervent plea except that I was informed by the two Government departments involved that the measure was of an emergency character, in view of what was going on abroad at this moment, and what might well happen overnight with respect to other neutrals.

Mr. McNARY. I do not doubt that, but I do not believe the situation will greatly change if we delay action for a few hours.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. McNARY. I have nothing to withhold.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator asked for the regular order.

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to present an interrogatory. If either the majority leader or the Senator in charge of this bill will point out new language in the bill it will help us a great deal. The report does not point that out.

Mr. BARKLEY. I can read it to the Senator. It is in three lines. It is an amendment of section 5 of the act of October 6, 1917, as amended.

Mr. WAGNER. The words "evidences of indebtedness and evidences of ownership of property" are added. These are substantially the words inadvertently dropped in the revision of 1933.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is the new language.

After the word "currency", it is proposed to insert—and any transfer, withdrawal, or exportation of—

Mr. AUSTIN. Where is the Senator reading?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am reading from a memorandum. On page 2, line 4, after the word "currency", it is proposed to insert:

And any transfer, withdrawal, or exportation of or dealing in any property with which any foreign state, or a national, or political subdivision thereof, as defined by the President, has any interest.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask one further question? I observe that the paragraph begins with the words—

During time of war or during any other period of national emergency declared by the President, the President may, through any agency that he may designate. * * *

Mr. WAGNER. That is the present law, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have the present law before me and I do not observe those words in it.

Mr. WAGNER. That language is in either that law or the law which was amended in 1917.

Mr. BARKLEY. That language will be found in section 2 of the Banking Act.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me call the language to the attention of the Senator from Vermont. In volume 48, Statutes at Large, page 1, is found an act "to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes." Section 2 of the act amends the act of 1917; and therein appears the language which has now been altered, as the Senator from Kentucky has read.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the language "during time of war or during any other period of national emergency" appear there?

Mr. DANAHER. It does. If it would be a convenience, I shall be glad to read it into the RECORD.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think it would be a good idea. Then we shall have the act before us.

Mr. DANAHER. In order that the RECORD may show exactly what the existing law is, let it appear that in volume 40, Statutes at Large, on page 415, in section 5, subsection (b), we find the act of 1917, which was amended by an act approved in 1933, appearing in 48 Statutes at Large, page 1, which provides:

SEC. 2. Subdivision (b) of section 5 of the act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat. L. 411), as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) During time of war or during any other period of national emergency declared by the President, the President may, through any agency that he may designate, or otherwise, investigate, regulate, or prohibit, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, by means of licenses or otherwise, any transactions in foreign exchange, transfers of credit between or payments by banking institutions as defined by the President, and export, hoarding, melting, or earmarking of gold or silver coin or bullion or currency, by any person within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof; and the President may require any person engaged in any transaction referred to in this subdivision to furnish under oath complete information relative thereto, including the production of any books of account, contracts, letters, or other papers in connection therewith in the custody or control of such person, either before or after such transaction is completed.

I think the Senator from Kentucky, in response to a question from the Senator from Vermont, inadvertently used the word "property" with reference to the changes appearing on page 2, line 5, of the joint resolution. I am sure he did not mean "property"; for the language is, "any evidences of indebtedness or evidences of ownership of property." There is a distinction, in that the words "evidences of indebtedness" are definitely new.

In addition, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Vermont will find that there is new language on page 2, in lines 12 and 13, or thereabouts.

Mr. AUSTIN. Also in line 10.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think the Senator will agree that at any time when I spoke with reference to this legislation I used the words "evidences of ownership."

Mr. DANAHER. I agree.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator from Vermont will compare the proposed amendment with the language of the 1917 act I think he will see that it is practically the same language which was omitted in the amendment of 1933. I am sure it was omitted by mere inadvertence, because at that time there was no intention in any way to limit the power of the President with reference to dealing in evidences of ownership of property.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am entirely satisfied with the explanation of the difference between the text of Senate Joint Resolution 252 and the original act in Fortieth Statutes, page 415.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 252?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a while ago I asked for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order has been called for.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Department of Labor—office of the Secretary", on page 3, line 15, after the word "thereunder", to strike out "$1,544,000" and insert "$1,684,000", so as to read:

Traveling expenses: For all traveling expenses, except traveling expenses incident to the deportation of aliens, under the Department of Labor, including all bureaus and divisions thereunder, $1,684,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to make a report to the Senate on the present status of the enforcement of child-labor legislation. I know this is a matter which is of interest to Senators. The bill now before us carries an appropriation for the enforcement of the child-labor provisions of the wage and hour law which Congress enacted in 1937, and which I am sure we all thought would put an end to child labor in the United States. I think we can all agree that that law at least marked a milestone in the long campaign which has been under way in the United States to abolish child labor.

The officials of the Labor Department who appeared before our subcommittee were asked to give information as to the number of violations of the child-labor provisions of the law which they had detected since the act went into effect. In order that the RECORD may be complete, I shall now read the list of States where violations of the child-labor law occurred, and the number of violations in each State, for the period beginning in November 1938 and ending December 31, 1939:

Alabama, 5; Arkansas, 50; Delaware, 29; Florida, 2; Georgia, 4; Illinois, 92; Indiana, 1; Kentucky, 11; Louisiana, 419; Maine, 3; Maryland, 27; Massachusetts, 6; Mississippi, 13; Missouri, 30; New Jersey, 26; New York, 21; North Carolina, 1; Pennsylvania, 2; Rhode Island, 1; Tennessee, 4; Texas, 31; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 77; West Virginia, 61.

There were 918 violations of the child-labor law since the Fair Standards Act went into effect. That means that no arrests whatever were made and no violations whatever were detected by the Department of Labor in the following States:

Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

In other words, in 24 of the States action has been taken to apprehend violators of the child-labor provisions of the law and in 24 other States absolutely no violations have been detected. One of the 24 States in which there has been no activity whatever is the only State in the Union which has no State child-labor law of its own.

It seemed to me, and I think it seemed to many other members of the subcommittee, that this was a very partial and leisurely enforcement of this great law. In order to make the record complete, I should like to read certain excerpts from the committee hearings. Miss McConnell, of the Children's Bureau, was testifying:

Senator LODGE. How much child labor do you think there is in this country today?

Miss MCCONNELL. That is very difficult to answer as to specific numbers.

* * * * * * *

Senator LODGE. It is a very important question, and if we cannot get an answer from you, I do not know where we can get it, and if we are going to appropriate funds to eliminate child labor we want to know how much of it there is.

* * * * * * *

Miss MCCONNELL. * * * I am sorry, Senator, that we do not have figures showing the total extent of child labor. I think you are quite right in saying that it would be very helpful to know the number of child workers in the country, but there is no means of arriving at a complete figure on that, except by the decennial census. We do, however, have certain trends which we get by reports from certain States and cities as to the number of employment permits issued for children going to work.

Senator LODGE. I want your best guess as to the amount of child labor in this country.

Miss MCCONNELL. There has been an estimate made recently which indicates that there are probably at least 50,000 children under 16 years gainfully employed in the United States.

Senator LODGE. In nonagricultural work?

Miss MCCONNELL. Yes.

Senator LODGE. That does not include agricultural?

Miss MCCONNELL. That does not include agricultural.

Senator LODGE. Fifty thousand. In the period from November 1, 1938, to January 1, 1940, you detected 900 violations?

Miss MCCONNELL. Yes; something over 900.

Senator LODGE. So if you go ahead and get rid of 900 violations a year, it will be some 60 years before you catch up with these instances of child-labor violations.

Miss MCCONNELL. Probably it will.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. If the Senator will look on page 56 he will find there some information furnished by Miss McConnell. For instance, I quote the following:

According to the United States census of 1930 there were 485,847 children under 18 employed in mining, mechanical, and manufacturing occupations; 69,450 were under 16. There were, in addition, 263,018 employed in transportation, communication, and trade; 58,332 were under 16. Presumably most, if not all, of the children employed in mining, mechanical, and manufacturing occupations come under the child-labor provisions of the Federal act.

Unquestionably, according to the estimates Miss McConnell made, child labor has decreased enormously. The Department shows from the figures that there were 918 prosecutions for violations of the law. It seems to me that real progress is being made. We cannot know exactly the progress which has been made until we get the returns from the census of the present year. I think those returns will, undoubtedly, show a tremendous lessening in child labor. I earnestly hope they will. I am a strong advocate of the child-labor law, as is the Senator from Massachusetts, and I think that the officials of the Department are trying to enforce it.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator for his statement. Of course, it is true that we have the figures for the last census, and we will have figures for the census of this year, but that does not, in the least, overcome the fact, as shown by this testimony, that the Department of Labor has not undertaken to do what the Wage and Hour Administrator did—make an over-all survey, determine where child labor was the greatest, in what State it was the most prevalent, and, then, plan a campaign so as to make its enforcement count the most.

If Senators will turn to page 84 of the hearings, when Colonel Fleming appeared before the committee in support of an appropriation for the Wage and Hour Administration, they will note that Colonel Fleming said that there were about 250,000 manufacturing units which come under the wage and hour law. I now read from his testimony:

Senator LODGE. How did you arrive at that figure?

Colonel FLEMING. Our economists made a study of the whole field, with such other facilities as we could get from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and all those, and arrived at the conclusion that there were that many.

Senator LODGE. That was practically the first thing you did, I suppose?

Colonel FLEMING. That is correct; yes.

* * * * * * *

Senator LODGE. In other words, Colonel, the very first thing you did was to find out how many units you had to concern yourselves with?

Colonel FLEMING. And employees also. We found that there were about 12,000,000 employees.

Senator LODGE. And you know, roughly, where they are, I suppose—in what States they are?

Colonel FLEMING. Yes; we do.

* * * * * * *

Senator LODGE. Then, knowing the extent of the problem and the location of the problem, it is possible for you to address yourselves scientifically and in a thorough manner to the problem?

Colonel FLEMING. That is the way we set up our regional offices and our branch offices.

Senator LODGE. In passing, let me say that I think it would be fine if the Child Labor Section would enforce the act in the same way.

That is an example of how to do it and how it has been done under the administration of Colonel Fleming. He has tried to get an over-all picture of the places where potential violations of the Wage-Hour Act would be the greatest; then he has been able to make all his force count. But, by their own admission, the child-labor section has gone into what they call spot enforcement; they spot child labor here and they spot it there but they leave out 24 States entirely, including the only State in the Union that does not have a State law of its own. Now I will proceed with the testimony:

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you have any investigators in your Bureau to find out whether or not children are employed in industry?

Miss MCCONNELL. Only as we have this small staff under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Senator MCKELLAR. How many employees have you?

Miss MCCONNELL. At the present time we have 24 people on our staff who are investigators under the Federal act. I should like to point out that that means one-half person's time per State, which, after all, is a small staff when you concede that it includes not only the inspections, but also the work in the States in building up the programs of age certification.

Senator MCKELLAR. I am curious about another matter. When the National Child Labor Act went into effect, how many children were in employment, according to the estimates at that time?

Miss McCONNELL. When the Fair Labor Standards Act went into effect?

Senator McKELLAR. Yes. How much has child labor been reduced by the passage of that act?

Then the figures to which the Senator from Tennessee referred a moment ago were submitted in response to that question.

Then Dr. Martha M. Eliot, who, as I understand, is Assistant Chief of the Children's Bureau, made this statement:

Dr. ELIOT. Mr. Chairman, may I say that with the staff of the Children's Bureau which is now available it is utterly impossible for us to undertake to get that information. As Senator LODGE has brought out, it is highly desirable that we should have that information, and the Children's Bureau certainly would wish to have that information; but so far, with the funds at our disposal, it has not been possible for us to undertake a complete survey to give us the information.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator, as I understood him, said that the Children's Bureau has 24 on its staff and he then referred to Colonel Fleming's staff. Does the Senator know how many Colonel Fleming has on his staff?

Mr. LODGE. He has a great many more, and, if the Senator will bear with me, he will see that the testimony will show that the child-labor section has not requested such a force as is necessary in order to give the law thorough enforcement. Apparently it has not wanted to develop the facts. Since I have been here, I have never known of an instance when an agency of Government really wanted an appropriation that it did not get it, and all it had to do was to ask. But in this case there has not been any determined effort made to get the necessary personnel in order to come to grips with this problem.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. My understanding of the statement of Dr. Eliot is not in accord with the statement the Senator from Massachusetts just made. On page 66 Dr. Eliot said:

I think it should be stated, in view of what you have said, Senator, that we have requested larger sums of money than have been approved. As a matter of fact each year that has been true, because we clearly visualized the fact that this was a big job at the beginning. However, we do wish to do it well and develop procedures which are reasonable and practicable.

I think the Senator, to be fair to those in charge of the Children's Bureau, should say that not even in this bill have they been given the amount they asked for.

Mr. LODGE. The responsibility, of course, is not hard to place. The head of the Children's Bureau could not convince the Bureau of the Budget, could not convince the Department of Labor, and could not convince those who are in control of procedure in Congress that this was a worthwhile activity.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, it is the responsibility of this body, including the Senator from Massachusetts, to provide the necessary appropriations. The Congress is responsible for appropriating the money. I did not follow the matter sufficiently close to know whether or not the committee should have recommended a larger sum, but I do not think that we can transfer our responsibility to the Bureau of the Budget or to the Labor Department. If we think the money should be appropriated, it is the duty of this body to appropriate the money. We can do it now. The Senator from Massachusetts can offer an amendment providing for the necessary sum.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but, of course, when there is an attitude of mind that is lackadaisical and does not show any real desire to "come to grips" with the problem, it does not do much good to appropriate money. I would be willing to vote them the funds they need, but even if Congress gives a unit of government the funds it needs, if it does not have "fire in its eye," and a real desire to make a record, it is not going to accomplish very much.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The conclusion I reached from reading the testimony was that, inasmuch as the census is to be taken this year, by the time the next appropriation is framed we will know exactly how many children are employed illegally. When we get those figures, I will join the Senator and the Senate and the other House in appropriating whatever money may be necessary to stamp out, so far as we can, child labor in this Nation. I do not approve it; I think it ought to be eliminated; but I do not believe it can be done in this bill, because until we get a report from the census we have no chart or compass. Give us the census reports—and they will be here by the next appropriation bill—and we will certainly appropriate the necessary money to stamp out child labor.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator for that statement, and I quite agree with him that there is really no helpful action that can be taken on this bill at this time; and I am not offering any amendment. I do want, however, to submit the present condition of this agency to the public and to the Senate, with the hope that there may be a little more activity there in the future.

I will conclude my readings from the committee record by reading this excerpt:

Senator LODGE. * * * Here we are, 2 years after this law has been passed, and we have no accurate figures on the extent of child labor; have we?

Dr. ELIOT. Not on the actual number.

Senator LODGE. We have no accurate figures on the States in which child labor is located, have we?

Dr. ELIOT. We know the States in which child labor is of the type that comes under this act—where it is largely located.

Senator LODGE. We do know that?

Dr. ELIOT. That material could be submitted for the record.

Senator LODGE. Can you give me the names of those States now?

Miss McCONNELL. Any State which has an establishment engaged in interstate commerce may have violations of the Child Labor Act.

* * * * * * *

I do not think that is what might be called an illuminating or a factual or a responsive answer.

Senator McCARRAN. It seems to me that if you are going to eradicate a disease you must know the location of the disease.

Senator McKELLAR. They have not that information now, and I am sorry they have not; but they will be greatly aided by the census, which will be ready in another year, I imagine, when you ladies come up here again.

Mr. President, I have taken the liberty of reading this much of the record because, like every other Senator, I have a keen interest in seeing this law enforced. I voted for it when it was before Congress. I hope Senators will not think me too personal if I state that when my grandfather was a Member of this body he introduced a bill in the Fifty-ninth Congress, in 1906, to prohibit the employment of children in the manufacture and production of articles intended for interstate commerce, and that in 1922 he introduced the child-labor amendment.

I have been particularly impressed by reading what was said on the numerous occasions on which President Roosevelt has seen fit to indicate his interest in the abolition of child labor. I should like to read a few excerpts from some of his speeches.

In his first annual message to Congress on January 3, 1934, President Roosevelt said:

We have made great strides toward the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act. * * * Child labor is abolished.

But the unnecessary expansion of industrial plants * * * child labor * * * these were consumed in the fires that they themselves kindled; we must make sure that as we reconstruct our life there can be no soil in which such weeds can grow again. (H. Doc. 109, 73d Cong., 2d sess.)

Radio address on progress of recovery program, June 28, 1934:

While almost everybody has recognized the tremendous strides in the elimination of child labor * * * we are still feeling our way in solving problems which relate to self-government in industry. (Washington Post, June 29, 1934.)

Address in Green Bay, Wis., August 8, 1934:

Confidence is returning * * * to the youngsters whose childhood has been saved to them by the abolition of child labor. (Washington Star, August 9, 1934, p. A–3.)

Annual message to Congress, January 4, 1935:

The ledger of the past year shows many more gains than losses. Let us not forget that, in addition to saving millions from utter destitution, child labor has been for the moment outlawed. (H. Doc. 1, 74th Cong., 1st sess.)

Message to Congress recommending a 2-year extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act, February 20, 1935:

In our progress under the act, the age-long curse of child labor has been lifted.

Child labor must not be allowed to return. (H. Doc. 105, 74th Cong., 1st sess.)

Address in Atlanta, Ga., November 29, 1935:

You and I have not forgotten the enthusiastic support that succeeded and still in part succeeds, in ending the labor of children in mills and factories. (Washington Post, November 30, 1935.)

Annual message to Congress, January 3, 1936:

In other words, let action be positive and not negative. The way is open in the Congress of the United States for an expression of opinion by yeas and nays. * * * Shall we say to the children who have worked all day in the factory, "Child labor is a local issue, and so are your starvation wages; something to be solved or left unsolved by the jurisdiction of 48 States"? (H. Doc. 382, 74th Cong., 2d sess.)

Address before Young Democratic Club of Maryland, at Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, Md., April 13, 1936:

We in your Government are seeking to extend the school age in every State of the Union and to make it easier for boys and girls to stay in school. Work out for yourselves what would happen if all the boys and all the girls of 14 and 15 and 16 and 17 who are now working in industry found it possible to stay in school until they were at least 18 years old. How many jobs would that give to the young people of the Nation who have graduated from high school and from college? And how much better equipped would be these youngsters who are now at work if they could stay in school to the completion of their education? (Washington Star, April 14, 1936.)

Address at Charlotte, N. C., September 10, 1936:

Most thinking people believe that the National Recovery Act, during its short term of life, accomplished as much for the restoration of prosperity through the establishment of the minimum wage, the shortening of hours, and the elimination of child labor as any law put on the statute books of the Federal Government in the past century. (White House release, September 10, 1936.)

Presidential campaign address at Denver, Colo., October 12, 1936:

There were other great resources of this western country, the development of which we undertook as an important and necessary part of the rounded objective. Take beet sugar for an example.

And you, the raisers of sugar beets, I congratulate on a substantial reduction in the employment of hired children in the fields. In this word of thanks I know I am joined by the fathers and mothers of America. (White House release, October 12, 1936.)

Presidential campaign address at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, N. Y., October 30, 1936:

I want to tell you in terms of actual achievement what we in Washington have done—what we have done to restore prosperity—what we have done to end abuses.

We brought the businessmen of the Nation together to encourage them to increase wages, to shorten working hours, to abolish child labor. (White House release, October 30, 1936.)

Campaign address in Madison Square Garden, New York City, October 31, 1936:

The American people * * * sought peace within the Nation * * * the abolition of child labor.

Tonight I call the roll—the roll of honor of those who stood with us in 1932 and still stand with us today.

Written on it are the names of millions who never had a chance—men at starvation wages, women in sweatshops, children at looms. (White House release, October 31, 1936.)

Message to Congress recommending enactment of the sugar quota system March 1, 1937:

It is * * * highly desirable to continue the policy, which was inherent in the Jones-Costigan Act, of effectuating the principle that an industry which desires the protection afforded by a quota system or a tariff should be expected to guarantee that it will be a good employer. I recommend, therefore, that the prevention of child labor and the payment of wages of not less than minimum standards be included among the conditions for receiving a Federal payment. (White House release, March 1, 1937.)

Address at Democratic victory dinner at Washington, D. C., March 4, 1937:

The Railroad Retirement Act, the National Recovery Act, and the Guffey Coal Act were successively outlawed as the child-labor statute had been outlawed 20 years before.

Here are thousands upon thousands of children who should be at school, working in mines and mills—now. (White House release, March 4, 1937.)

Message to Congress recommending wage and hour legislation, May 24, 1937:

A self-supporting and self-respecting democracy can plead no justification for the existence of child labor.

All but the hopelessly reactionary will agree that to conserve our primary resources of manpower, government must have some control over maximum hours, minimum wages, the evil of child labor.

Nearly 20 years ago, in his dissenting opinion in Hammer against Dagenhart, Mr. Justice Holmes expressed his views as to the power of the Congress to prohibit the shipment in interstate or foreign commerce of the product of the labor of children in factories below what Congress then deemed to be civilized social standards. Surely the experience of the last 20 years has only served to reinforce the wisdom and the rightness of his views. And, surely if he was right about the power of the Congress over the work of children in factories, it is equally right that the Congress has the power over decent wages and hours in those same factories.

There should be no difficulty in ruling out the products of the labor of children from any fair market. (H. Doc. No. 255, 75th Cong., 1st sess.)

Address in Washington, D. C., on Constitution Day, September 17, 1937:

It has cost 20 years already—and no one knows how many more are to come—to obtain a constitutional interpretation that will let the Nation regulate the shipment in national commerce of goods sweated from the labor of little children. (White House release, September 17, 1937.)

Address in St. Paul, Minn., October 4, 1937:

As in the case of farm legislation, a wage and hour and child labor law will undoubtedly accomplish two great purposes; first, an increase in employment, and secondly, an increase in the total of the Nation's income. (White House release, October 4, 1937.)

Radio address from the White House, October 12, 1937:

The people of the United States * * * were checked in their efforts to secure reasonable minimum wages and maximum hours and the end of child labor. (White House release, October 12, 1937.)

Message to extra session of Congress, November 15, 1937:

The exploitation of child labor and the undercutting of wages and the stretching of the hours of the poorest-paid workers in periods of business recession have a serious effect on buying power.

It is high time that we had legislation relating to goods moving in or competing with interstate commerce which will accomplish two immediate purposes:

First. Banish child labor. (H. Doc. No. 370, 75th Cong., 2d sess.)

Annual message to Congress, January 3, 1938:

In the long run, the profits from child labor, low pay, and overwork inure not to the locality or region where they exist but to the absentee owners who have sent their capital into these exploited communities to gather larger profits for themselves. (H. Doc. No. 458, 75th Cong., 3d sess.)

Message to Congress, April 29, 1938:

The exploitation of child labor, the chiseling of workers' wages, the stretching of workers' hours, are not necessary, fair, or proper methods of competition. (White House release, April 29, 1938.)

Address at Arthurdale, W. Va., May 27, 1938:

We had heard of the ideals of ending child labor, of initiating a 5-day week, of shortening working hours, of putting a floor under wages, of clearing slums, of bringing electricity into homes, and of giving families the chance to build or buy a home on easy terms, of starting old-age pensions and unemployment insurance. But all these things were in the greater part a beautiful dream—a dream until government, 5 years ago, tired of waiting, stepped in and started to make the dreams come true. (White House release, May 27, 1938.)

Radio address from the White House, June 24, 1938:

After many requests on my part the [75th] Congress passed a Fair Labor Standards Act. That act—applying to products in interstate commerce—ends child labor. (White House release, June 24, 1938.)

Mr. President, I submit that the record of accomplishment thus far in the abolition of child labor is proof that the dream has not yet come true.

I have read these very eloquent excerpts from the addresses of the President so that we may be reminded of the struggle that was waged and of the ideals that inspired us, and so that we will not permit a contrast to exist between our glowing words on the one hand and these rather picayune deeds on the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 19, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$459,000" and insert "$434,000", so as to read:

Printing and binding: For printing and binding for the Department of Labor, including all its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services located in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $434,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 19, after "$434,000", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the publication entitled "Our Constitution and Government—Federal Textbook on Citizenship" may be sold by the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, in quantities of 10 or more copies at the rate of 25 cents per copy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a letter which I received from the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, and a statement of existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE,
Washington, April 10, 1940.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HAYDEN: I am sending you herewith one of the first copies to come from the Government Printing Office of our new textbook on citizenship, Our Constitution and Government. This is a project on which the Immigration Service has been working for the past year and a half. The new book is to take the place of a rather diffuse and unsatisfactory textbook which has been in use in our Naturalization Service for a number of years. Under the law, the Congress appropriates a certain fund every year for the printing of textbooks for free distribution among applicants for naturalization who are attending public school Americanization classes.

I am sending you this book for two reasons; in the first place, because you are such a good friend of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and I am sure that you will be interested; and in the second place, because our limited appropriation will only permit us to distribute from 50,000 to 60,000 copies of this book in the next fiscal year, and we will have approximately 200,000 petitioners for naturalization, most of whom will be attending Americanization classes and should have this book available. It has been my thought that the Joint Congressional Committee on Printing might consider the printing of this excellent manual as a congressional document.

The book is very well written and very up-to-date in its teaching method. We believe that it can be of inestimable value in helping candidates for naturalization to attain that attachment to the principles of the Constitution of the United States which is not only a statutory requirement for naturalization but is highly desirable for the welfare of this Nation.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

JAMES L. HOUGHTELING,
Commissioner.

[Title 42, sec. 72a, U. S. Code, 1934 ed.]

72a. Same; regulations; charges and fees. After June 30, 1932, the price at which additional copies of Government publications are offered for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents shall be based on the cost thereof, as determined by the Public Printer, plus 50 per centum: Provided, That a discount of not to exceed 25 per centum may be allowed to authorized book dealers and quantity purchasers, but such printing shall not interfere with the prompt execution of work for the Government. The surplus receipts from such sales shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. The Superintendent of Documents shall prescribe the terms and conditions under which he may authorize the resale of Government publications by book dealers, and he may designate any Government officer his agent for the sale of Government publications under such regulations as shall be agreed upon by the Superintendent of Documents and the head of the respective department or establishment of the Government. The selling price of publications as provided for herein shall be in lieu of that prescribed in sections 72, 114, and 220 of this title (June 30, 1932, ch. 314 § 307, 47 Stat. 409).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 20, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$383,400" and insert "$352,380", so as to read:

Commissioners of conciliation: To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor (5 U. S. C. 611) and to appoint commissioners of conciliation, telegraph and telephone service, supplies for field offices, newspapers, books of reference and periodicals; and not to exceed $71,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $352,380.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next mendment was, on page 6, line 8, after the word "services", to strike out "$319,800" and insert "$319,100", so as to read:

Division of Public Contracts, salaries and expenses: For personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, in performing the duties imposed by the "Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1936 (41 U. S. C. 38), and for other necessary expenses in the field, including contract stenographic reporting services, $319,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Labor Statistics", on page 6, line 16, after the word "Bureau", to strike out "$964,400" and insert "$962,580", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For personal services, including temporary statistical clerks, stenographers, and typists in the District of Columbia, and including also experts and temporary assistants for field service outside of the District of Columbia; purchase of periodicals, documents, envelopes, price quotations, and reports and materials for reports and bulletins of said Bureau, $962,580, of which amount not to exceed $860,000 may be expended for the salary of the Commissioner and other personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Immigration and Naturalization Service", on page 7, line 9, after the word "duty", to strike out "$7,953,600" and insert "$7,979,110", so as to read:

Salaries, field service: For salaries of field personnel of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, including the personnel of the Immigration Border Patrol and the services of persons authorized by law to be detailed to the District of Columbia for duty, $7,979,110.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Wage and Hour Division", on page 14, line 9, after the word "rendered", to strike out "$8,830,000" and insert "$5,830,000", and in line 10, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,365,000" and insert "$1,468,300", so as to read:

Salaries: For all personal services for the Wage and Hour Division necessary in performing the duties imposed upon it by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, including reimbursement to State, Federal, and local agencies and their employees for services rendered, $5,830,000, of which amount not to exceed $1,468,300 (exclusive of pay of members of industry committees) may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 25, after the word "rendered", to strike out "$275,000" and insert "$320,000", so as to read:

Miscellaneous expenses (other than salaries): For all authorized and necessary expenses, other than salaries, of the Wage and Hour Division in performing the duties imposed upon it by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, including contract stenographic reporting services, purchase (not to exceed $2,250), maintenance, repair, and operation outside the District of Columbia of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, manuscripts and special reports, newspapers and press clippings, supplies, office equipment, advertising, postage, telephone and telegraph service, reimbursement to State, Federal, and local agencies and their employees for services rendered, $320,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Federal Security Agency—Office of the Administrator," on page 15, line 25, after the figures "$539,940", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the Administrator may transfer to this appropriation from funds available for administrative expenses of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the National Youth Administration such sums, not in excess of $22,960, as may be necessary to reimburse the office of the General Counsel for services rendered.

So as to read:

Salaries: For salaries of the office of the Administrator in performing the duties imposed by the provisions of Reorganization Plans Nos. I and II, under authority of the Reorganization Act of 1939, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as follows:

For the immediate office of the Administrator, $113,940.

For the Division of Personnel Supervision and management, $427,520.

For the Chief Clerk's Division, $248,200.

For the office of the General Counsel, $539,940: Provided, That the Administrator may transfer to this appropriation from funds available for administrative expenses of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the National Youth Administration such sums, not in excess of $22,960, as may be necessary to reimburse the office of the General Counsel for services rendered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 6, after the word "to", to strike out "this appropriation" and insert "the foregoing appropriation under this title", so as to read:

In order that the Administrator may effectuate part 2 of Reorganization Plan No. I, submitted and approved pursuant to the Reorganization Act of 1939, he may transfer to the foregoing appropriations under this title from funds available for administrative expenses of the constituent units of the Federal Security Agency such sums as represent a consolidation in the office of the Administrator of any of the administrative functions of said constituent units.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Civilian Conservation Corps", on page 18, line 5, after the numerals "1937", to insert "as amended", so as to read:

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

For all authorized and necessary expenses to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1937, as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

And so forth. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 21, before the word "shall", to strike out "$176,880,000" and insert $155,005,000", so as to read:

Of which $155,005,000 shall be available only for pay, subsistence, clothing (and repair thereof), transportation, and hospitalization of enrollees—

And so forth.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, with respect to the amendment in line 21, page 18, and the amendment in line 25, I think the attention of the Senate should be called to the fact that these changes represent a cut of $25,000,000 in the appropriation for the C. C. C. camps as provided by the House.

If the amendment were to be properly designated, it would be called an amendment to discharge about 30,000 young men now employed in Civilian Conservation Camps in various parts of the country, young men who are in sore need of employment and who, if discharged, will be unable to find work elsewhere.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senate at the same time to the fact that while the appropriation for this item was reduced from $280,000,000 to $255,000,000, it is still $25,000,000 more than the Budget estimate. The House increased the Budget estimate by $50,000,000, and the Senate committee cut down the increase by $25,000,000 only. The amount appropriated is still $25,000,000 more than the Budget estimate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was about to allude to the facts which the Senator has mentioned.

The appropriation as it passed the House was some $15,000,000 less than the appropriation for the current year. The Budget Bureau cut the appropriation very heavily in order to transfer the funds thus cut away from the C. C. C. to the Navy and the Army, for the construction of new naval vessels and for strengthening the national defense through the Army. Both of these objectives, of course, are very commendable, and they have my complete support; but I feel that we should not undertake to build up the Army and the Navy at the expense of the young men who are employed in the C. C. C. camps, and who otherwise will be unemployed.

This appropriation as it has been reported by the committee means the abandonment of about 156 Civilian Conservation Corps camps in various parts of the country. It means the discharge of the young men who are now employed in those camps, and most profitably from the point of view of the Government, from the point of view of every State and many cities, from the point of view of themselves, and from the point of view of their families. There can be no doubt that there has been no program upon which the Government has engaged which has been more successful economically and socially, and no program which is more generally approved by the country as a whole, than the Civilian Conservation Corps program.

About 1,500 camps are now in operation, and can continue to operate if the committee amendment shall be rejected. If the committee amendment shall be adopted, it will mean that we shall fail in what seems to me to be a moral obligation toward these young men, most of whom enlisted with the belief they would serve 2 full years. I can conceive of no reason which would justify the Government of the United States serving notice of discharge upon these young men now employed in these camps, the work of which in most instances has not been completed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and can tell me, no doubt, whether my information is correct. While the bill was under consideration in the House I was informed that the Budget Bureau had reduced the current appropriation by $50,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think it was a little more than that; by $65,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the House committee reduced it still further, so that as the bill went to the House, as I recall, there was larger reduction in the appropriation for the C. C. C. than the $65,000,000 referred to by the Senator as being the Budget Bureau reduction; and on the floor of the House an amendment was offered and agreed to which restored at least $50,000,000 of the cut. Am I correct about that?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The bill was reported by the House committee with a total appropriation of $230,000,000, and an amendment adding $50,000,000 was agreed to upon the floor of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. I knew that the House added $50,000,000 on the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Fifty million dollars was added on the floor of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Prior to that, based on the reduction in the Budget estimate, and assuming that it would be agreed to by the Congress, the Civilian Conservation Corps had already set in motion the abandonment of a large number of camps.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Two hundred and seventy-three camps, to be exact.

Mr. BARKLEY. And they were to go out of existence on the 1st of April, as I recall, or some of them were, and some of them probably the 1st of July. The addition of $50,000,000 on the floor of the House operated to suspend the abandonment of these camps for the time being, to await the action of Congress in determining how much money would be available.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that unless the amount of this appropriation should be approximately the amount of the current appropriation, there would still be a large number of camps abandoned. Is that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. About 156, I am advised, will have to be abandoned if this cut of $25,000,000 below the House figure is approved by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for the information.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I should like to put the figures in the RECORD. Last year the appropriation was $294,955,000. The Budget estimate for this year was $230,000,000. As the House committee reported the bill, it carried $230,000,000, the amount of the Budget estimate, and on the floor of the House the amount was increased to $280,000,000. The bill with that figure in it came to the Senate, and the Senate committee reduced the House figure from $280,000,000 to $255,000,000; in other words, cut the amount of the increase made by the House above the Budget estimate just one-half.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	King	Russell
Ashurst	Davis	La Follette	Schwartz
Austin	Donahey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Ellender	Lucas	Sheppard
Bankhead	Frazier	Lundeen	Shipstead
Barbour	George	McKellar	Slattery
Barkley	Gerry	McNary	Smathers
Bilbo	Gillette	Maloney	Smith
Bone	Glass	Mead	Stewart
Brown	Green	Minton	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Guffey	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Gurney	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hale	Norris	Townsend
Byrnes	Harrison	Nye	Truman
Caraway	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Chandler	Hayden	Overton	Wagner
Chavez	Herring	Pepper	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Pittman	White
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	Wiley
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

COMPARES C. C. C. ITEM TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senate to reject the amendment of the committee by which the appropriation for the Civilian Conservation Corps as passed by the House has been reduced by $25,000,000. If the amendment by the committee is adopted, it will mean the discontinuance of approximately 150 camps, I am advised, and the discharge of about 30,000 young men now employed in the camps. The Senate has within the hour passed a river and harbor bill authorizing the appropriation of $150,000,000 for projects in various parts of the country which cannot be undertaken immediately, and it seems to me to be utterly inconceivable that within so short a period after such a vote we should undertake to shut the door of opportunity to 30,000 young men.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the mere statement of the fact is sufficient to carry conviction that the committee reduction should not be approved.

My colleague the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], at the time the river and harbor measure was under consideration, ventured the prediction that shortly after we had passed that bill we would be finding excuses for withdrawing the support of the Government from those who most need it. I am sure he did not dream that he might be justified so speedily. Mr. President, I do not believe it is necessary for me to take more of the time of the Senate to induce its Members to vote "no" upon the two committee amendments, in lines 21 and 25, on page 18.

I do, however, want to call attention to two matters in the report of the Civilian Conservation Corps which it seems to me Members of the Senate might desire to know.

In the fiscal year 1939 this agency made a saving under the amount appropriated by Congress of $4,500,000. I read from the report:

From the funds appropriated for operations during the fiscal year 1939 the Civilian Conservation Corps will turn back to the Treasury over $4,500,000 in savings and unobligated balances. The cost per enrollee per year was the lowest during 1939 of any year during which the Civilian Conservation Corps has operated.

There is another item that seems to me to be of the utmost importance and of great significance, as illustrating the very valuable results which flow from this work. Let me read from the report:

One of the most unusual features of this administration is the fact that in 48 States and the District of Columbia departments of public welfare are providing facilities and personnel as C. C. C. selecting agencies without direct Federal reimbursement.

That calls to my mind the fact that the personnel of the C. C. C. is selected by the public-welfare agencies all through the Union. Those who most need this work are those who are given the work.

There is, of course, the financial recompense of allotments sent home each month by enrollees. This has amounted to $72,285,000 during the past year—not an inconsiderable sum to be apportioned among the States.

A sum which goes back to the families of these enrollees.

I hope the committee amendments on these two lines will not be approved.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a brief summary of the work of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF CERTAIN PHASES OF THE C. C. C. PROGRAM IN THE UNITED STATES, PERIOD APRIL 1933 TO JANUARY 31, 1940

The C. C. C. in its nearly 7 years of existence has combined a program of rehabilitation of the enrollee and restoration of the natural resources of the soil upon which he works. Millions of acres of forests and farmlands have been improved. Ninety-one percent of the enrollees have participated in the educational and training program provided in the camps. Between nine and ten million persons have benefited directly through allotments each enrollee sends home monthly. He is required to send home a minimum of $22 out of his $30 monthly cash allowance. At present 1,780,000 (estimated) persons receive benefits through this program.

MEN

Aggregate number of men given employment (April 1933 to Jan. 31, 1940) (estimated)	2,625,000
This figure includes:
Juniors, veterans, and Indian enrollees	2,400,000
Nonenrolled personnel (Reserve officers, work supervisors, etc.)	225,000
Authorized number of enrollees in C. C. C. barrack camps	300,000
Indian enrollees	7,500
Territorials	4,000

CAMPS

Number of C. C. C. camps in operation as of Jan. 31, 1940	[1] 1,500
National, State, and private forests	616
Soil conservation	392
Biological Survey	35
Bureau of Reclamation	44
National parks and monuments	102
State, city, and metropolitan parks	208
Grazing Service	90
Miscellaneous	13

[1] In addition, there is the equivalent of 50 C. C. C. camps located on Indian reservations and in the Territories.

WORK ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Forest trees planted	number	1,700,000,000
Forest stand improvement	acres	3,455,000
Fire-hazard reduction	do	1,975,000
Fire fighting	man-days	5,075,000
Telephone lines	miles	75,000
Trails and minor roads	do	109,100
Erosion-control planting	square yards	3,378,000,000
Trees planted on erosion-control work	number	180,000,000
Erosion-control check dams	do	5,078,000
Bridges, all types	do	46,000
Tree and plant disease and pest control	acres	18,600,000

MONEY

Total obligations (estimated) April 1933 to Jan. 31, 1940 (includes obligations for food, shelter, construction of camps, transportation, personal services)	$2,450,000,000
Allotments to dependents by enrollees (estimated) (April 1933 to Jan. 31, 1940)	$560,400,000

WATER DEVELOPMENT IN ARID-LAND STATES

It will be observed that 44 of these camps are operated by the Bureau of Reclamation for the performance of valuable and necessary work on various reclamation projects. This work can be expanded and, I am confident, will be expanded to the great benefit of the West, if the cut recommended by the committee is rejected, as I sincerely hope will be the case.

The Interior Department is authorized by law to seek the cooperation of the Civilian Conservation Corps in its program for development of water resources in the Great Plains. Members of the Senate have often heard me urge the construction of reservoirs, both big and little. The increased appropriation I am now asking will make possible the expansion of water conservation where it is most needed. Small dams in particular can be most effectively constructed by the C. C. C. camps. From the point of view, therefore, of the arid land States, as well as from the point of view of the boys now in the corps who will otherwise have to be dropped, the committee amendments should be defeated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. Last year we appropriated $295,000,000, and this year the Bureau of the Budget estimate was $230,000,000, and the House increased that amount to $280,000,000. The Senate committee has recommended $255,000,000.

Mr. President, I think the C. C. C. camps are fine. The Civilian Conservation Corps has done much good for the boys and for the country. But I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the outstanding fact that it costs the Government a thousand dollars apiece for every boy in these camps.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall yield in a moment. I went through college on $400 a year. It seems to me we are paying a very high price for the particular thing we are doing. The expenses are very large. I doubt if there is a Senator in this body who spent more than $1,000 a year while in college. I know none of the old ones did, but perhaps some of the younger ones did. If so, they were no doubt regarded as being wilfully extravagant. Either they or their families had plenty of money.

Mr. President, we spend the enormous sum of $1,000 a year for each of these boys, and keep them at the kind of work we are having them do. It seems to me we ought to be a little more careful with the Government's money. The Bureau of the Budget thought so. The President thought so. The President recommended $230,000,000. That was increased to $280,000,000 on the floor of the House. The Senate committee thinks that an increase of $25,000,000 over the Budget estimate is sufficient. I think a $25,000,000 increase over the Budget estimate is sufficient for this work, which is concededly a temporary work at a time of great stress in our country.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator stated that approximately $1,000 is required for each one of the enrollees?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Does the Senator also have in mind that practically all the enrollees come from families which are in need, and that if they did not get the $25 a month which is sent back home by the enrollees, more families would be on relief, and what would the cost of a family on relief amount to in a year?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have that in mind. I remember the time when students at colleges and universities had needy families at home. They had to help in their maintenance. We have to see things as they are. I submit to the Senate that $1,000 a year for each enrollee for this particular work is a large amount of money. I think that by reducing it, by letting those who are in charge know that we are counting the cost, and that we know exactly what we are doing with reference to it, we will do a great deal of good, and the result may probably be that as much will be done for the boys with $255,000,000 as with $295,000,000.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator says we should look at things as they are.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator referred to days when he was in college. I could not go to college when it did not cost one-half as much as it costs to live today. Furthermore, the Senator overlooks the value of the work these men are doing. The Senator overlooks the fact that they are engaged in work of permanent value.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. While the work may not bring us an immediate financial return, it gives us roads and improvements of a permanent nature. The Senator also overlooks the fact that the thousand dollars he is talking about includes the building of many camps, and it purchases road machinery, picks, and shovels, and all the things the boys use.

Mr. McKELLAR. Seven hundred and ninety-five dollars out of $1,000 goes to the boys directly, and $205 goes to the maintenance of camps and buildings, and equipment, machinery, and the like.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a matter about which we should be careful. I think we should be careful of the Government's money. I think the C. C. C. boys ought to be maintained for a less sum than is now expended for their maintenance. I think a great saving could be made if we were to cut the appropriation to some extent. We cannot keep up this kind of appropriating forever. If we continue it, there is no telling what may happen.

The work of the Civilian Conservation Corps is meritorious. The Corps has done great good. I cheerfully concede that the work the C. C. C. boys are doing is valuable. I think it is a good thing for the boys. I think it would be better if they were being educated, of course. But the enormous cost of the C. C. C. is a matter to be considered when our Treasury is in the situation it is in.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Would the Senator be kind enough to state how many camps would be closed if the committee amendment should be adopted?

Mr. McKELLAR. About 150 camps, all told, would be closed.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I suggest to the Senator that the adoption of the amendment would also mean cutting off 30,000 young men from employment who are now sending back $25 a month to their needy families.

Mr. PEPPER. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee if that statement is correct, that the amendment would cut off about 30,000 boys from employment in the C. C. C. camps?

Mr. McKELLAR. If we reduce the appropriation $25,000,000, and $1,000 apiece is the cost of maintaining the C. C. C. boys, the Senator can see for himself what it amounts to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], I will say that the average enrollment is 200 per camp, so the elimination of 150 camps would mean the discharge of 30,000 boys. There are more than 46,000 applicants who are unable to obtain assignments to the camps under the present appropriation, which is $15,000,000 more than the House allowed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I imagine that almost any boy would like to be assigned to one of the camps. I do not wonder at it. The boys receive double the amount for which we worked when we were boys.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The applicants are all young men who have been certified by public-welfare agencies as in need of relief.

Mr. McKELLAR. I doubt very much whether any young man ought to start out in life as a ward of the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming that 150 camps would be abandoned, and 30,000 young men who are sending back an average of about $25 per month to their families would be let out; if that money were cut off, how many of the 30,000 families would have to go on other forms of relief and be taken care of by the W. P. A. and other agencies?

Mr. McKELLAR. We have no figures on that question.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] was mistaken in saying that 30,000 would be cut off. The cost is $1,000 apiece, and when we take $25,000,000 from the appropriation, the result is to take 25,000 boys from the rolls. There are something like 50,000 applicants. We are not appropriating for them. They are as good boys as those for whom we are appropriating. If we are to increase the amount, instead of adding $25,000,000, why not add enough to take care of all the boys who would like to go to the camps?

Fifty thousand more boys are anxious and waiting to go. They are as worthy as those who are in the camps. Why should we stop at $280,000,000 when 50,000 boys are waiting? They have not had any training of this kind.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I was about to ask the Senator how long the boys are permitted to stay in a C. C. C. camp?

Mr. McKELLAR. Two years.

Mr. PEPPER. When they move out, others move in to take their places?

Mr. McKELLAR. Within certain limitations, that is true.

Mr. PEPPER. The camps provide a continuing opportunity for the boys to pass through and receive training?

Mr. McKELLAR. There has always been a waiting list. There are 50,000 young men waiting. If we add $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 more than the Budget estimate to take care of those who are now in the camps, why is it not perfectly proper to offer an amendment, not to add $25,000,000—as the defeat of the pending amendment would do—but to add $75,000,000, so as to take care of the boys who are now deprived of the privilege, and who are as worthy as the others? If I wanted to take care of them all, if I thought it was the Government's duty to take care of everyone who applies, I certainly should offer an amendment adding $50,000,000 more than the other House has allowed, so as to make the amount $330,000,000.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I was about to suggest that of the 50,000 boys whom the Senator has mentioned, a great many are already on relief; so it would be a queston of what kind of relief we prefer, the ordinary relief payment or the kind of work that is being done in the C. C. C. camps. In the C. C. C. camps we have the boys off the streets and out of the pool halls and gambling places at a time when they are forming their character; and we are teaching them something of value.

Mr. McKELLAR. I sincerely hope so; but that is the most we can say about it.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I can assure the Senator that we are.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure that is the Senator's opinion.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. My statement is not based on opinion. It is based upon my observation in many of the camps. I have seen young fellows enter the camps who were slightly built, stoop-shouldered, and pale, with some characteristics which we may not like, and within a few months have seen them put on 10 or 15 pounds and become square-shouldered boys with a wholly different outlook on life.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I felt as does the Senator, no power under heaven could keep me from offering an amendment to add $75,000,000 to the bill to take care of more boys. If what the Senator says is true, the Senator will do himself an injustice if he does not offer such an amendment. Why does the Senator single out 25,000 boys to whom he wants to give $1,000 apiece the next year, and leave 50,000 boys unaccounted for? I do not see the difference.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, the Senator asked me a question. I shall answer it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we all understand the question. The question is, Whether we shall appropriate $50,000,000 more than the Budget estimate or whether we shall appropriate $25,000,000 more than the Budget estimate? After going through the question, working on it, and thinking over it for weeks, the committee has recommended that we increase the amount by $25,000,000. I hope that will be satisfactory to the Senate. If it is not satisfactory to the Senate, and the Senate votes for something else, well and good; but if I believed in raising the amount I should not raise it for some of the boys. I should raise it for all of them. I should raise it $75,000,000, and take care of all of them.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, the Senator has just asked me why I do not ask for funds for the 50,000 applicants. That reminds me of an observation made the other day in the sugar conference by the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. When someone wanted to know why he did not take certain action, he said he would rather have half of a small loaf than all of no loaf at all.

That is one reason why I should not ask for the very large appropriation suggested. The other reason is out of my kind regard for the Senator from Tennessee, because if I should ask for that kind of an appropriation he would probably have a stroke of apoplexy. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. No, Mr. President; I have no personal interest whatever in the matter. I am not connected, directly or indirectly, with the camps. I have no boys to go in the camps. I am not interested in the remotest degree. I do not want Senators to think they are doing me a favor by voting either way. They may vote as they choose, as their consciences dictate, and I shall be satisfied with whatever they do and stand by it in conference.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question. I did not complete my interrogatories a moment ago.

We all appreciate his sincerity and earnestness in trying to save money whenever possible. It seems to me there is a difference between letting out boys who are already in the camps and not taking in others who are not in. As I understand, they will all ultimately be taken in by the process of rotation. They are on the waiting list, and they will be taken in when their time comes, and others will go out. However, if it should develop that the 25,000 families who are now receiving $25 a month from these boys will have to go on relief or be taken care of by the W. P. A. or some other agency, how much should we really save by reducing the appropriation by $25,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there was no proof as to what families would go on W. P. A. Since the bill was reported by the committee and went to the public and to the Departments, so far as I know, not a single complaint has been made by any departmental officer to any member of the committee. So far as I know or have seen, there has been no criticism in the newspapers or otherwise. The only criticism comes in the Senate. Some Senators seem to think this is a very fine project and that we ought to spend additional money.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection, I should not say that there has been criticism, but consternation has been created in many sections of the country by the prospective necessity of abandoning many of the camps. That is one of the finest tributes that could be paid to the organization. I have never known of any community where one of these camps was located, no matter whether it was a white camp or a colored camp, whose citizens did not appreciate the work that was being done, and who did not object to having the camp removed or abandoned so long as there was any necessary work to be done. Wherever a camp exists and the work is completed, of course no community can expect to keep the camp. The practice is to move the camp somewhere else where there is work to be done.

As I have said, while there may not have been criticism, there certainly was great disappointment. I happen to know of many sections of the country where the camps have been ordered to be abandoned because of the reduction in the Budget; and although the disappointment may not have been registered in Washington, it certainly was registered all over the country where the camps were to be abandoned.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator may have information which I do not have. Ordinarily, when we report from the Appropriations Committee any proposal which is not liked either by the departments or by the people, I receive a great many communications about it; but I have received none in reference to this matter.

The Senator says the people are disappointed at not keeping what they have. That reminds me of the testimony of one of the witnesses who appeared before our committee. The particular department had completed a certain work. I need not mention the department, or what the work was. The work cost $50,000. The House left $50,000 out of the appropriation bill, and the head of the department came before the committee and said, "Why, that is my money you are taking away. It belonged to my department," as though we had done him an injustice by not giving him the money for some other purpose to which he thought it should be devoted. So long as we appropriate $300,000,000, $400,000,000, or $500,000,000 for camps in this country, we shall have many persons who want such camps, and many communities which will be delighted to have them.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I have said all I desire to say. I should like to have a vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I merely wish to say that those who desire to restore the $25,000,000 reduction made by the committee should vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate for more than a very brief statement in opposition to the committee amendment.

In my opinion, the work being carried on by the Civil Conservation Corps has the almost unanimous approval of the people of the country, and rightly so, for this work is restoring and conserving the capital assets of the Nation.

We have been very profligate in the development and exploitation of the slice of the continent which is now the United States of America. By our wasteful processes we have diminished our timber resources until, despite all the conservation work which has been done in the past and particularly under the present administration, if we project the present utilization of timber into the future for 125 years there will not then be a stick of merchantable timber in the United States. Three billion tons of precious top soil are blown or washed away each year. It is the natural-resource base upon which each generation has to rest its standard of living and its civilization.

In my opinion, we are not appropriating sufficient money for this purpose. If the United States were a corporation, if it were owned, lock, stock, and barrel as a corporation, and if the board of directors reported the constant loss of capital assets which is taking place in the Nation today, I feel satisfied that the stockholders would demand a new board of directors.

Not only is the work of the Civilian Conservation Corps conserving and restoring the capital assets of the Nation, but likewise it is being directed toward conserving one of its greatest natural assets; namely its youth, the oncoming generation. Let us not forget that in this, the richest nation on earth, there are 5,000,000 young men and young women between the ages of 16 and 25 who are both out of work and out of school. Let us not forget that it was upon the shoulders of youth, disillusioned and disgruntled and disappointed as a result of war and poverty, that the dictators of Europe rode to power.

I say, Mr. President, we should not quibble over $25,000,000. We should provide the full amount and at least maintain the present level of this activity, which is constructive from every point of view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment appearing in line 21 on page 18. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is unavoidably absent. I am not advised how he would vote if present, and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair on this question with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who, if present, I am informed, would vote "yea." I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], who, I am informed, would vote "nay," and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when Mr. STEWART'S name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] is detained on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. If my colleague were present, I understand that he would vote "nay." I am not advised how the Senator from Oregon would vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] is unavoidably absent. Were he present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PEPPER. The senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] is unavoidably detained. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HAYDEN. My colleague the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are attending committee meetings and are unable to be present.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on public business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is conducting hearings in New York for the Committee on Banking and Currency, and is, therefore, necessarily absent.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained in various Government departments.

I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] would vote "nay."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is out of the city on important public business. Before his departure he asked me to make the announcement that if present and voting he would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote on this question.

I also announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who would vote "yea," is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—14

Adams	Byrnes	Hale	Russell
Bankhead	Clark, Mo.	Lodge	Townsend

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in view of the vote which has just been announced, which I take it was on the merits, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment, in line 25, page 18, be rejected.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Of course, the result of the vote applies to both amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the figure in the House text, which now appears in line 21, page 18, was higher than was desired by the Civilian Conservation Corps. Mr. McEntee, the head of the Civilian Conservation Corps, when he testified before the committee, recommended that this sum should be $166,880,000, instead of $176,880,000. He said that if this reduction were not made, $10,000,000 more than was needed for pay and subsistence would be provided. I therefore move to strike out the figures "$176,880,000" and to substitute "$166,880,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the motion now made is not in order at this time.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection to that matter being settled at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that "$176,880,000" be changed to "$166,880,000." Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, Mr. President; I object. I wish to explain briefly the reason for my objection, and also, in passing, the reason why I supported the committee amendment.

If Senators will read this section of the bill they will observe that the effect of the amendment would be to reduce by $10,000,000 the amount available for pay, subsistence, clothing, repair thereof, transportation, and hospitalization of enrollees.

The Civilian Conservation Corps is indeed the most popular, perhaps, of all the agencies of the Government which have been created in this administration. Its popularity could not have been better attested than by the vote which has just been taken in the Senate, which has overwhelmingly restored the appropriation to the amount provided by the House. They have done fine work and met with general approval. But, if it be considered as relief, and I do not consider it in that light, it has been very expensive. I feel that some of its administrative expenditures have been excessive.

This amendment does not affect the total amount of the appropriation, but it does go to a criticism I have often heard of the Civilian Conservation Corps. It decreases the amount for the pay of enrollees and gives the money to other purposes. If Senators will look at line 25 and compare it with line 21, they will see that there is a $100,000,000 spread between the amount of the appropriation allocated to go to the boys in the camps and their families, and the total appropriation. That is a large and, perhaps, unjustifiable administrative and overhead cost. It is my opinion that we should be able to save enough money out of the administrative and overhead costs to keep just as many men in camp as we have had, and to pay those men exactly as much money as they receive today, and send every dollar to their families that goes to them today, with a smaller appropriation, if we could reduce these expenditures other than directly to the enrollees.

We have appropriated the $280,000,000 for the C. C. C., and we have said that $176,000,000 of it should be spent for the pay and subsistence of the boys in the camps. I contend that we cannot justify taking the $10,000,000 from the boys in the camps, whom we say we want to help, and letting it go to administrative and other costs, which would be the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming, if it were agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY and Mr. MCKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield first to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is not my understanding that the amendment would have the effect which the Senator describes.

Mr. RUSSELL. What does it mean?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The figure $176,000,000 was inserted on the floor of the House, and I am advised by the head of the Civilian Conservation Corps that it was merely a miscalculation. Of course, it is true that a portion of this appropriation goes for housing and for the purchase of supplies, as well as for administration.

I am not particularly concerned about it, and if I felt that it would mean taking $10,000,000 away from the pay of the boys, I certainly would not offer the amendment. I am merely calling the attention of the Senate to the testimony given to the committee by Mr. McEntee. It appears on page 183 of the hearing. Mr. McEntee was answering a question of the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and he said:

First, Senator, I should like to talk briefly on the matter Mr. McNutt covered yesterday, on page 18, line 14, with reference to the total appropriation of $280,000,000. The action of the House imposed a limitation of $176,000,000, which should be available for pay, subsistence, clothing, and transportation and hospitalization of enrollees. As Mr. McNutt pointed out yesterday—and it is important—this sum is $10,000,000 in excess of what a proper blockage would be. What we should have is $166,880,000 because if it goes through the way it is, we are going to have $10,000,000 more than we need for pay and subsistence, but not sufficient money for housing, and to do the other things which would be required. A proper blockage for those items should not exceed about 59.2–59.6 percent.

That is the only purpose for which I offer the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I contend that allowing less than 60 percent of this large appropriation of $280,000,000 to go to the men we are trying to help cannot be justified.

Those who were present at the committee hearings will recall that every agency of the Government having to do with these camps—the National Park Service, the War Department, and the Forestry Service—came before the committee and protested very vigorously against the provision of the bill inserted by the House committee, apparently after they concluded that the administrative costs of the Civilian Conservation Corps were out of line, which limited them to a 10-percent leeway in each specific amount set up by the Budget. We have that 10-percent leeway in the total appropriation now, so that if it is necessary to transfer this money from the pay of these boys in the camps to go to administrative costs, the Director of the Federal Security Agency can transfer 10 percent of any one of these appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. By agreeing to let the matter come up now I do not wish it to be understood that I agree to this change at all. I am opposed to it. I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is correct in his contention. I think the $10,000,000 ought to be used for the boys.

Mr. RUSSELL. If we are going to appropriate it, it should go to the men we are trying to help.

Mr. McKELLAR. By all means; yes. Instead of going to a top-heavy organization, I think it should be used for the boys.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, what I say is not in any criticism of those who have the Civilian Conservation Corps in charge, because they have not had authority at all times in the premises. That is one of the troubles with the C. C. C. More than two agencies have had a hand in attempting to administer the organization. The Civilian Conservation Corps has been dealing with one phase. The War Department has been dealing with another phase. And there was still another department that was directing the work of the camps in the field. For that reason there has grown up this large administrative cost.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the Park Service also.

Mr. RUSSELL. Several departments have camps under their jurisdiction. We certainly cannot justify taking $10,000,000 away from the pay of the boys in the camps, and for feeding the boys, and letting it go to the sum that can be spent for administrative and other purposes, when there is already language on page 19 of the bill which permits the Administrator to transfer as much as 10 percent of any of these specified objects of appropriation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I merely wanted to say that the Senator from Georgia has convinced me. I shall withdraw my request for unanimous consent, because, as the Senator will recall, in the committee I offered an amendment and made the effort to secure the full $50,000,000 solely for the purpose of securing this money for the boys. I would be the last person in the world to attempt to take anything away from these young men.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator's amendment would have done that, however.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was merely trying to harmonize the bill in line with Mr. McEntee's request.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia referred to some $100,000,000 of this sum that is appropriated as an expenditure for administrative expense.

Mr. RUSSELL. No; not that much.

Mr. MINTON. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. On line 21 it is found that the appropriation that the Senate finally agreed on limits the amount to be spent on the enrollees. From testimony presented in the hearings, I am convinced that the administrative expense is too large and should be materially reduced.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that $100,000,000 of this total sum, which is roughly 40 percent, would be used for administrative expense. Will the Senator indicate what, in his judgment, is included in administrative expense?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Tennessee probably has the figures. He has the bill in charge. The amount is something like $290 per enrollee per thousand dollars, is it not?

Mr. MINTON. Is it $205?

Mr. McKELLAR. Two hundred and five dollars per enrollee, out of $1,000.

Mr. MINTON. In that $205 is included housing?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it includes all expenses and equipment.

Mr. MINTON. And materials?

Mr. McKELLAR. And materials. It is about 20 percent.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator would not call housing and materials administrative expense, would he?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a part of the expense of carrying on this work, and it is a little over 20 percent, which is a very large overhead cost.

Mr. MINTON. In accounting practice there is a definite understanding as to what administrative expense is. When we go out into campaigns we always hear the charge made by our friends across the aisle that the administration of these acts is all wrong, and that the administrative expense is increased. And now we find Senators on this side of the aisle who do not make a nice distinction in endeavoring to draw the line between what is administrative expense and what is not administrative expense.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am trying to tell the truth and give the facts.

Mr. MINTON. I have no idea that the Senator from Tennessee is not trying to tell the truth, but I am trying to find out where the line is between what is and what is not administrative expense. I do not think housing is an administrative expense, and I do not think the cost of materials is an administrative expense. I do not think the Senator from Tennessee thinks it is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield the floor inasmuch as the Senator from Wyoming has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the discussion which took place between the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] on administrative expenses, I think it might be helpful to have it stated in the RECORD that on pages 367, 368, and 369 of the committee hearings is given a breakdown of the items in the Civilian Conservation Corps appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is apparent we cannot finish action on the bill today, and I therefore move——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion for one moment? I do not want to impose on the Senate, but I spoke to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who is in charge of the bill, and told him I was not going to be here tomorrow and that I had an amendment I wanted to bring to the attention of the Senate dealing with researches and public health, and I would certainly appreciate it if the Senate would permit me to offer the amendment and let it be determined by viva voce vote. Will the Senator withhold his motion for recess?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I have no objection to the Senator presenting his amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "$1,650,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "and including not to exceed $100,000 for researches, investigations, and studies relating to the cause, diagnosis, and control of pneumonia, influenza, and the common cold, $1,750,000."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to say that the parliamentary situation is such as to require only a majority vote for the adoption of that amendment, by reason of the fact that the appropriation of $2,000,000 is authorized for this category in the Social Security Act, as is evidenced by a letter that I have in my hand from the Federal Security Administrator, Mr. McNutt, which reads as follows:

> Section 603 (a) of title 6 of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, authorizes an annual appropriation of $2,000,000 for expenditure by the Public Health Service for investigation of disease and problems of sanitation.

He goes on to point out that the proper way to bring the matter up would be to add to the appropriation for that subject. The Budget Bureau has recommended only $1,658,526, and the committee has recommended in this whole category only $1,650,000. But $2,000,000 is authorized by law. Therefore the $1,750,000 provided in my amendment, which is $100,000 more than the committee has recommended, is authorized by law.

I consulted the parliamentarian, and was advised that I do not need to have a waiver of the rule to offer this amendment and have it acted on.

Let me quote part of the letter from the Federal Security Administrator:

> The seriousness of this group of diseases as a cause of widespread sickness, of death, and of great economic loss in peacetime, and their even greater possible danger under wartime conditions has been recognized by the Public Health Service, and research in several phases of the problem has been started in four divisions of the National Institute of Health. Unfortunately, progress in these important studies is greatly impeded by the lack of adequate funds for their prosecution. This handicap has prevented any realization of the research program recommended early in 1938 by the National Advisory Committee on Prevention of Pneumonia Mortality. Further investigations proposed since that time by the Public Health Methods Division of the National Institute of Health have been endorsed by the foremost medical authorities of the country, who have urged their prompt initiation.

Before the committee we had the head of the Research Division of the Public Health Service, Dr. Thompson, and two of his assistants, one of whom is a specialist in pneumonia who has been working on the subject since 1912. Dr. Thompson says he has made perhaps one of the most significant contributions which have been made toward favorable research on pneumonia. This is what Dr. Thompson said as to the reason for having additional funds now:

> Dr. THOMPSON. We are spending on the pneumonia-control work about $35,000 a year. The program is just breaking throughout the States. It is probably one of the greatest points where we can attack a specific disease. Chemotherapy, new drugs, and new rabbit serums are being developed. We are just at the place where I think we can show in one State, Pennsylvania, which has put on a very good control program, a reduction of deaths which, if applied to the United States, would have saved 50,000 lives in the last year. In this particular disease we are at a point where additional investigations would be of great help to the people of this country.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate longer. The research department of the Public Health Service has only $35,000 for research work in connection with pneumonia, influenza, and related ailments, such as the common cold. I do not know of anything better we could do than to give the Public Health Service the tools with which to carry on research. As Dr. Thompson testified before the committee, in Pennsylvania alone such research has actually saved 1,000 lives since last December.

I ask that Senators be kind enough to lend their support for additional funds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to make an explanation of this particular item——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. What is the present parliamentary status?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] has requested unanimous consent that he be permitted to offer now an amendment to a committee amendment which has not yet been reached. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida is not in order at this time. For that reason he has asked unanimous consent that it be now considered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to accommodate the Senator, but there was so much disturbance that I do not think many Senators are advised as to the purport of the amendment. Perhaps it is very laudable. I should not care to act in this impetuous way, out of order, unless there is some very, very great exigency.

Mr. PEPPER. The reason why the Senator from Florida made the request is that unfortunately the Senator from Florida will not be in the Chamber during the remainder of the consideration of the bill. Otherwise, I should not have made this extraordinary request. I wish to offer the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I do not wish to deny the Senator an opportunity to offer the amendment. Perhaps some other Senator would offer it in his absence. I think we should approach this matter in the way in which we started; namely, by considering first the committee amendments and completing them before we come to individual amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida is an amendment to a committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. But the committee amendment is not now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I told the Senator from Florida that as he is going away tomorrow I should not object to his offering the amendment at this time. However, it is a matter for the Senate to decide.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I always try to be accommodating; but we must maintain certain rules and order of procedure in order properly to present the matter to the Senate. I do not know what the amendment is. Does it provide for an increase in the amount recommended by the committee?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, Mr. President. It proposes an increase of $100,000 for the research department of the Public Health Service, to be devoted exclusively to a study of pneumonia, influenza, and the common cold, but primarily to pneumonia. The Chief of the Public Health Research Service came before the committee and testified in behalf of the request, and data in support of it are also given by the Federal Security Administrator, from whose letter to the chairman of the Senate committee I read.

Mr. McNARY. Was the matter presented to the committee, and did the committee refuse to incorporate the amendment in the bill?

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Many Senators are absent from the Chamber, and I must insist that we go along in the regular fashion. Tomorrow the amendment may be presented by another Senator. I do not think we should take it up tonight. It is unusual, and many Senators are absent. They left with the understanding that we were about to take a recess until tomorrow.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall ask some other Senator to be good enough to present my amendment tomorrow; and I hope Senators will be kind enough to consider the amendment on its merits.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS—NOMINATIONS FAVORABLY REPORTED

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters which had been favorably reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters which have been favorably reported be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters which have been favorably reported are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS—NOMINATIONS ADVERSELY REPORTED

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, with respect to the nominations of postmasters on the calendar which have been adversely reported, I see no reason why the Senate should not act upon them, and I hope the Senate will act upon them this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations of postmasters which have been adversely reported will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Clara B. Toland to be postmaster at Industry, Ill.

The nomination was rejected.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James W. Paul to be postmaster at Ponchatoula, La.

The nomination was rejected.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James Earl Evans to be postmaster at Carrollton, Mo.

The nomination was rejected.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Alva M. Beers to be postmaster at Alburtis, Pa.

The nomination was rejected.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James L. Lindsey to be postmaster at Bradford, Pa.

The nomination was rejected.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for appointments and promotions in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.), the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, April 26, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 25, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art the Lord God alone, Thy truth shall stand while rolling years cease to move. On a melancholy hill, outside the city wall, a Man was crucified for the sake of this world, unveiling the living, loving, sheltering heart of the Father. We pray Thee to make us partakers of our Saviour's grace. Touch the supreme sanctions of our souls that we may realize that through Him we are made able to brave the shadows cloaking our humanity. Do Thou persuade us, blessed Lord, that a man's life consisteth not in the things he possesseth but rather in the thoughts he thinks, in the motives that mold his actions, and in the ideals toward which he presses; it is a surety that changes not, that he who serves mammon loses his own soul. Our Father, do Thou unite all the Members of this notable Congress and bring them into the fellowship of unity and cooperation. Continue to make Thy pathways through the realms of our immortal souls and Thine shall be the glory forever. Through Christ Our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 3840) entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. MINTON, and Mr. GURNEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2635. An act to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act; and

S. 2661. An act to create a board of inspectors, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, at Miami, Fla.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief newspaper article and quotations from certain statistics.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in the form of a eulogy on behalf of Mr. Griswold, a departed Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by Ana Maria O'Neill on the subject Outline of Social Problems in Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article dealing with the Central Valley project in California. I may say that the cost of this will be $157.50, as I am advised by the Public Printer. I ask that I may include this, notwithstanding the cost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT]? May the Chair say that sometime ago he was compelled to make a statement to the House that he would be constrained to object to extensions which included newspaper and magazine articles where the cost was excessive. I am wondering if the gentleman could not publish extracts, and so forth, that would bring it within the allowable cost?

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, for the time being, I object.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of the business in order for the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

WAGE AND HOUR AMENDMENTS

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I will be unable to be present at tomorrow's session as it is my sad duty to attend the funeral of a good friend of mine in New York City.

However, in the event a vote should be taken in my absence on the wage and hour amendments, I wish to go on record as being opposed to the Barden amendment or any other amendment that would weaken the Wage and Hour Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

WAR-PROVOKING UTTERANCES

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to inform the House and the country that I have today received a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Lewis Compton, disclaiming any responsibility on the part of the Navy Department for the sensational, war-provoking testimony given by Admiral Joseph K. Taussig before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee on Monday in respect to American-Japanese relations. Mr. Compton makes it very plain that Admiral Taussig's inflammatory utterance was without the knowledge and consent of the Navy Department and finds no sympathy there. Without questioning the motives of this able naval officer, it must by this time be apparent even to him that he has made a serious mistake. I think Mr. Compton's letter will be a relief to the country, and I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD my letter to the Navy Department and The Assistant Secretary of the Navy's reply, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

The correspondence referred to follows:

APRIL 23, 1940.

Hon. CHARLES EDISON,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. EDISON: Before the Senate Naval Committee on Monday, April 22, Rear Admiral Joseph K. Taussig gave highly alarming testimony which is likely to disturb America's peace, when he said (according to the newspaper reports) that war between the United States and Japan is inevitable; that he could not see how we can escape being drawn into war on account of the Far Eastern situation; that it should be a naval war in which Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands should give assistance, with much more comment of the same sensational, provocative character, including a charge that Japan intends to invade the Philippines.

It is not necessary to dwell upon the potential evil effect of such a declaration in disturbing our international relations. It must be remembered that Admiral Taussig is not an ordinary citizen but is a high-ranking officer of the Navy, former Chief of Naval Operations, and now Commandant of the Fifth Naval District at Norfolk. What he said was immediately given world-wide significance, its natural effect being to inflame the people of Japan and unnecessarily to create fear and uneasiness at home. However much we may disapprove Japan and her military policies, the fact remains that she has not attacked us and she is a nation with which we are at peace.

There is one person who can speak authoritatively as to the responsibility or nonresponsibility of the Navy Department for Admiral Taussig's inflammatory testimony and that person is yourself. I sincerely think that you should make a statement in order to avoid the repercussions that inevitably will come from a misconstruction of the admiral's remarks in various quarters of the globe.

As a citizen and as a representative of a quarter of a million citizens who desire that the United States shall keep out of foreign wars, I wish respectfully to ask two questions and to request that you answer both of them, as follows:

1. Did you or did you not have advance notice of Admiral Taussig's intention to present to the committee his testimony referred to above?

2. Do you, as the head of the Navy Department, approve, or disapprove, the views expressed by Admiral Taussig to the committee?

I am not asking these questions in a spirit of criticism but because I believe that a great deal of harm may be done unless there is a clarification of this matter. This clarification is due, I think, to the people of America who are harried and worried by fear that we will be drawn into a foreign war. I will be grateful if I may have a reply as soon as possible.

Very sincerely yours,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

APRIL 24, 1940.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN LUDLOW: In the absence of the Secretary, who is now en route from the west coast to Washington, may I acknowledge for him the receipt of your letter of April 23 concerning the recent testimony of Rear Admiral Joseph K. Taussig before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. I hasten to assure you that I will invite your communication to the attention of Mr. Edison at the earliest possible moment. The Secretary will no doubt communicate with you immediately upon his return.

In the meantime, as Acting Secretary, I want to tell you that I, too, was shocked at the testimony of Admiral Taussig which, of course, was an expression of his own personal views and was in no way an expression of the opinion of the Navy Department. It was most unfortunate that one of Admiral Taussig's position should use such poor judgment in so publicly expressing his personal opinions concerning another country with which we are at peace.

I know that Mr. Edison entertains the same opinion as I have expressed because a United Press release from San Diego, Calif., indicates that "Mr. Edison said he could not agree with Rear Admiral Taussig's prediction before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee that the United States eventually would be forced into a war with Japan, and emphasized that Admiral Taussig was expressing his personal opinion."

In specific reply to questions asked in your letter, may I advise you that neither the Secretary nor myself, personally or officially, had any advance information of Admiral Taussig's appearance before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee. It was, however, known in the Department that Admiral Taussig's presence before the committee as a witness had been requested by the chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee. Neither Mr. Edison, myself, nor the Department had any advance knowledge whatsoever of the nature of the testimony which the Admiral presented to the committee. Secretary Edison, myself, and the Navy Department disapprove the views expressed by Admiral Taussig to the Senate Naval Affairs Committee.

I hasten to assure you that all of the efforts of the Navy Department to strengthen our first line of national defense have been and are predicated entirely on ordinary common sense and prudence in a world aflame with undeclared wars and invasions of peaceful countries.

I want to express to you my appreciation for your frankness in writing to the Secretary on this subject.

Yours very sincerely,

LEWIS COMPTON.

[Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some statements by the Honorable JAMES M. MEAD, United States Senator from New York, in memory of the Honorable Edward W. Curley, late Member of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH]?

There was no objection.

CALIFORNIA APRICOTS

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, the House and Senate dining rooms are serving up a rare treat today which I hope all Members of Congress will sample: golden California apricots filled with sunshine vitamins and truly fit for a king.

The Eighth Congressional District of California, which I have the honor to represent, produces nearly a third of all the apricots grown in the United States. Almost 11,000 growers in northern California are engaged in producing this fine fruit for distribution to markets all over the world.

The growing and processing of apricots is a highly specialized and expensive business. It affords a means of income to thousands of producers, processors, and farm workers in my State and is a considerable factor in our annual agricultural proceeds. Eat some today and you will be doing your bit toward helping the farmer and the many employees who are engaged in preparing these apricots for your use. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to you today a further report on the Federal "blitzkrieg" against the State of California. Mr. Ickes' department is now charging our moving-picture companies $500 a day to go into the Federal parks and $100 a day to go over what is known as grazing land under the Bureau of Reclamation and the Biological Survey.

I do not know what they propose to do to this industry in California, but if this is to continue, how does the Federal Government expect us to take care of this tremendous overload of employment? This has the effect on us that the "blitzkrieg" has on the Europeans. I am bringing this to your notice to show you what is actually happening to us.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe this New Deal has to get some money some place to carry on?

[Here the gavel fell.]

MILITARY AND NAVAL FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Congress will give consideration to a resolution which I have written and today introduced, which says:

> That no part of the military nor naval forces of the United States shall be ordered to participate in any armed conflicts outside of the Western Hemisphere or the territorial possessions of the United States unless and until Congress shall by concurrent resolution declare that the safety of the people of the United States is endangered.

It is not a question of curbing the discretionary power of any public officer. We know that in the next few months overwhelming pressure may be exerted upon officials occupying strategic positions in our Government. Such an official will have greater independence in reaching decisions if we enable him to say:

> I cannot issue this order, which might involve the country in foreign war, until a resolution is first put through the Congress.

[Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an article written by a distinguished son of Illinois, Mr. King V. Hostak, entitled "Lincoln Group Observes Important Anniversary."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement I made before the House Committee on Flood Control.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDELSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the remarks of the Honorable JAMES M. MEAD, United States Senator from New York, commemorating the late Honorable William I. Sirovich, a distinguished former Member of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

WHERE WILL WE GET THE MONEY?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, how many Members of the Congress have looked at the Treasury statement and noticed that we have gone over $3,109,044,666.24 in the red this year up to April 22, 1940; $3,109,000,000 in the red; $8,000 in the red every minute of the day. The record of the New Deal—nothing like it in our history. This administration is taking us $8,000 a minute into the red—a joy ride for the New Deal and a ball and chain for future generations; and your children and your grandchildren will have to pay the bill if they can. If they cannot, it means repudiation or bankruptcy. No wonder the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] a few moments ago was criticizing the administration because they demand fabulous sums for our industries. In 8 years this administration has received in revenue and taxes the huge sum of $36,000,000,000. In 8 years this administration has spent the enormous sum of $60,000,000,000. In 8 years this administration added to our national debt the monstrous sum of $24,000,000,000. I wish to tell you that this administration and every individual in it will have to say to the American people, "We are going to tax you more and more; we are going to go after you to get the money to pay for these fabulous expenditures." You and your people will have to "shell out." It is terrible, Mr. Speaker; let us stop the new dealers from doing it. Where are you going to get the money? [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two letters I have received from Government agencies; also a short editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from the New York Enquirer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

ADMINISTRATION SABOTAGE OF THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I with other Members of the House, have received many letters of protest at the contemplated return of the Civil Aeronautics Authority to the Department of Commerce. This is particularly true with reference to the proposed suspension of the Air Safety Board. This Board should not be suspended but should instead be strengthened by selection of experienced men of the highest qualifications.

I am not surprised that this proposed change meets with public protest, for what is more natural as air travelers recall the loss of life and destruction of property that took place when this service was under the Department of Commerce? Neither am I surprised, Mr. Speaker, at the many protests I have received from air-line pilots, for they, like the captains of ocean liners, are responsible for the safety of their passengers, crew, and ship.

No one realizes better than I the carelessness in regard to air regulation and safety that existed in aviation when it was under the supervision of the Department of Commerce. We must not forget the loss of life and property the air liners sustained at that time, and neither should we forget the Army pilots who lost their lives during the period in which the airline service was suspended and mail was moved in Army planes.

It is from fear of a return of this disaster that I plead with you Members of Congress not to abolish the Air Safety Board. Let the Civil Aeronautics Authority remain as it is.

This protest on my part is not one of political expediency, but it is, instead, based upon my experience as captain of ocean-going ships, navigator, and pilot of airplanes. The captain of an air liner or a transport ship is, in my opinion, charged with a much greater responsibility than a captain of an ocean liner, for even greater skill is required in flying than in sailing. It is true that an air liner may carry a small number of passengers, as compared to an ocean liner, but it is also true that more skill is required to handle an airplane traveling 200 miles an hour, weighing 15 or 20 tons, than is required to handle an ocean liner traveling 25 knots an hour, registering 45,000 tons.

The two services are not alike, but a pilot of airplanes who is familiar with navigation and instrument flying can step on the bridge of an ocean liner and, after superficial instruction, can take charge and navigate the ship with little or no danger to the passengers and crew. On the other hand, the captain of an ocean liner, be he the best navigator in the world, could not take charge of an airplane, take off, fly, and land his ship without disaster to all. Even if he were physically qualified, the experiment would end in a complete washout.

It is true that flying seems to be so easy that little appreciation is given to the highly technical training, in the knowledge of which the pilot can fly his beam blind and make an instrument landing. This flying is particularly hazardous to those who fly over a terrain with mountain peaks twelve to fourteen thousand feet in the air. I realize the danger of this, for I have flown over the peaks and valleys of the Rocky Mountains in underpowered ships. I know, therefore, the danger of this profession, and in this knowledge I appreciate the safety measures which the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Safety Board have provided for air travel.

It is because of this that I have taken the floor of the House to ask my colleagues to sustain the Safety Board and leave the C. A. A. as it now is, where it has given the greatest service to the air-traveling public.

I have not compared air travel with the merchant marine to disparage the ability of a captain of ocean-going ships, for no one realizes better than I that commanders in each service must be well qualified. However, no one can deny that we are perfectly safe aboard a battleship, drifting in the middle of the ocean, while we are in extreme jeopardy in an airplane short of fuel, with a poor landing field. Such situation may arise: The motor may cut, and should that happen, considerable skill is required to make a dead-stick landing in a small field.

Do you not think it would be queer to place the merchant marine in the Department of the Interior under the Secretary of the Interior? I believe you would agree with me that it would be a bit strange when the Secretary of the Interior began to build roads and lay out national parks on the quarter deck of an ocean liner.

This is comparable with placing air service under the Department of Commerce, for they know nothing about it and would, because of insufficient knowledge, no doubt, let it slide back to where it was before when many people lost their lives in mysterious and questionable crashes.

We now have a Department of Aeronautics composed of men who know the game and understand the responsibility that goes along with it. Why change this service now? We may ask ourselves what political power is behind this move, and who dares to suggest these changes in view of the fact that, during the period of 1 year or since the formation of this Department, not one ship has been destroyed or one life lost. This record, if nothing else, should make each Member of Congress hesitate before he supports this change, because, in voting for this requested transfer, you actually become responsible for lives that may be lost and for a condition in which even you in traveling may become the victim of your own folly. [Applause.]

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the civilian-pilot-training program has been in operation a little less than 5 months. During that time 9,205 college students have been given flight instruction. They have flown a total of 172,000 hours and have traveled the equivalent of 92,000,000 passenger miles. All of this flight instruction has been carried out admirably under the supervision of the Civil Aeronautics Authority with a remarkable safety record of but one fatality in all of that time.

This record, incidentally, is 20 times as good as the best safety records ever achieved by private instruction prior to the inauguration of this program.

Of these 9,205 students only 145 have been released because of their inaptitude for aviation, and it is a remarkable record that 8,400 students, or 98.5 percent, who started the course can now fly an airplane by themselves and have now become, or are rapidly becoming, accomplished pilots.

I believe this outstanding record is unparalleled in the history of aviation anywhere else in the world. The Civil Aeronautics Authority should be wholeheartedly commended upon the success of this program. I doubt that a return of the control of aviation to the Department of Commerce, as contemplated under Reorganization Plan IV, could in any way improve this record of achievement. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the Philadelphia Record with relation to the wage-hour amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I wonder how many people in the United States, including Congressmen and Senators, know that the 1941 Budget provides means for imposing upward of nearly a billion dollars of new taxes upon the people of this country for operating the Federal Government in 1941?

This is entirely outside of the $460,000,000 the President requested for additional defense measures. However, in speaking of the sources from which this $460,000,000 should be derived, he said:

> In seeking additional sources of revenue, I hope that Congress will follow the accepted principle of good taxation of taxing according to ability to pay and avoid taxes which decrease consumer buying power.

When taxes are excessive, as is the case now, there is no such thing as levying additional taxes that do not destroy buying power. Taxation upon all enterprise is already so excessive as to drain from it needed funds for operating purposes, repairs, and additions. This is keeping millions unemployed, and hence deprives our people of billions of dollars of purchasing power.

In making this statement the President no doubt intended to assure those who are least able to bear the burden of taxation of his solicitude for them. Yet the tax we are here considering, for which he is almost wholly responsible, is the kind that has always been regarded by all true statesmen as the worst and most galling that can possibly be levied upon the working and poorer classes.

Daniel Webster was thoroughly familiar with this sort of tax. Speaking in the other Chamber more than 100 years ago, he branded it as—

> The most effectual of all contrivances for cheating the laboring classes of mankind.

He said further of it:

> This is the most effectual of inventions to fertilize the rich man's field by the sweat of the poor man's brow. Ordinary tyranny, oppression, * * * these bear lightly on the happiness of the mass of the community, compared with the robberies committed by—

The sort of tax we are here considering.

How is it the President can levy such an enormous and onerous tax upon the Nation and hardly anyone know about it? Just where does his 1941 Budget provide for this?

To make a rather long and not altogether good-looking story short, the general-fund balance of the Treasury for operating the Federal Government is reduced at the beginning of the fiscal year 1941 to somewhere in the neighborhood of $500,000,000 after deducting all items properly chargeable against it, such as trust funds, certain special deposit accounts, checking accounts of Government corporations and agencies, matured public-debt securities and other public-debt items, and outstanding checks and interest-coupon obligations. (See Analysis of General Fund Working Balance as Shown in 1941 Budget, etc., supplied to Senator BYRD by the General Accounting Office.) This is a much smaller balance than the Treasury has carried for some time. Remaining only in the balance is the item of silver "seigniorage," which is given as $586,306,220.

At no time since 1934 has the estimated working balance been reduced to a point at or below the amount of so-called seigniorage. The lowest working balance was that for the end of the fiscal year 1936 Budget, $746,385,811, which was exclusive of any seigniorage. The usual estimated working balance, exclusive of any seigniorage, has been about a billion or more.

Up to now the Treasury has been able to manage with these balances so as to avoid resorting to the outright inflation of the currency, to provide funds for operating purposes, that would result from the use of this seigniorage. But whether it can get by in 1941 without resorting to such inflation is certainly open to serious questioning, to say the least.

I do not see how actual receipts could possibly increase over estimated receipts sufficiently to obviate the necessity of using any of this seigniorage. But to predicate such an assumption upon this possibility would, in my opinion, be the culmination of fiscal irresponsibility.

To be sure, the Treasury may possibly have resort to still another means for avoiding the outright inflation and taxation that would be occasioned by the use of the seigniorage. The 30 political lending and spending corporations—they are in reality not corporations but mere bureaus—which have been established keep their checking accounts in the Treasury. Here these accounts become a part of the working balance of the Treasury. It can and does check against them. Whether it might be possible enough such funds could be made available to the Treasury to avoid using some or all of the seigniorage, there is no way of telling. Even were that possible, only postponement of the day of reckoning would result.

There can be little question that the 30 political corporations are already in dire straits and need help themselves, instead of having any funds to spare for the working fund balance. As of June 30, 1939, they were already in default in principal and interest in the amount of $1,053,742,488, in addition to showing a net loss of $1,654,329,488.

Table is as follows:

Report submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senate of the United States pursuant to Senate Resolution 150, volume 1, part 1, "Summary of Revenues and Expenditures from Inception of the Agencies to June 30, 1939":

	Cumulative
Total amount of principal and interest in default	$1,053,742,488
Amount charged off as loss	1,654,329,707
Losses of individual corporations (and date of formation):
1. Disaster Loan Corporation	1,591,616
2. Electric Home and Farm Authority	67,172
3. H. O. L. C. (June 1933)	59,562,029
4. Federal Housing Administration (June 1933)	34,458,062
5. Agricultural Marketing Administration	319,206,512
6. Emergency Crop and Federal Loan Security	134,247,927
7. Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation, (1933–37)	2,303,597
8. Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation (1934)	82,408,464
9. Commodity Credit Corporation (1933)	180,965,315
10. Farm Security Administration (1933)	239,860,832
11. Federal Crop Insurance Corporation (1933)	4,906,575
12. Rural Electrification (1935)	4,523,184
13. Tennessee Valley Association, Inc	109,514
14. P. W. A. (1933)	1,144,594,302
15. United States Housing Administration (1937)	4,744,051
16. United States Maritime Commission (1936)	75,102,429
17. Tennessee Valley Authority (1933)	22,129,880
18. Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration	37,959,311
Total	2,348,740,772

Offsetting this loss is the sum of $694,411,065 shown as "gain" which leaves a net loss, as shown above, of $1,654,329,707.

This report also shows the following:

Property foreclosed and otherwise acquired and held for resale	$880,905,469
In the last item are included:
(a) Foreclosed Home Owners' Loan properties valued at	549,441,184
(b) Foreclosed farms	104,685,950
(c) Foreclosed properties under the Agricultural Marketing Act revolving fund	5,228,075
(d) Foreclosed properties under Federal Savings and Loan Associations	142,903,752

On top of these heavy losses is the President's proposal in his 1941 Budget message to take $700,000,000 from the capital fund of these corporations for 1941 operating purposes.

Apparently the Treasury carries the silver seigniorage on its books as an asset at the average cost price, which at present is 58 cents per ounce, and also at the monetary—inflated—value; that is, $1.29 an ounce. Insofar, however, as silver may be used as money, it should, according to law, be rated at $1.29 an ounce. Any seigniorage, therefore, that may appear in the Treasury's general-fund balance should be considered as being in terms of the monetary—inflated—value of silver; that is, $1.29 an ounce.

Therefore the $586,306,220 carried in the general-fund balance, as shown in the Budget, would represent 454,500,945 ounces of silver. At 35 cents an ounce, the present price of foreign silver artificially fixed by the Treasury, these 454,500,945 ounces would be worth only $159,075,330. Assuming the $586,306,220 is carried in the Budget at its monetary—inflated—value, the difference between these two figures is $427,230,890, which is pure fiat, inflation, or, better still, tax warrants. With silver worth 35 cents an ounce, and the monetary value $1.29 an ounce, there is about 73 percent of inflation.

As the Treasury spends this monetized—inflated—silver currency, Federal taxes are levied upon the Nation just as surely as though a Federal sales tax were levied. Every paper silver dollar when originally spent by the Federal Government, since the Silver Purchase Act, levies about 73 cents of taxes. Moreover, the incidence of the tax burden upon the working and poorer classes is about the same as that of sales taxes. The essential difference between these two forms of taxation is that the one is a forthright tax, and everyone knows he is paying it, while the other is a surreptitious tax, and few people know they are paying it.

There is perhaps no other disease of government as deep-seated and malignant as this clandestine and all-devouring tax. Pelatiah Webster, a merchant in Philadelphia, who lived in colonial times through the Revolution, and who experienced all the horrors of this sort of tax, had this to say about it:

> It has killed more men, pervaded and corrupted the choicest interests of our country more, and done more injustice than even the arms and artifices of our enemies.

Could the people but learn the real purpose of all this political money tinkering.

However, there is no assurance that the seigniorage item of $586,306,220 carried in the general-fund balance of the 1941 Budget actually represents the monetary value of 454,500,945 ounces of silver.

It is possible that this figure could be considered by the Treasury as representing the cost price of silver at 58 cents per ounce. In this case it would represent 1,010,872,793 ounces of silver, which is about the amount of free or unpledged silver the Treasury might expect to hold July 1, 1940. Should this full amount of silver be monetized—inflated—and spent by the Treasury—which is not impossible, hard-pressed for funds as it now is—then our figures would stand as follows: 1,010,872,793 ounces of silver monetized—inflated—at $1.29 an ounce would be $1,304,025,902. Seventy-three percent of this, or $951,938,909, would be inflation, fiat, or just simply taxes.

What is there to keep the Treasury from doing this? If it monetizes a part of the silver seigniorage, why may it not monetize all of it, since it is now in more dire need for spending money than at any previous time?

But there is still another important consideration. What is silver actually worth? Suppose the Treasury were to stop buying it at an artificially fixed price, what would it fetch? No one, of course, can know. But that it would be valued at a much lower figure is altogether probable. This is especially true since Britain and India who, after they unloaded vast quantities of it on us at an enormous price—more than 500,000,000 ounces at a cost of $260,000,000 (Bulletin of the Treasury, March 1940, p. 50)—have placed an embargo on all silver imports, thus leaving the United States, with its vast hoard, holding the bag.

If the Treasury were to stop purchasing silver at an artificially fixed price, this metal might drop to 10 cents or even less per ounce. Should it be worth only 10 cents an ounce the tax which the Treasury could levy under the 1941 Budget could be more than a billion dollars.

That the treasury will avoid using any more of this silver seigniorage for operating purposes than it can possibly help there can be little doubt. This is not because of the clandestine nature of the tax that results from its use, and hardly because of any particular concern or love for the poor, but for quite another reason.

The money transactions and manipulations of this administration have from their beginning been disapproved, discredited, and condemned by all thoughtful and forward-looking persons of every enterprise—farming, manufacturing, distribution, transportation, merchandising, banking. Not necessarily openly in the form of verbal expression, nor even necessarily consciously, but rather by silent and unobtrusive conduct, perhaps subconsciously; by simply slowing down and halting investments, by curtailing plans for the future, going to hand-to-mouth living, marking time, just waiting and hoping the money tinkering will cease.

The average person does not know it, but the financial and monetary policies and transactions of this administration are constantly being scrutinized by at least a few people—intensely and painstakingly by the initiate of all lines of endeavor.

Political tamperers of money have always been painfully sensitive to the minute inspection of their "shenanigans" that always takes place by the knowing. It is no different with those who are so largely responsible for our present money debauch and who persist in maintaining it. Treasury officials are keenly aware that their money manipulations are being watched by just enough people to make it unsafe for them not to be constantly on guard.

Now, it just so happens that the silver manipulations carried on by the Treasury are of such a nature that they can be more readily understood and reveal more clearly their evil effects, as well as the purposes of the tinkerers, than some of the other money tamperings. The keener and more observing part of the investing public, banking fraternity, and financial community in general, are focusing an anxious and watchful eye on this point of the money program; for it is here that the ugly head of inflation has already, more visibly perhaps than elsewhere, raised itself up and thrown not a little fear into their hearts.

You see, the Treasury has already, under the silver-purchase program, issued $1,276,000,000 in silver certificates. Rating silver at 35 cents an ounce—and no higher rating than this can be given it, no matter what the Treasury paid for it—these paper silver-dollar certificates represent $931,000,000 inflation. Hence through the silver manipulations the public has already been taxed nearly a billion dollars.

However, heretofore silver certificates have been issued only to pay for the silver purchased. Though this procedure has inflated the silver currency enormously and levied a corresponding tax upon the people, and though it has been regarded, by a few at least, as a danger sign, it has caused no serious break in confidence. This is perhaps partly because the Treasury has not gone the whole way, perhaps also because it has issued silver certificates only to buy silver and not especially for operating purposes. But, more particularly, it appears to be because so few people understand it and the ones who do are still able to whip up their spirits enough by "whistling in the dark" to keep themselves going.

Not that the silver program has not had its full baneful effects upon our economy. Quite the contrary. Strictly obedient to natural economic and monetary laws, it has produced all the evils of which its monstrous nature is capable.

Nevertheless, since no one but a fool believes we can continue forever in our present course and avert disaster the time must come when confidence in our monetary and financial stability will be completely lost. This is as apt to begin here as any other point in the political monetary and financial juggling.

In my opinion, the resort to the outright printing of paper money for operating the Government that the 1941 Budget makes possible shows a state of desperation that is alarming, to say the least.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an editorial by Mr. A. C. Buss, editor and manager of the Evening Ledger.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two tables which I have compiled from official sources.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 20 minutes next Wednesday after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the legislative program of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the National Youth Administration and the University of Oregon and to include therein a short report from the dean of that institution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. VAN ZANDT addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of a letter from the chief of police of my home town.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Mr. T. B. Fugate at the Democratic convention at Bristol, Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Theer was no objection.

EXTENSION OF THE TRADE-AGREEMENTS PROGRAM AND IOWA

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, when the President on April 12, 1940, signed the resolution extending the Trade Agreements Act for another 3 years he referred to the findings in the hearings on this measure and answered some of the critics who have attempted to create fear against this program. He said in part:

> What was particularly striking was that in the absence of any proof of actual injury, much of the opposition seemed to be based on unwarranted fears as to what might happen in the future. There is nothing more destructive of public welfare than the conjuring up of groundless fears for the sole purpose of discrediting a constructive policy which is invulnerable to attack on any legitimate basis.

I am sorry to say that in my district these "groundless fears" are still being conjured up. By and large, these opponents of trade agreements, basing their attack on unwarranted fears, are the survivors of and advocates of the Hawley-Smoot days. We should not get away from the fact that the trade-agreements program was enacted to modify that disastrous measure.

Congress enacted the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act of 1930, raising tariffs to excessive levels at a time when world conditions and our position as a creditor nation required that we import more if we expected to continue to sell to foreign countries. These countries finding our markets closed to them quickly retaliated with trade reprisals, shutting out American products from their markets. The unmeasured prosperity to farmers, wage earners, and businessmen, which proponents of the act promised would result, never materialized. Instead, thousands of wage earners lost their jobs, farmers witnessed their incomes gradually dwindle and their farms taken from them by foreclosure sales. Businessmen saw their profits vanish overnight. Thus the Nation suffered the results of the Hawley-Smoot Act.

With the break-down of international commerce which followed the artificial canalizing of trade, Iowa's prosperous export trade dropped from $37,400,000 in 1929 to $9,500,000 in 1932, the last year such data were collected by States. Total income payments in Iowa dropped from $1,227,000,000 in 1929 to $622,000,000 in 1932. Iowa farmers' cash income, which depends both upon employment and business conditions in the industrial and metropolitan areas in the United States, together with prosperous foreign markets, fell from $763,000,000 to $283,000,000 for the same period.

Congress in June 1934 enacted the Trade Agreements Act to restore our foreign trade as an indispensable element of an integrated national economy. By its terms the President was authorized, within definite limits specified by Congress, to negotiate agreements with foreign countries for the reciprocal modification of trade barriers. In other words, the trade-agreements program is based on the principle of fair and mutually profitable trade. Tariff reductions and other concessions granted by the United States, in return for the hundreds of concessions received, have been moderate and carefully studied. Adequate safeguards to protect the American market for American producers have been retained.

Our total exports to all countries averaged $3,222,000,000 in the years 1937 and 1938, compared with an average of $2,208,000,000 in 1934 and 1935. Our exports in this same period showed an increase of 61.2 percent to agreement countries compared with only 37.9 percent to non-trade-agreement countries. While it is true that other factors have combined to stimulate the movement of foreign trade in greater volume, nevertheless trade data point unmistakably to the effectiveness of trade agreements in restoring foreign markets for American industrial and agricultural products.

The following table compares the condition of agriculture during the only 3 complete years under the Hawley-Smoot period of excessively high tariffs and 3 years of the trade-agreements period of liberalized trade practices. It should be emphasized that the trade-agreements program was inaugurated to help correct the conditions which existed under the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act. Note that the Iowa hog producers were more than $200,000,000 better off during the 3 years under trade agreements.

Condition of agriculture in Iowa under the Hawley-Smoot tariff period and the trade-agreements period

Commodity	Iowa farmers' cash farm income received during 3 years under—		Gain to Iowa farmers, 1936–38

Dairy products [2]	3,281,000,000	4,389,000,000	1,108,000,000

[1] Since the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act became effective on June 18, 1930, the year 1930 has been omitted. Although the Trade Agreements Act was authorized on June 12, 1934, only 4 agreements had been negotiated by the end of 1935.

[2] Figures shown represent total cash farm income received by farmers throughout the United States, figures for Iowa on dairy products are not available, but Iowa is one of the most important producing States in the country for these products.

NOTE.—Figures do not include Government payments.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time that I asked be reserved for me on Monday be transferred to Tuesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

VETO MESSAGE—PHILIPPINE TRAVEL PAY BILL (H. DOC. NO. 709)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 289, a bill for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899.

The provisions of this bill are almost identical with the provisions of H. R. 2024 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, which I returned to the Congress without my approval on September 22, 1935, and the provisions of H. R. 2904, from which I withheld my approval and indicated the reasons therefor in my memorandum of disapproval dated June 20, 1938. The principal reasons for withholding my approval from the two bills in question are set forth in my memorandum of June 20, 1938, in connection with H. R. 2904, as follows:

The effect of this bill is that the beneficiaries thereof shall be entitled to the travel pay and allowance for subsistence provided in sections 1289 and 1290, Revised Statutes, as then amended and in effect, as though discharged April 11, 1899, by reason of expiration of enlistment, and appointed or reenlisted April 12, 1899, without deduction of travel pay and subsistence paid such officers or soldiers on final muster out subsequent to April 11, 1899.

I am advised by the Secretary of War that there were approximately 15,000 officers and soldiers of the Volunteer forces of the United States in the Philippine Islands at the conclusion of peace with the Kingdom of Spain who would become beneficiaries of this act.

The Comptroller General, in his report on February 23, 1935, advises that the enactment of this bill would authorize payment of travel pay at the rate of 1 day's pay and one ration for each 20 miles, inclusive of the distance by water from the Philippine Islands to San Francisco, approximately 8,000 miles, and that such payments for the water travel alone will exceed 1 year's pay plus 1 day's ration for each day of such period. It is estimated the cost of the legislation will approximate $7,000,000.

Congress has heretofore recognized the service of these officers and men by the award of a special medal, and there was also an allowance, by the act of Congress approved January 12, 1899, of 2 months' extra pay to all Volunteers who served honestly and faithfully beyond the continental limits of the United States. I join most heartily in recognizing and appreciating the patriotic service of these men.

However, approval of this bill would result in the payment of a gratuity to each of the officers and men concerned, in an amount exceeding his pay for a full year, plus the value of rations for the period involved in sea travel from the Philippines to the United States, a benefit utterly without warrant, since each individual concerned has already received transportation and subsistence at Government expense for the journey performed in addition to full pay for the entire time.

I have recently signed an act restoring pensioners of the War with Spain and Philippine Insurrection to their full rate of pension. I feel that no breach of trust has been committed by the Government as regards the men who served their country in the War with Spain and Philippine Insurrection, and from the facts in this case, general legislation upon this subject as provided in H. R. 2024 is not deemed advisable.

In view of the fact that the circumstances involved in this proposal are the same as they were when the previous bills were under consideration, I find no justification for changing my position with respect thereto.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 23, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be entered at large upon the Journal and the message, together with the bill, printed as a House document.

The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the veto message relates to the so-called Philippine travel pay bill, which has been pending before the Congress for many years and with which probably every Member of the House, as well as every Member of the Senate, is thoroughly familiar. It passed the Seventy-fourth and Seventy-fifth Congresses unanimously in both bodies, but at a late date, and the last time met with a pocket veto.

Congress has recognized for many years that this is just and meritorious legislation. It would pay the Volunteers of the Spanish-American War the same subsistence and travel pay allowance which was paid to the men who served in the Regular Army; and the only reason they have not received this allowance in the past is due to the technicality that they were not formally discharged from service and took an oath of reenlistment. This was not their fault. Many of them were scattered throughout the Philippine Islands, some of them on the firing line. They were promised by their superior officers that if they remained in the service they would receive the travel-pay allowance. General Otis, following an exchange of cablegrams with Adjutant General Corbin, from Washington, inquiring for President McKinley, gave these instructions to the officers who commanded these men. The men were asked if they wished to continue in the service under the circumstances. They replied in the affirmative and relied on the assurance which was given them, and they have asked only for the same subsistence and travel-pay allowance which was paid to the members of the Regular forces. If they had not accepted and continued in service, it would have required the sending of forces to the Philippine Islands to take their places to quell the insurrection led by Aguinaldo. This would have cost this Government more money than it actually did, and their remaining in the service resulted in the saving of many millions of dollars to the Federal Government.

There are only 8,000 who will now participate under this bill, and they will receive approximately $300 or $400 apiece or a total sum of a little in excess of $3,000,000.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. These facts are all set forth in the committee report, as follows:

Their retention in service followed an exchange of cablegrams between Adjutant General Corbin and General Otis, in command in the Philippines. On March 6, 1899, Adjutant General Corbin cabled, quoting section 15, act of March 2, 1899 (30 Stat. 981), in part, as follows:

"Section 15 of the Army bill reads in part as follows:

" 'That the President is authorized to enlist temporarily in service for absolutely necessary purposes in the Philippine Islands Volunteers, officers, and men, individually or by organization, now in those islands and about to be discharged, provided their retention shall not extend beyond the time necessary to replace them by troops authorized to be maintained under the provisions of this act and not beyond a period of 6 months.'

"The President inquires as follows:

" 'If we are not able to get you sufficient forces to replace Volunteers under your command before exchange of ratification of treaty, will you be able to enlist your present Volunteer force under this section?' "

On March 16, 1899, General Otis replied as follows:

"Believed after inquiry majority Volunteer organizations willing to reenlist for 6 months from ratification of treaty, provided that upon original discharge are paid traveling allowances to places of muster in, and that after expiration of second enlistment they are transported to those places by United States."

This reply from General Otis was based on responses he had received from the several organizations of Volunteers under his command to whom the inquiry from the President had been submitted. In some units the inquiry had been read to the men by their officers and voted upon, while in others where the men were scattered the officers had spoken for the men and agreed to reenlist and stay for the period required, not to exceed 6 months. The condition contained in the cablegram was in substance a statement of the law then in effect governing travel-pay allowances to officers and men discharged [honorably] and who were again appointed or who reenlisted.

On March 25, 1899, a general advance was ordered against the insurrectionists, and from that date until in June these Volunteer troops were in active combat—some of them longer—in the campaign against the insurrectionists. They were required to meet unusual hardships in this campaign, fighting as they were under a tropical sun, badly equipped, without adequate food and water, and continually harassed by surprise attacks. When the date of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace arrived, April 11, 1899, these Volunteers were in the field and continued so for months. It would have been a physical impossibility to have effected the signing of a muster-out roll and a muster-in roll, so that the service of these men would actually show a discharge and a reenlistment or reappointment, but these officers and soldiers believed when they accepted the duty of remaining on so long as their services were required in the Philippine Islands, not to exceed 6 months, that they had in effect reenlisted. Their services in the field were accepted and utilized by the Government following almost immediately the agreement to remain in service until troops to replace them could be supplied. This service in active combat continued until after the date of the conclusion of peace with Spain, for some units not longer than 3 months, for others and most of the troops in the Volunteer service of the United States for the greater part of 6 months.

Had these officers and soldiers insisted upon their discharge as of the date of the conclusion of peace with Spain, it would have meant the abandonment of the islands to the insurrectionists except for the very limited number of Regular Army troops then in the islands.

The result would have been the retaking by the Aguinaldo forces of the territory then held by these Volunteers, the strengthening of the insurrectionist organization, and the expenditure of many millions not only for the transportation of another army to take up the fight again but also for a long and fierce combat by non-acclimated troops against well-equipped and well-organized native soldiers accustomed to the climate and acquainted with the country. The organized insurrection was broken by the continuous drive of the Volunteers, and the replacement troops which took their places had but to clear the country of unorganized detached bands. It is pertinent to remark here that the insurrectionists, numbering between 30,000 and 40,000, had been equipped and trained by the United States and had been cooperating with American troops in the War with Spain; and that knowing the Volunteers were entitled to be discharged when the War with Spain terminated, they counted upon the withdrawal of the Volunteers to make it possible for them to gain control of the islands and eventually their independence.

It is obvious that there is no legal liability on the part of the Government, because the formality of mustering the troops out and mustering them in as again-appointed officers and reenlisted soldiers did not take place, but the men did perform valiant service, for which they were commended by President McKinley, and which Congress recognized by the awarding of a special medal; they did remain in service for from 3 to 6 months beyond the termination of the War with Spain on April 11, 1899, on which date they were entitled to their discharge; and they did this all believing that they were to be regarded as having reenlisted in the temporary forces authorized by section 15 of the act of March 2, 1899, and were thereby entitled to the travel pay and allowances authorized by then existing law as though their first enlistment had terminated on April 11, 1899, and they had entered upon a second enlistment beginning April 12, 1899. They fulfilled all the requirements of such temporary enlistment without having formally gone through the process of veteranizing.

Hon. Russell A. Alger, Secretary of War under President McKinley, had the following to say in his report:

"Any discussion of public affairs in the Philippines would be manifestly incomplete which did not include the highest eulogiums upon the western Volunteers who remained in the Philippines fighting for their country's honor after they were legally entitled to discharge and return to the United States. That ratification of the treaty of peace, February 6, 1899 (April 11, 1899), practically entitled all Volunteer regiments and the individual members of the Regular Army, numbering many thousands, who enlisted for the war, to immediate discharge from the Army, and yet some of these Volunteers did not leave the Philippines until 4 months subsequent to that date, while several of the regiments remained defending their country's flag for 7 months afterward. This is an exhibition of sturdy patriotism which, it seems to me, has never been fully appreciated. No complaint ever came from these soldiers on account of the hardships ever forming part of war, or for the delay in being returned to their homes after they were entitled to discharge. They yielded to the situation as cheerfully as they endured the great and fatiguing privations of hauling guns and carts over the mountain passes and through the trails of muck and mire under the enervating blaze of a tropical sun when even the native draft animals had been overcome with heat and exhaustion.

"The Nation, indeed, owes these noble soldiers a debt which I trust Congress will not fail to recognize in some substantial way."

From the manner in which the President's inquiry contained in Adjutant General Corbin's cablegram of March 6, 1899, was presented to them and the fact that their services were used as though they had reenlisted, these officers and men in the Volunteer service of the United States honestly believed at that time that they were to receive travel pay and allowances on that account and that it would be paid to them upon final muster out, and it was not until they appeared to draw their final pay that they learned that the money which they understood and believed had been promised them was not available. They were told that the War Department had no funds and had made no arrangements for the payment, but that Congress would undoubtedly pass an act to pay them.

For over 30 years these men, the officers and soldiers of the Volunteer service in the Philippines, have been seeking to get recognition from the Government for what they honestly feel is a just claim. It has been presented in one form or another in practically every Congress since their discharge from the service, but because of a lack of organized support from the men themselves, has failed of favorable action.

As bearing upon the right of these officers and soldiers of the Volunteer service to be discharged on April 11, 1899, Comptroller of the Treasury Tracewell, in construing General Orders, 54, dated March 22, 1899, and General Orders, 67, dated April 11, 1899, said:

"But in construing said orders notice must be taken of the fact that under the provisions of section 4, act of April 22, 1898, supra, and section 15, act of March 2, 1899, supra, the members of the Volunteer Army who entered the service under the act of April 22, 1898, and amendments thereof, became entitled to their discharge on April 11, 1899.

"The fact that the exigencies of the service made it necessary to hold some of them in service to a later date, as soldiers have frequently been held in cases of emergency beyond the full term of their enlistment, did not abrogate their legal right to a discharge on the date of the close of the War with Spain.

"Section 1, act of January 12, 1899, supra, requiring the discharge of all officers and enlisted men from the Volunteer service, as far as practicable, to be made at camps within the limits of the United States must also be considered.

"Whether it was practicable to discharge any particular soldier within the limits of the United States, or more for the interests of the Government to discharge him at the place where he was serving, was left by the act to be determined by the Secretary of War and 'public events of great public interest and widespread notoriety,' of which notice must be taken (16 Ct. Cls. 121; 3 How. 24), which made it most desirable to induce as many trained and acclimated soldiers as possible to remain in the islands, where they had been serving, support the conclusion that in issuing General Orders, No. 54, supra, the Secretary of War considered primarily the interest of the Government and not the convenience of the soldier."

In a communication dated July 31, 1930, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, Comptroller General John R. McCarl, in discussing the provisions of an identical bill introduced in the Senate (S. 4403), said:

"Had these Volunteers in fact been discharged on April 11, 1899, as thus held and administratively conceded they had a right to be, they would have been entitled to transportation and subsistence to the place in the United States to which returnable, or cash travel allowances in lieu; and had they in fact been so discharged, and had the President, under the authority conferred on him by the proviso to section 15 of the act of March 2, 1899, supra, authorized the Volunteers then in the islands and about to be discharged to temporarily enlist for the time necessary to replace them by Regulars, not in excess of 6 months, and had they so enlisted, instead of, as in fact occurred, their continuance on in their existing enlistments for not exceeding 6 months pending their replacement, it would appear they would have been entitled to cash travel allowances on their discharge for close of the war, and again to travel allowances in kind or in cash on their discharge from their temporary enlisted service of not exceeding 6 months, or, in other words, to cash travel allowances from the Philippines back, additional to the travel allowances in kind and/or in cash they later in fact received on their return from the Philippines and discharge. What the bill, therefore, in effect, appears to do is to pay these Volunteers entitled to discharge on April 11, 1899, and who continued on for not exceeding 6 months, the cash travel allowances they presumably would have received had they in fact been discharged on said date, or, in other words, cash travel allowances on such a hypothetical discharge, additional to such allowances as in fact received on their later actual discharge."

Your committee feels that the Government, having received the benefits of the services rendered by these Volunteers, who after April 11, 1899, on which date they were entitled to receive their discharge, continued in combative service until the organized insurrection had been broken and for various periods approaching 6 months after such date, should not now, nor at any time, avail itself of a technicality to deny to these brave and patriotic officers and the soldiers serving under them the travel pay and allowances which they understood and believed was to be paid them, and which, if not a legal obligation, is certainly a moral obligation on the part of the Government to pay. Thirty-nine years and more is entirely too long a time for the Government to withhold a payment of this obligation. Therefore, after careful consideration of all the facts, your committee unanimously recommends that the bill do pass as amended.

I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS].

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the heirs of those now deceased receive the pay that would have gone to their veteran relatives?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. If the veteran is deceased, then the widows and sons and daughters of such veteran would receive the amount that would otherwise go to him if still living.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Yes; I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. I assume, of course, that the gentleman's committee had adequate hearings on this question, and I would ask whether they went into the subject of ascertaining whether there was any opposition to the measure from the departments concerned, and what their reports were upon it, and whether or not the committee searched into the question of the cost and the justness of the thing in adequate hearings?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The bill received very thorough hearings and consideration in the present Congress, and also in the Seventy-fourth and the Seventy-fifth Congresses and prior Congresses. We have held extended hearings upon this bill. We have departmental reports, and a thorough investigation has been made into the cost, and the result is that the committees have repeatedly and unanimously reported favorably on this legislation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I suppose the report shows what will be the probable cost?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The last estimate at the hearings in the Seventy-fifth Congress was, I believe, that the cost will be about $3,200,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is there any radical departure in this bill from the old bills respecting the same thing?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. No radical departure, but this bill provides that the General Accounting Office and the Comptroller shall certify to Congress those who shall prove themselves to be eligible under the legislation within 3 years after the bill goes into effect. That is a precaution which the committee took in order to insure that only those who are actually entitled to the travel pay and allowance shall receive it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That will be an improvement upon the old bill.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Yes; I consider this bill an improvement upon former bills.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the Volunteer during this Spanish-American War was asked to reenlist in the Philippine Islands with the understanding that if he did reenlist, Philippine travel pay would be granted to him at the conclusion of his service?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The gentleman is absolutely correct. That is what actually transpired, and it was in accordance with the instructions which General Otis received from Adjutant General Corbin. These veterans have always believed that if President McKinley had not been assassinated, that promise would have been faithfully kept and they would have received their pay as it was promised them.

Mr. MAY. Therefore the bill does justice to the veterans of the Spanish-American War.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Yes; if that promise is to be kept.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman knows very well that when we were asked to consider veteran claims, we are usually furnished the veteran's discharge certificate, and that we usually see on that a statement, or sometimes do, that they were allowed travel pay of so much. Were those veterans, when discharged, given their travel pay at that time back home? Is that involved in this, or is that separate?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. That is not involved in this. This is entirely separate. This is subsistence and travel pay which they were promised and did not receive, and which the members of the Regular Army did receive, as I understand it.

Mr. CARLSON. It is true, is it not, that this bill in committee encountered no opposition, that the committee unanimously felt this is a just obligation?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Is it not true that when this matter came up and the city of Manila was threatened by the insurgents, General Otis wired that this would be paid?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The gentleman is correct. The records of the War Department bear out their contention, as appears from the committee report from which I have quoted.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. And that General Alger, then Secretary of War, did the same?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. He did and he stated that the Nation owed these men a debt which he hoped that Congress would recognize in some substantial way. That is what we are endeavoring to do.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. And that it is an obligation as sacred as anything the Government ever made.

It is the duty of this Congress to pay this long-overdue debt this Nation owes to these soldiers. The fact that it is a moral obligation makes it nonetheless obligatory. The Committee on War Claims has performed its duty in a patriotic manner, and the chairman of the committee is convinced of its justice.

It has now been over a third of a century since the beginning of this war, and the men engaged in it are no longer young. Their service in the swampy jungles of the Philippines undermined their health, and this small sum coming in their advancing age would be a blessing on them and a benediction upon their country for an act of delayed justice. This Government can afford to pay these veterans, but it cannot afford to deny them justice, for it is a debt of honor the Nation owes to men who nobly did their duty in 20 battles for their country. Many of them achieved immortal glory for heroic behavior and gallantry in the field. The Twentieth Kansas is included in those who are entitled to this travel pay. Kansas has long been proud of what became known as the Fighting Twentieth. It had a distinguished roster of officers who have attained rare distinction. Its first colonel, Frederick Funston, along with Edward White and William B. Trembly, were awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor, the highest honor granted by Congress, for gallantry at the crossing of the Rio Grande.

Colonel Funston was soon after promoted to brigadier general of Volunteers, and Maj. Wilder S. Metcalf succeeded him as colonel. Lieutenant Colonel Little became a Member of Congress, and was my predecessor. At the time of his death General Funston was ranking major general of the United States Army. Clyde Wilson and Frank Dodds performed prodigious feats of valor as scouts and sharpshooters. Other States had troops of like valor who added glory to the military history of their country and who likewise are entitled to this promised travel pay, and this Congress will not have done its duty if it fails to pass this act.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I agree absolutely with the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Yes.

Mr. RICH. How much did the gentleman say it would cost to carry this out?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Approximately $3,000,000—I think $3,200,000, which is somewhat less than the estimate of the War Department.

Mr. RICH. How do you reconcile the statement made in the President's veto message that it would cost about $7,000,000?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The committee estimate is based upon some of the figures furnished by the United Spanish War Veterans as given to our committee. They have very complete records of the number of veterans of the Spanish-American War who are alive and who would come under this act and be beneficiaries, and their estimates in the past have proved quite accurate.

Mr. RICH. How do you believe he got his figures?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Those are the figures which were furnished by the War Department under previous bills. I do not consider that the President is to blame. He relies on the information furnished to him by others, and you know most veterans' legislation of major importance has been passed over Presidential vetoes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to ask the gentleman this question: As I understand, this was travel pay that was promised these men at the time they were discharged; that is, funds on which they were supposed to come home; that is correct, is it?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. It is not entirely correct, because they were asked whether they would continue and remain in the service, and they were promised that if they did, they would be paid this travel-pay allowance. The regulars were discharged and reenlisted and received payment. Many of the volunteers who were serving at various places in the islands were not formally discharged and reenlisted—not mustered out and mustered in again. They did not take the oath of reenlistment, but they were assured that if they would remain in the service continuously, without being discharged and reenlisting, they would receive this travel-pay allowance the same as was paid to the regulars.

Mr. RANKIN. When they were finally discharged, were they given their travel-pay allowance?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. They received the regular transportation that all of those who served received, but they did not receive the travel-pay allowance which was promised to them, as I have indicated, and which was paid to the regulars in return of their continuing in the service. They accepted reenlistment without being formally reenlisted, and thereby saved the Government the expense of inducting a new army and new forces to take their places. It actually resulted in the saving of many millions of dollars to the Federal Government, much more than the cost of this bill, according to the records of the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington has again expired.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 83]

Allen, Pa.	Gifford	Merritt	Shafer, Mich.
Boren	Gilchrist	Mott	Sheppard
Buckley, N. Y.	Green	Mouton	Sheridan

Fenton	McGranery	Scrugham	Whelchel
Gerlach	Martin, Ill.	Seccombe	White, Ohio

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and seventy-eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH], the author of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, for the information of those who have entered the Chamber since the quorum call was made, I want to explain briefly the situation before the House.

We are considering the veto message of the President on the so-called Philippine travel pay bill. This bill has unanimously passed both branches of Congress three times. It was recently passed by the Senate a week or so ago after having been passed by the House last year.

The purpose of the bill is to discharge the obligation of the Government to the veterans of the Spanish-American War who agreed, in response to the inquiry of President McKinley as conveyed by Adjutant General Corbin to General Otis, to remain in the Philippine Islands during the insurrection following the War with Spain after having been given assurance by their superior officers that they would be paid the regular travel-pay allowance which was paid to members of the Regular Army of the United States.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Some of the opponents of this bill say that its passage would mean that these volunteers would be paid twice. That is not true. There is no question but what these volunteers are asking only for the same compensation paid members of the Regular Army. They are not being paid twice by any means.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The gentleman is correct in his statement that they will, if this bill is passed, receive only the same allowance which was given to members of the Regular Army of the United States in addition to their transportation, no more and no less.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In a case like this, where the Spanish War veteran would have title to this additional pay, and he died yesterday or 2 years ago, does the bill provide that his widow or legal heirs shall receive the amount of money which was due to the deceased Spanish War veteran?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. It does.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Do I understand that these Spanish-American War veterans were promised this pay in order to get them to continue their service in the Army?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The gentleman from Arizona has stated the facts correctly. Thereby the Government of the United States was saved many times the cost of this bill, for otherwise it would have been necessary to induct and transport new men into the Army to take their place and not only pay their transportation to the islands, but train them; and, of course, they could not have so effectively quelled the insurrection of Aguinaldo and the insurrectionists.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the bill, the objection of the President notwithstanding?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 275, nays 83, answered "present" 2, not voting 70, as follows:

Messrs. HARTER of Ohio, EDELSTEIN, DIES, and BYRNE of New York changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I was called out of the Chamber and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If a Member is not in the Hall listening when his or her name is called, they cannot qualify.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire if the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GIFFORD, is recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GIFFORD, is not recorded.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GIFFORD; I therefore withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. KELLER. I withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I just came into the Hall. I have been out of town.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the RECORD show that I could not qualify because I was called out of the Chamber? If present, I would have voted "nay."

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, if present I would have voted "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize any Members for requests that do not involve too much time.

AUTHORIZING PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TO PROCLAIM CITIZENSHIP DAY

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas submitted conference report and statement on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437), "authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the bill just passed and the veto message of the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects; first, to include a brief article by Harry B. Price on the subject Japanese Aggression, and, second, a brief statement by John McGivney on the subject Organized Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Christian Science Monitor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from the Washington Star on the Barden bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY]?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT OF 1938

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 289 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 289

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5435, a bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Labor, the bill shall be read and after the reading of the first section of such bill it shall be in order to move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as a substitute the text of the bill H. R. 7349 and all points of order against such substitute are hereby waived. It shall also be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the text of the bill H. R. 7133 as a substitute for the text of the substitute containing the language of the bill H. R. 7349. No amendment shall be in order to the two substitute amendments herein authorized except one amendment proposing to strike out the word "not" in line 20 on page 4 of the text of H. R. 7133. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill H. R. 5435 the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, later on I will yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and reserve 30 minutes for myself and other Members who desire time.

Mr. Speaker, if ever a timely prayer was offered it was offered today, when the Chaplain called attention in his prayer to the crucifixion of the One who advocated justice and humanity. This applies to many of those who advocate justice and humanity today.

I exceedingly regret, Mr. Speaker, that although I was ordered to report this resolution I cannot support it. I hope that when the Members of the House are made familiar with its drastic and unjustifiable provisions they will vote it down. [Applause.]

This resolution makes in order the so-called Norton bill, H. R. 5435, and this without the Committee on Labor having ever asked for a rule on that bill. It is the first time in the history of this House that I know of that the Committee on Rules has reported a rule on a bill when the committee in charge had not asked for the rule.

The Rules Committee was created for the purpose of expediting business, to prevent dilatory motions, and to protect Members from being subjected to going on record on catchy, embarrassing motions. This rule, if adopted, places the Members of the House in a very embarrassing position, because I know that the 314 Members of the House and the 58 Members of the Senate who originally voted for this legislation are still for it and would very much dislike to see this splendid law emasculated.

The rule provides that after the first section of the Norton bill has been read it shall be in order to move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as a substitute the text of the bill, H. R. 7349—the Ramspeck bill—and all points of order against such substitute are waived. It shall also be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the Barden bill, H. R. 7133, as a substitute for the text of the substitute containing the language of the Ramspeck bill, H. R. 7349. No amendment shall be in order to the two substitute amendments, namely, the Ramspeck and Barden bills.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Just for a question.

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield. I want to explain the rule.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is just what I want to ask the question about.

Mr. SABATH. I will explain the rule, and I believe when I am through the gentleman will understand it. If this rule is adopted we will have established a precedent which will give the Rules Committee the right to ignore the action of all the standing legislative committees of the House. During my 34 years of service here I have never seen such a brazen proposition attempted. This rule would give the Rules Committee the right at any time to consider any rule any Member may ask for, notwithstanding the fact that the committee having jurisdiction of the bill has not been given sufficient time to consider it.

I warn you this would set a most dangerous precedent and give the Rules Committee a tremendous power that may easily react to plague this House. As chairman of the Committee on Rules I feel that such power should not be granted to the Rules Committee, this regardless of whether I am the chairman or some other member is its chairman.

Not only the chairmen and the ranking minority members of the committees of this body, but all the members should carefully reflect as to the effect of this rule. Surely, they cherish and will guard the prerogatives of jurisdiction of legislation referred to their respective committees as provided by present rules, which have been amended, strengthened and improved time and time again during the parliamentarian history of this body, all to the end of assuring the individual Member, the committees and the entire membership the protection they enjoy under the rules today.

There are many ways to get bills before the House for consideration, Mr. Speaker, such as by call of the calendar on Calendar Wednesday, by recognition by the Speaker for suspension of the rules, by special rule, or by discharge petition.

A bill, however, should not be brought out by the Rules Committee before the committee to which it has been referred and having jurisdiction has completed its hearings and consideration and made its report thereon. And such is not the case as regards the Norton bill, H. R. 5435, which measure, as you know, has had a rather unusual history. The original Norton bill was reported to the House April 27, 1939. Then, upon the insistent demands of various groups, the hearings were reopened. The Labor Committee redrafted the bill four times, the last committee print being dated June 2, 1939. In this connection I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to speak a word of highly deserved praise on behalf of the able chairman of the Labor Committee, who consistently has contended with the enemies of labor whenever and as often as they have dared to show their heads on Capitol Hill. I here refute in the strongest words possible the unwarranted charge that her committee deliberately delayed action on this proposed legislation. Due to the hasty action of the Rules Committee, the Labor Committee did not have an opportunity to report its fourth and last amended bill.

I restate that this rule is not and was not of my making. It was prepared originally by the Parliamentarian of the House and agreed to by the gentlemen who have just now appealed to me to allow the submission of an amendment to change the rule. To ask me at this last minute to open the rule to amendment is, to say the least, manifestly unfair to me. During the consideration of the rule by the Rules Committee, I urged that the rule should grant the right of amendment which is now being sought. But the gentlemen who have just presented me with their signed petition, with the aid of the Republicans, refused to entertain my request for a rule allowing amendments to the bills covered by the resolution. I repeat, it is unfair now to ask me for an amendment of the rule just as consideration of the rule by the House is being concluded. Obviously, it is merely a last-minute effort to embarrass me by placing me in the position of objecting to the procedure which I originally favored and wanted to have followed.

Mr. Speaker, for the enlightenment of the membership of the House, I wish to point out the effect that the enactment of the Barden bill—H. R. 7133—would have upon wage earners now covered by the present Fair Labor Standards Act:

First. The Barden bill would make about 1,000,000 workers exempt from the minimum-wage provisions. The sponsor of this bill contends that these workers are not worth 30 cents an hour. This is the real issue that the bill raises.

Second. All agricultural labor,—that is, work done on the farm or by the farmer—is already exempt. The Barden bill is seeking these exemptions in the name of the farmer but the farmer is not involved. It is the packing, canning, sugar, and cotton lobbies who are seeking this legislation.

Third. The Barden bill would also exempt about a million and one-half employees from the overtime provisions of the law. Many of these workers are engaged in meat-packing plants, cheese factories, terminal grain elevators, and large milk plants such as Borden's.

Fourth. The Barden bill would impose a 6-month period of limitation against employee suits for unpaid wages. This 6-month period would start running at the time the violation occurred, irrespective of when it was discovered. At present the States' statutes of limitation apply and run from 3 to 10 years. To limit them as proposed would destroy the right of employees' suits and thus increase the cost of enforcement, as such suits and the threat of such suits is an effective aid in securing compliance.

There are some gentlemen here who feel that perhaps the regulations of the Fair Labor Standards Act should be broadened or amended. For the information of the House, I have here before me now and you yourselves have received many regulations issued in the last 6 months by Colonel Fleming, of the Wage and Hour Division, all tending to adjust questions that have arisen since the enactment of the law. In view of this fact, and in view of the fact that Colonel Fleming is desirous of still further broadening the rules and regulations, I believe it is unfair for us to consider this bill and try to amend it, in the face of the fact that every effort is being made to have the law made workable.

And in concluding I cannot too strongly impress upon the membership that a vote for the rule is a vote to emasculate this fair labor standards law; it is a vote for long hours and starvation wages which I regret to say still prevail in certain industries throughout our country. I know of many instances in the last 6 months where investigation has disclosed that the owners of large manufacturing plants and businesses, whose net profits have ranged from fifty thousand to as high as half a million dollars a year, have paid their women and young employees as low as 10 cents an hour. The demand for the proposed changes in this law emanates from this class of unfair and greedy exploiters of labor. None of you who vote for this rule will be able to go home and explain your vote except by professing ignorance of the effect of the provisions of the Barden bill, or by acknowledging that you think more of the avaricious manufacturer than you do of the unfortunate underpaid men and women whom the fair labor standards law at least to some extent protect.

Mr. Speaker, I feel certain that regardless of the action that may be taken on this resolution or bill in the House, the body on the other end of this Capitol will not forget the duty they owe to the underpaid and undernourished wage earners of our country and that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] and those who follow his philosophy, will find that in the end their work has been in vain.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. SABATH. I am sorry, I cannot yield. I have consumed now more time than I had intended.

Mr. COX. The gentleman declines to yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I do not have the time. I have already used 2 more minutes than I had intended to reserve to myself.

Mr. COX. The gentleman does not propose to yield at all?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] no doubt as heretofore will attempt to show that the farmers and business will be unfavorably affected. But he and the country must know, as I have already stated, that since the Fair Labor Standards Act went into effect late in 1938 business and employment have increased because of the fact that the purchasing power of the wage earner has increased.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield in order that I may propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The gentleman from Michigan will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the proposed resolution provides that the bill H. R. 5435, the so-called Norton bill, shall be read after general debate. Then the rule provides that certain other bills known as the Ramspeck bill and the Barden bill may be offered as substitutes. The resolution expressly provides that the substitutes may not be amended. If the resolution is adopted and the substitutes which are in order are offered and rejected, then will the Norton bill be read under the rules of the House which provide that any amendment may be offered which is germane, subject to the 5-minute rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the two proposed substitutes should be rejected by the Committee of the Whole, then the original Norton bill would be read by sections and would be subject to any germane amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield so that I may make a statement with reference to a point raised by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FISH. If I might have a part of the gentleman's time, I should be glad to yield.

Mr. COX. I would like the gentleman to yield to me for just one question.

Mr. FISH. I will yield to the gentleman now, but I may have to take it out of his time later.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will not have to do that, but let me say that the rule now before the House provides for the consideration of the Norton bill and makes in order the substitution of the Ramspeck or the Barden bill. It provides further that no amendment shall be in order to either the Ramspeck or the Barden bill. I asked the chairman of the Rules Committee to yield to me to offer an amendment to the rule making both bills subject to amendment, and I present to him now a request signed by the majority of his Democratic colleagues on the committee, asking him either to offer such an amendment himself or to yield to some member of the committee to offer the amendment.

Mr. FISH. That is a matter entirely in his hands and with which I have nothing to do.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to address my remarks first to the Republican side. The Republican floor leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], wanted me to make very clear that this is in no sense a partisan issue, either the vote on the rule or the vote on any of the three bills that will be brought up under the rule, if the rule is adopted, the Ramspeck, Norton, and the Barden bills; that every Member on the minority side should naturally consider both the rule and the different bills on their merits and vote their convictions freely and openly. This is the usual procedure, of course, of the Republican Party. [Applause.]

This rule was adopted on July 27 of last year, some 9 months ago, and was filed on August 2. At the time of its adoption by the Rules Committee I was not present, because I was then on the high seas. The rule is out of the ordinary; it is extraordinary. It makes in order three bills, the Norton bill, for which no rule has been requested, and two other bills that have never been reported by a committee.

I am just giving you the facts and I want to be open-minded myself, both on the rule and on the bills. I am very generally in favor of the wage and hour bill, which I voted for and believe in more today than I did when I voted for it a few years ago. [Applause.] There is no question in my mind that it has been accepted by the American people and that there is very little opposition to the continuation of the wage and hour bill except from selfish interests who would like to get back to 10 cents an hour wage scales.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes more.

Of course, everybody knows there are inequalities and injustices in the bill and the House has the right to remedy those injustices and those inequalities by proper amendments to the existing law.

As far as the Rules Committee and its power are concerned, it had the power to report the pending rule. It has the right and the power under the rules of the House to report out bills that have had no committee hearings, and therefore its actions are within the scope of the rules of the House. The Rules Committee is nothing but an agency of the House. The House is still the master, and it has the right, of course, to vote down or to agree to the rule or the bills. A majority of the Members have control of the situation and can work their will on the rule. If the membership of the House does not agree that the Rules Committee was wise in its judgment in reporting three bills which had had no committee hearings, all they have to do is to vote down the rule and that ends the procedure. Amendments to the Wage and Hour Act can be submitted by the Labor Committee in the orderly way with proper amendments that are germane, and probably necessary to do away with the inequalities of these injustices that may exist.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield for a very brief question.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman has described this rule as being extraordinary. Will the gentleman please explain why such an extraordinary procedure has been outlined to do an extraordinary job on the American workers?

Mr. FISH. All I can say to the gentleman, as I said before, is that I was on the high seas at the time. I probably would not have voted for the rule, because I do not like this type of "gag" rule. I certainly do not like any part of the "gag" in this rule. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] offers to amend and liberalize the rule now, but it certainly came out of the committee distinctly as a "gag" rule of the worst kind, because no amendment would be in order under this rule to the Barden bill or the Ramspeck bill, but we could amend the Norton bill if the other two bills were voted down.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield very briefly.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman know of any precedent for such a rule?

Mr. FISH. I do not know of any precedent for three bills to be reported by one rule, but there have been instances somewhat similar. The old bonus bill was brought in with two or three bills under such a rule, but I have not looked that up. I believe the McCormack bill and the bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] were brought up under somewhat similar rules, but I do not remember if it was a "gag" rule.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. FISH. No; the gentleman will have his own time.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BARTON. Does not the gentleman feel that the proper and orderly procedure for the House is to vote down this rule? [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has put me directly on the spot. I tried to approach this rule and these bills with an open mind. I think I shall vote against the rule [applause], and the main reason I will vote against it is that I believe that these bills are an attempt to break down the wage scale in certain southern States in order to exploit both the poor white and colored labor in those sections of the country.

I am against all attempts to break down the $12.60 a week wage scale. That is little enough for American wage earners. [Applause.] I cannot understand how any American can deliberately single out any group of industrial workers, because these proposals do not affect agricultural workers, and say $12.60 is too much to pay an American wage earner for a week's work. If this is an attempt to break down the law then I am against it. I believe it should be modified in the orderly and proper way, particularly for seasonable occupations and that it can be done by this House, but when you bring all these amendments up in three bills in this confused manner under a "gag" rule after 9 months, I am compelled to say as long as I have been asked the question that I propose to vote against the rule.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. I think the whole subject is so important that it should come in under circumstances where there would be no confusion.

Mr. FISH. That is right.

Mr. REED of New York. There are certain amendments that are absolutely essential to the employment of labor and give the farmers a fair deal as well, and here we are foreclosed from any opportunity of amendment except perhaps to make a 5-minute speech under the 5-minute rule, hoping that the Senate will do something about it.

Mr. FISH. I agree with the gentleman, and I will follow his sound advice by voting against the rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reference has been made to this rule. Some talk about it being a liberal rule—liberal so far as the Norton bill is concerned, but closed tight when it comes to the Barden substitute. Outside of one amendment that can be offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] himself, you cannot offer an amendment, you cannot move to stike out one word in the Barden substitute. As to the Ramspeck substitute, not even the committee is permitted to offer an amendment. Is that fair to the membership of this House?

Now, as to the Norton bill, if the substitutes are voted down, the rule provides for the consideration of as many amendments as are offered.

There is but one course for this House to pursue, and that is to follow the orderly procedure of this body and send this resolution back to the Rules Committee, where it belongs. That can be done by voting "no" on the resolution.

There is no use in taking up the time of the House passing destructive amendments on this act, because there is a place where they will stop. This administration is committed to keep this Fair Labor Standards Act on the statute books. It is only fair that proper time be given so that it will have a fair trial.

Three years ago the Black-Connery bill regulating wages and hours was introduced in Congress. It was subjected to the same sort of blind opposition that earlier legislation on wages and hours had faced, and it was only after extensive, searching, and at times bitter debate that the present law, the Fair Labor Standards Act, was passed.

Since every court that has passed on the constitutionality of the act has upheld the statute's validity—that includes six district judges and a circuit court of appeals—those who fought the passage of this legislation realize that they have no hope of overthrowing it in the courts. Consequently, they have again shifted the scene of their attack to Congress. You find no effort now to openly urge repeal of the act. Those opposing the bill do not dare advocate such a course. They seek this objective in another way. Their strategy is to emasculate the act by first denying the Administrator a sufficient appropriation with which to enforce it, and secondly by exempting, without economic or social justification, the very employees who need its protection most.

The Fair Labor Standards Act has not yet been on the statute books for 2 years, and it has been in effect for little more than a year. The Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor, charged with its enforcement, has not yet had sufficient funds to enforce its provisions. Experience under the act is insufficient at this time to justify any sweeping amendments. I hope the rule will be voted down. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, in discussing the Barden amendments, let me remind you that the Fair Labor Standards Act was a long time coming. For generations the people of Scandinavia and England, among other European countries, have had wage and hour legislation. When Federal legislation in this country was first being considered it was opposed on the grounds that the States should deal with the problem. When the States passed legislation on wages or hours, a prompt attack upon its validity was made in the courts, and for over 30 years the courts effectively blocked State regulation.

Three main proposals are contained in the Barden bill, although certain other changes are incorporated to sugarcoat the pill.

First, a complete exemption is provided from both the wage and hour provisions for all employees engaged in handling or processing agricultural commodities. Since an adequate hours exemption already is provided for these employees, the sole issue with respect to them is whether they should be paid 30 cents an hour or whether their wages should be reduced to the miserably low wages, often less than a dime an hour, they were paid before the act became effective.

Second, a complete hours exemption, although phrased in terms of a limitation on hours, is provided for all employees engaged in handling and slaughtering livestock and poultry.

Finally, a 6-month limitation is placed upon the right of employees to sue for the wages guaranteed them by the act.

I direct my remarks now to this last amendment because it earmarks and brands the entire Barden bill as destructive of the protection Congress intended to afford employees by the Fair Labor Standards Act. The effect of this proposal is to deny to employees all of their rights under the act, no matter how justifiable the reasons for delay in filing suit may be. The period fixed is so short, its purpose should be obvious. I can think of no statute of limitations which outlaws a claim in so short a period as 6 months. Such a provision is discriminatory in the extreme. No Member of Congress would dare introduce a bill containing such a limitation upon a property right. I am sorry to see the rights of workers treated so lightly. In plain words, the effect of this proposal is to invite an employer who has admittedly violated the law to take a chance, on the theory either that his employees are uninformed as to their rights or, though informed, are so afraid of losing their jobs that they will not dare sue during the tenure of their employment. This provision, by removing for all practical purposes the deterrent effect of the employee's right to sue, will, in conjunction with insufficient funds, cripple the Administrator in his efforts to decently enforce this law.

Looking very briefly at the amendments providing a complete exemption for both the wage and hour provisions for employees of canners and packers and processors of agricultural commodities, let me make just one point. These are the employees who benefited most from the Fair Labor Standards Act. These are the unorganized, helpless workers the act was passed to protect. These are the workers who, prior to the time this law became effective, were paid a dime an hour, 5 cents, and even 3 cents an hour, for hard work in canning and packing factories. The proponents of the Barden bill apparently are willing to see these employees returned to starvation wages—returned to the relief rolls and supported by the taxpayers—so that the industrial masters of these serfs may have an economic advantage over the decent employers of labor.

I find it hard to believe that there is some minimum wage below which some would not permit labor to be exploited.

If the proponents of the Barden bill believe 30 cents an hour too high—last year they thought 25 cents an hour was too much—they should name a figure. I think the House should hear them speak on this question.

I need only discuss the hours limitation for the employees of livestock and poultry packers by saying that the limitation proposed is so high that few, if any, employees engaged in the industry ever would work so long.

Before concluding, I think it would be helpful if I pointed out the generous exemptions now available in the Fair Labor Standards Act not only for agricultural workers but for those handling farm produce away from the farm.

As to the exemption for agriculture, I can do no better than to quote from a speech delivered on April 1 by the Wage and Hour Administrator:

> Here are some things which the wage and hour law does not do * * *:
> It does not regulate the working hours of the farmer's hired man.
>
> It does not specify the wages that must be paid to the farmer's hired man.
> It does not apply in any way to work done by a farmer on a farm, or to those working for the farmer on a farm. It does not apply to the farm wife's hired girl or to the work that farm children do on the farm for their own parents, or to the berry pickers who come in at harvesttime to work in the farmer's berry patch, or to the people he hires to help get in his hay, or to thresh his wheat on the farm.

Turning to some of the exemptions now provided by the act for those handling the farmer's produce after it leaves the farm, we find that the ginning and compressing of cotton, the processing of cottonseed, the processing of sugar beets and sugarcane into sugar or sirup are not regulated as to hours at all.

Fourteen weeks in the year canners and packers of perishable fresh fruits or vegetables can work their employees without any limitation as to hours, as also can handlers and slaughterers of poultry and livestock. Moreover, individuals employed in canning, packing, storing, ginning, handling, compressing, pasteurizing, preparing in their raw or natural state any agricultural or horticultural commodity within the area of production are exempt from both the minimum-wage and overtime provisions. For example, almost anybody handling cotton, except the textile manufacturer, would be entitled to some exemption.

I know the Administrator's definition of the term "area of production" has been subjected to criticism. I also know, however, that if there is ambiguity which the Administrator has not successfully resolved, the Barden bill would resolve it with complete disregard of the rights of the very employees who need most the protection of a floor under wages and a ceiling over hours—would resolve it in the very way the Congress repeatedly rejected when the Fair Labor Standards Act was being considered.

There is an old saying that you have to lay a ghost several times before it is dead. The Barden proposals are ghosts of amendments, repeatedly introduced during the debate on the Fair Labor Standards Act and repeatedly rejected by Congress. I am confident that Congress will not now instill the breath of life into them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to discuss procedure under the rule only at this time and not the merits of the proposed bills. My language may seem a little technical. I was not on the Rules Committee when this rule was reported out. Had I been, I would not have voted for the rule, because it is about as severe and drastic as a rule can be made. Let us see just what it does. First, it makes in order the Norton bill, H. R. 5435, which was reported favorably by the Committee on Labor and which is on the calendar. Second, it makes in order as a substitute for the Norton bill the Ramspeck bill, H. R. 7349, which was before the Labor Committee but not reported. Third, it makes in order as a substitute for the Ramspeck substitute the Barden bill, H. R. 7133, which was also before the Labor Committee but not reported. It waives all points of order as to the substitutes. It prevents a single amendment to either one of the substitutes, except that in line 20, on page 4 of the Barden bill, the House is generously permitted to offer an amendment to strike out the word "not" if it so desires. That is just about as tight as you can write a rule. Then the rule gives 3 hours of general debate, confined to the three bills.

Therefore, the way the vote will come up under this rule is this: The first section of the Norton bill will be read. Then a motion will be offered to strike out the first section of the Norton bill and insert the Ramspeck bill as a substitute for the Norton bill. Then a motion will be offered to substitute the Barden bill for the Ramspeck substitute. Then you will vote first on whether or not you will have the Barden bill in preference to the Ramspeck bill. If that carries, then the vote will be between the Barden and the Norton bills. If you accept the Barden or the Ramspeck bill you cannot offer any amendments to either, except to strike out the word "not" in the Barden bill. If you do not adopt the Ramspeck substitute or the Barden substitute, after voting, then the Norton bill is open for amendment under the general rules of the House. This is the only generous or usual thing about the rule.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MICHENER. I only have 5 minutes. I want to be courteous however.

Mr. COX. I am asking the chairman of the Rules Committee to yield to me to offer an amendment to the rule.

Mr. MICHENER. I appreciate the gentleman's good intentions, but I am talking about the rule that was reported out by the committee and the rule that we are now considering. So if you vote down the Barden substitute, and if you vote down the Ramspeck substitute, then you have the Norton bill, subject to amendment under the general rules of the House.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. My time is limited however.

Mr. HALLECK. Would it then be possible to offer any of the particular items contained in either the Barden bill or the Ramspeck bill as amendments to the Norton bill?

Mr. MICHENER. You may offer any amendments to the Norton bill that are germane to the Norton bill. That does not mean any amendments that are germane to the wage-and-hour law, but just such amendments as are germane to the Norton bill.

The real purpose of this rule is to place the House in a strait jacket where it can only vote for certain things decided upon by the Rules Committee. The freedom of action allowed under the general rules of the House is destroyed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] is going to ask the chairman to yield to him to offer an amendment to the rule. If his proposed amendment were in the rule now it would be a pretty good rule, because it would bring the Norton bill, the Ramspeck bill, and the Barden bill before the House and each would be subject to amendment by the House. I believe in open rules. I believe the Congress is the people's forum. I believe if the wage and hour law needs amending, the Congress can be trusted to do the job. It does not need a wet nurse—either organized labor, organized capital, or organized agriculture. I believe it is the duty of the Rules Committee to bring the matter before the House in such a way that open and fearless consideration may be had on the floor of the House. We want no strong-arm methods by any of these organizations on the one hand or by the Rules Committee on the other hand. [Applause.]

Possibly there are one or two precedents for a rule of this kind. I remember when different forms of bonus bills were up for consideration under a complex rule. I also remember when two or three methods of dealing with agriculture, including the McNary-Haugen bill, were up under a very intricate rule. This type of rule, however, is not advisable and should be avoided.

The Rules Committee unquestionably has the authority to report a rule making any bill which has been introduced into the House in order, even though the bill has not had committee consideration. Such a general policy, however, would lead to much trouble and eventual limitation of the powers now enjoyed by the Rules Committee. Inasmuch as these three bills all have to do with amending the Fair Labor Standards Act, there is much logic in the suggestion that the entire matter of amending this act be considered and disposed of at one time.

Those who are opposed to any amendments to the act of course will vote against this rule.

Those who favor limiting the amendments to the formula provided in any one of these three bills will favor the rule because a vote can be had between the bills.

Those who are opposed to closed or "gag" rules in general will vote against this rule, unless their belief in the necessity for the amendments outweighs their prejudice against "gag" rules.

It can best be understood how drastic the "gag" imposed in this rule is when I tell you that under the rule the House may engage in debate, limited to the subject matter of the three bills, for a period of 3 hours, and then be permitted to vote "yes" or "no" on two of the bills without being permitted to offer any amendments, except the elimination of the word "not" to which I have referred. Some of us wonder what good it does to talk about legislation if a "gag" rule prevents the House from doing anything about it. There is too much talk here and too little action.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], a member of the Rules Committee, now realizes the unreasonableness of this proposed rule and will offer an amendment to liberalize it and permit the consideration of all three bills, with power to amend either bill at the pleasure of the House, and under the general rules of the House. If so amended, this will be an open rule.

Those who are opposed to any amendments to the wage-hour law will, of course, oppose this amendment and I feel sure that the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], will not yield to the gentleman from Georgia for the purpose of offering this liberalizing amendment.

In these circumstances, there is just one thing that the House can do, and that is to vote down the previous question, when the chairman of the committee makes the motion. If this is done, then the House can vote on whether or not it wants to proceed under this gag rule or under the usual open rule. I hope that the previous question will be voted down, that the liberalizing amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], will be adopted, and that the rule, if so amended, will pass.

I shall vote for the rule if it is so amended. I shall vote against the gag rule in its present form.

This is not a partisan matter. Neither the Republicans nor the Democratic leadership is treating it as such. If this wage-hour law needs amending, then the Congress should have the courage to make the amendments. On the other hand—after debate and consideration—if the Congress feels there should be no amendment, then the majority of the Congress can settle that question also. Nothing but good can come out of open, candid, fearless, and conscientious consideration of this whole problem, and it seems to me that we should approach the matter in that spirit.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this is a somewhat unusual situation. It grew out of very unusual circumstances.

We passed the Fair Labor Standards Act. We placed certain exemptions in that act, principally relative to agriculture. The Administrator simply wiped them out of existence. He limited them to a 10-mile circle, with 7 employees, in a town of not less than 2,500 population, and so forth. Agriculture became alarmed and justly so. This matter was taken up by the Labor Committee. It was discussed day after day. We had hearings month after month before the Labor Committee. The bill H. R. 5435 was reported out of the committee and I voted to report it favorably. It was reported by the Labor Committee by a vote of 16 to 2. The chairman of that committee was instructed to use all parliamentary means and methods provided by the rules of the House for bringing it before the House for consideration. There that bill remained and nothing was done and there was a very clear intention that nothing would be done.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with 32,000,000 agricultural people in America, approximately one-fourth of the population of this Nation, when they send up a cry it should be heard. This is the body to hear this cry.

Then I set about to do everything in my power to bring to this floor a piece of legislation to give to the House the right to say what exemptions it intended agriculture should have, in clear and unmistakable terms. I applied for a hearing before the Rules Committee and after some delay they granted me a hearing.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Just briefly.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman does not want the House to understand that his bill was considered by the Labor Committee, of course?

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Considered? Yes. We discussed it time and time again in the committee.

Mrs. NORTON. Discussed certain amendments, but we never discussed the gentleman's bill.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I remember very distinctly the last discussion we had was over in the meeting that we had in this room over here when I tried to get a vote on the bill to get it out. I believe your minutes will disclose that, Madam.

I went before the Rules Committee.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. In just a moment. I only have a short time. We will hear from Philadelphia later. [Laughter.]

I went before the Rules Committee. The Rules Committee would not have brought out this bill had there not been facts and circumstances presented to them that made it absolutely necessary in their minds. The evidence was overwhelming. Practically every farm organization in the United States has endorsed it.

Mr. Andrews appeared before the Rules Committee. The Administrator, his chief counsel, and his assistants were there, yet the committee took this action. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, the Labor Committee had long and difficult sessions, out of which grew the so-called Norton bill. Neither the Barden bill nor the Ramspeck bill were ever seriously considered by the committee. No testimony was taken, no testimony is available to the Members of the House. We have never had Colonel Fleming, the new Administrator, before the committee, nor have we had Secretary Wallace before us.

To bring in two bills which the legislative committee had never considered or reported and to ask the House in a limited time and with limited evidence to act on a matter of this importance seems to me to be the wrong way to legislate.

I favor the Norton bill. I would like an opportunity to express myself on it. I do not favor this rule, even if it be amended as suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, and I intend to vote against the rule. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], chairman of the Committee on Labor.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the membership of the House to vote down this rule. It is a complete example of dictatorship, and I will give you my reasons for so stating.

First, it is not orderly procedure, and every standing committee of the House is in danger if this precedent is established today.

The Rules Committee, in its desire to grant a rule to the Barden bill, a bill never considered by the Labor Committee—and I say that most emphatically—have used H. R. 5435 as a vehicle to bring to the House H. R. 7133, a bill claiming to benefit agriculture. What a misnomer! It certainly will never help agriculture; and on this I quote the Secretary of Agriculture, who I believe to be the farmers' greatest friend.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I cannot yield at the moment. If I have time I shall yield. I have only 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill definitely will not benefit agriculture.

Second, it is a smoke screen for organizations claiming to represent the farmer but who in reality represent processors, canners, packers, ice cream manufacturers, warehousemen, terminal operators, and in fact every industry handling agricultural commodities. But this is done in the name of the farmer.

The bill is a cheat, and would take out from under the coverage of the wage and hour law about 2,000,000 of the lowest paid workers, men and women, your constituents and mine, employed in industry. They would be taken from under the coverage of the wage and hour law without in any way benefiting the farmer.

Third, it is time the membership of the House realized that the Committee on Rules is under the domination of men who come from districts where poor people are not allowed to vote because they are unable to pay a poll tax, [applause] and that the power the Rules Committee has assumed would stifle labor legislation and place the workers of this country entirely at their mercy.

Fourth, if the House believes in the domination of the Committee on Rules and its control of legislation, then vote for this rule. If, on the other hand, the membership believes in committee responsibility and freedom from sectional control, vote down the rule. I say to my colleagues that my responsibility is to myself and to the workers of America from every section of the country, and this responsibility I intend to discharge to the best of my ability.

If you believe in fair play and justice to the least and most unimportant of God's creatures, you should defeat this rule and serve notice on the Committee on Rules that it cannot constitute itself judge and jury of well-thought-out legislation reported from the other committees of the House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, by agreement with the chairman of the Committee on Rules and others, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my statement I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Rules if he proposes to offer the amendment to the rule which his Democratic colleagues have requested of him, or if he will yield to me or some other member of the committee to offer the amendment. I ask for an answer to the question now.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this rule was prepared by the Parliamentarian under the direction of the gentleman from Georgia and these gentlemen who have signed this petition. They have had ample opportunity to notify me that they desired a change. It is not of my making, it is of the gentleman's own making. At this late hour I cannot yield and will not yield for any amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, it is a funny bird that befouls its own nest. The chairman of the Committee on Rules directed by his committee to report this rule, takes the time allowed for debate and devotes it to an effort to defeat its passage by the House. This, of course, is his right. The gentleman says he seeks to be fair. I ask if taking advantage of his chairmanship to violate the instructions of his committee is fairness?

Mr. Speaker, I ask the question: When would this House ever have opportunity to consider amendments to the wage and hour law if it had to wait for voluntary action on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Rules?

Unfortunately, the chairman finds himself in the iron grip of an influence determined to sell the American people into deeper bondage under a political hierarchy of so-called industrial workers dominated by the chairman of the C. I. O.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I had the opportunity to examine a cooked-up piece of propaganda broadcast over the radio by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, which was little better than boyish chatter. The same gentlemen belong to the group who, despite the Supreme Court of the United States, have finally contrived to regiment, direct, and control the essential industries of the Nation under laws, codes, regulations, bureaus, and bureaucratic agents so numerous and so inquisitorial as to bring industry to the verge of collapse. Immature, impractical, and inexperienced bureaucratic attorneys with powers of inquisitors sit as judge, jury, and executioner over the operation and conduct of the Nation's essential industries.

Mr. Speaker, under the administration of the Secretary of Agriculture, that great Department has been used to create a chasm of despair upon the brink of which 6,000,000 American farmers stand surrounded by their impoverished families—a total of 33,000,000 American men, women, and children, a third of the Nation—despoiled of the ownership of their farms and homes, dispossessed of their soil, victims of accumulated debt, burdened with oppressive taxes, wards of the Government, objects of Federal ghouls, producers of wealth on relief, and when we come before this House with a bill, which was largely put together by the agricultural people of America, we are met with the objection that we are undertaking to further penalize the people of this country who receive the lowest wages.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in June 1938 Congress had reason to be doubtful about the future. Abrupt stoppage of Government spending had caused only a few months previously the sharpest drop in prices and production that the country had experienced in these difficult times.

By June 1938 things seemed to be improving slightly. Congress was able to consider the future with some hope, but not with confidence.

In this spirit of hope this House passed the conference report on the Fair Labor Standards Act, better known as the wage and hour law, on June 15, 1938, by a vote of 291 to 89. Despite the doubtful times, it was the evident determination of this body not to sell American labor short.

As I said, Congress had little reason in June 1938 to read the future with confidence. Well, here we are in that future. Let us take a look at what has happened. In June 1938 the New York Times average of prices on the New York Stock Exchange stood at 91.33. Yesterday it was 108.66.

In June 1938 the Federal Reserve Board's index of production stood at 77. This year, the last one reported stood at 103.

In June 1938 the Bureau of Labor Statistics index of factory pay rolls stood at 84.3. Again, today the latest one available is 101.4.

The 1940 crop of perishable fruits and vegetables—commodities about which we are going to hear a lot—have not all been planted yet. However, last summer their price was 10 percent better than in the summer of 1938 when we passed the wage and hour bill.

In June 1938 cotton sold at 8.1 cents per pound. Yesterday May cotton closed at 10.86 cents a pound.

In June 1938 corn sold at 52.3 cents a bushel. Yesterday May corn closed at 64.75 cents a bushel.

On June 15, 1938, wheat sold at 69.7 cents a bushel in the Chicago pit. Yesterday May wheat closed at $1.10.

And here we are debating whether 30 cents an hour can be paid.

The wage and hour bill provided for a 25-cents-an-hour minimum wage for the first year, a 30-cents-an-hour minimum wage for the second year. The goal of the act is a 40-cents-an-hour minimum wage and a 40-hour week. This is written into the statute and goes into effect in the fall of 1945.

In the meantime committees equally representative of the public, the employers, and the employees were to investigate the economy of industries and recommend the highest minimum-wage rate up to 40 cents an hour that would not cause substantial curtailment of employment.

Curtailment of employment—that was the one thing in the doubtful summer of 1938 that Congress feared in applying a minimum-wage rate to the Nation. If it had been sure that economic conditions were going to improve, that there would be no curtailment of employment, it would have legislated a 40-cent minimum wage to go into effect directly. At that time it seemed that almost everybody was for increasing the wage of the lowest-paid workers. The only thing we feared was causing unemployment. At that time no one seemed to think of 40 cents an hour, $16 a week, as a high wage, even for a minimum. And, for the life of me, I cannot see why they should think it a high wage today. But here we are, debating a bill—the Barden bill—which would take the 30-cent minimum wage away from hundreds of thousands of workers.

It seems incredible that in this day of rising prices and rising cost of living and increasing employment, here on the eve of an election, that Congress should seriously consider legislating wage reductions.

You may not approve of the way the Wage and Hour Division handled the "buck" you passed them. The "buck" was the problem of determining how far into rural economy the 30-cent minimum wage should be extended.

Administrator Andrews finally held that establishments so small that they drew their products from no further than a 10-mile radius, and located in communities so small that the census did not rate them over 2,500 population, were the ones to be exempt from 30-cents-an-hour payments. By these criteria they were "within the area of production."

There seems to be some well-founded protest on the working of this definition. There are reports of agricultural pockets—of farms which cannot sell their products to the canneries which used to handle them because these farms are more than 10 miles away.

The present Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, Col. Philip B. Fleming, of the United States Army Engineer Corps, does not seem to be satisfied with this definition. Without waiting for formal petitions, as provided for in wage and hour regulations, he has called three public hearings to reexamine packing of citrus fruits, packing of fruits and vegetables, and canning of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Ordinarily he would be given an opportunity to work this out, but the present temper of this House seems to be one of taking drastic action. It seems to be a mood of taking striking positions—even a willingness to repudiate the minimum-wage principle. It would impair the record of Congress' achievements, a record in which we all have a personal stake, a record to which Members on both sides of the aisle have contributed, a record which many of us are proud and confident to take before the people.

I have said these amendments amount to legislated wage reductions. Not wages that will be paid or might be paid, but wages that have been paid. Whether or not you like the Division's definition, it did result in increasing the hourly wage rate and the total wages paid to more than 200,000 first processors of agricultural commodities off the farm. There has been some difficulty in obtaining compliance with this law in the woods from the small sawmills, a difficulty which the Barden amendments would solve by removing the law. But there has been no difficulty; in fact there has been general compliance in established factory operations, and that includes canning factories.

A survey of canning-factory wages showed that in Wisconsin, Indiana, New York, and right here in nearby Maryland, considerable percentages of the employees earned less than 25 cents an hour in the summer of 1938. That was before the act went into effect. Last summer, the summer of 1939, these percentages of workers making less than 25 cents an hour had almost disappeared. This summer the 30-cent minimum wage will apply. The small percentages under the minimum probably do not represent violation of the law. They represent the very small canneries which qualify as being within the area of production, as defined by the Administrator.

There is no great economical difficulty about applying a minimum wage to canning factories and packing establishments. The cost of labor is very low compared with the price of the product. A minimum wage means a cost increase of only a fraction of a cent on a bushel or a cent or so on a case of 24 cans. The public is used to changes in the prices of these products.

For instance, there was no great economic difficulty about applying the California State minimum wage rate to packing and canning. The California minimum rate for canneries and packing houses is not 30 cents, the rate we are discussing here, it is 33½ cents. Yet the California products traveled all across the country and before the Federal wage and hour law went into effect, successfully competed with the products of canneries paying 10 and 15 cents an hour.

When this matter was before Congress last year there were a lot of editorials about a dime-an-hour bloc. The way those supporting these amendments resented this appellation is understandable, but I do not see how they can escape it. Ten cents an hour in canneries occurs all over the country. The State of Arkansas legislated a 15-cents-an-hour minimum wage to end this in the Ozarks.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] addressed the House Tuesday on his amendments. He said that they would not in any way affect the coal mines, and I am sure they will not. I checked on that and I find the lowest paid workers in the coal mine contracts today are the greasers in the Alabama mines. They get $4 for a 7-hour day. That is about 57 cents an hour. I am sure they will be glad to hear that the 30-cent minimum wage still applies to them.

That is the point of the opposition to these Barden amendments. A minimum wage just does not mean anything unless it increases the rate paid to the lowest paid workers. In the application of the 30-cents-an-hour minimum wage to the national economy, these canning factory and packing house workers employ the largest affected group.

Let us use round figures. The number getting less than 30 cents an hour in the manufacture of cotton cloth came to about 50,000, the number getting less than 30 cents an hour in the manufacture of clothes to about 100,000, the number getting less than 30 cents an hour in sawmills to about 100,000, and the number getting less than 30 cents an hour in canning factories, fruit and vegetable plants come to about 140,000.

Now, if these Barden amendments become the law, what are we going to tell the sawmill industry? They will come back here with a very reasonable story that their larger units cannot continue in competition with the units employing less than 15 men, which the Barden bill would exempt from the necessity of paying minimum wages. They will say that they are faced with the alternatives of splitting up into small units or going out of business. And how are we going to deny them their exemption if we make a precedent here that a minimum wage should not apply where wages are too low?

If we start exempting low-wage industries we will soon have a minimum-wage law that will not mean anything. It will apply only to industries that pay at least 60 cents an hour. The organization that is most interested in protecting the income of the farmer is the United States Department of Agriculture. And here is what Secretary Wallace has to say about canning and packing establishments:

> Workers in such industries are employed under conditions that approximate those of factory employment. Their numbers, together with their irregular employment and frequently insecure economic status, render them peculiarly vulnerable to the dangers which it is the purpose of the Fair Labor Standards Act to alleviate. There can be no question but that they are entitled to the same protection under existing legislation as their fellow workers in factory, mill, and mine.

I hope a great many Members of this House heard the Secretary's radio talk on the wage and hour law Monday night. One thing he said interested me greatly. I myself had not realized the role that Representatives of urban districts in this body have played in helping agriculture. Secretary Wallace said:

> Recent legislation for the protection of farmers could not have been enacted had not congressional Representatives of city workers joined in supporting them. For example, 63 percent of city Representatives voted for the original A. A. A. legislation in 1933. Sixty-three percent of them voted for the revised A. A. A. program in 1938.

The Secretary added:

> I regret to say that the Congressmen for the rural areas seem less disposed to support measures for industrial workers.

He then pointed out that only 39 percent of the rural Congressmen had voted for the wage and hour law.

All I have to say to that is that the liberal, progressive Members from the urban districts will always be ready to support legislation aiding rural economy. And that in defense of the minimum-wage principle, we now need the votes of the liberal, progressive Members from the rural areas.

The Barden amendments would put an end to a successful application of the minimum-wage principle. In canning and packing establishments the minimum wage was being paid and no curtailment of employment resulted. Why, right in the old North State—I refer to the native State of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN]—the State labor department last fall, after the change in the minimum rate on October 24, had to send out a call for tobacco strippers at 30 cents an hour. In spite of the fact that this work previously had been done for 10 and 15 cents an hour, there was a labor shortage at the higher rate.

To put it in another way, the 30 cents an hour had doubled the tobacco strippers' earnings from about $7.50 a week to $15 a week. This doubling of that seasonal pay roll must have been favorably felt by the stores in certain sections of North Carolina. And where did the money come from? It came out of the tobacco industry, one of the largest and most prosperous industries in America.

Now these canning-factory workers, mostly women, who for the first time made at least 25 cents an hour in the summer of 1939, certainly knew the reason why. It was the Federal wage and hour law. The word went right down the endless belts carrying the beans for stringing and the endless chains carrying the cans to the end girl who puts on the labels.

"The new law," they said, "entitles us to at least 25 cents an hour and next summer we are to get 30 cents an hour."

They did not know the Barden amendments. They did not know about the wage-hour bill until they were surprised by the 25-cent guarantee. But they know about it now. Imagine the resentment when they are informed that Congress passed a new law—the Barden law—and changed all that.

I am afraid that some of my good friends who seem to be inclined to vote for this measure are going to encounter an unfortunate reaction among the women in their constituencies. To please six or seven canning-factory owners, they are going to be criticized by hundreds and hundreds of women. Women have a way of making their resentment felt through a community. The word that Congress has reduced wages in the canning factories will quickly spread through nonpolitical groups—the Parent-Teachers Association, the Epworth League, the W. C. T. U., and the women churchgoers in general.

These Barden amendments are no string of firecrackers to have a lot of fun with in the celebration of independence. They amount to a slow fuze leading to a lot of dynamite.

This House cannot legislate wage reductions and feel very proud of it. Especially not in times of rising prices like the present. The repudiation of the principle of the minimum wage, if we repudiate it in this instance, will come back to plague us again and again, as other groups of employers in low-wage industries—in all fairness, I must say—will come to us and ask that they too be exempted from the necessity of paying 30 cents an hour, $2.40 for an 8-hour day, $12 a week for a 40-hour week.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, the Wage and Hour Act has been in effect since October 24, 1938. It does not propose to fix all wages, but only a minimum-wage floor slightly above a starvation level. There is no use in having a minimum-wage law unless it is made to apply to low-paid industrial workers; that is, the workers who need protection. This act would become a mere sham or a fraud if it covered only those employees who already received more than the wage rates prescribed by the act, such as is true in many industries. The wage rates are extremely low—30 cents an hour unless an industry committee finds that it can pay a higher rate, but in no case can the higher rate be more than 40 cents an hour.

A 30-cent wage rate is a very meager wage for a country such as the United States, which boasts the highest level of living in the world. To admit that there are numerous industries in this country that cannot pay this meager wage is a sad commentary upon our standard of living.

Attempts are being made to exempt more than a million of the lowest-paid workers from the minimum-wage standards and more than a million and a half from the maximum-hour provisions. These figures represent human beings who stoop and sweat to earn a living for themselves, their wives, and their families.

All employees involved in the proposed exemptions to the Wage and Hour Act are engaged in industrial labor. In no sense can they be called agricultural workers. The act exempts every employee on a farm or working off the farm if employed by a farmer.

It would be impossible to solve the farm problem by repealing the Wages and Hour Act. If we really want to do something for the farmer, we should preserve the American market and let the farmer run his own business.

What the Wage and Hour Act needs is a chance to prove itself. It has been hamstrung from the beginning because of inadequate funds for enforcement in the administration.

It is not my desire to stir up class hatred nor foment unrest between the worker and his employer. We have all witnessed too much of this in the past. The average employer is not a Tory, and his employee is not a radical. Both are entitled to prosper. The wage-hour law will work no hardships, with but few exceptions, to the employer. In this connection, may I say that I am ready to make some concessions as to hours and wages to those industries that have thoroughly demonstrated that they cannot immediately comply with the provisions of the law? The small telephone exchange is the most outstanding example.

Indiana canners of fruits and vegetables would be placed at a serious disadvantage with respect to their competitors in Maryland, Virginia, and other States if the Barden bill should pass, as the canning industry in these States had a considerably lower wage scale prior to the Fair Labor Standards Act than prevailed in Indiana. It is to be expected that these substandard wage levels which prevailed prior to the act will be reestablished should this bill, granting complete exemption from the act's wage standards, become law.

Examples: Indiana canned tomatoes compete for a market with tomatoes canned in Maryland, Virginia, Texas, and other States. Indiana cannery workers averaged more than 29 cents an hour in earnings in 1938 prior to the effective date of the act, October 24, 1938, as compared with 23 cents in Maryland, 17 cents in Virginia in 1939, and 20 cents in Texas in 1939. More than 92 percent of the Maryland tomato-cannery workers earned less than 30 cents an hour in 1938, as compared with 45 percent in Indiana.

Corn and peas canned in Indiana compete with canned corn and peas from Maryland. Corn-cannery workers earned an average of 29 cents an hour in Indiana in 1938, as compared with about 25 cents in Maryland. Pea-cannery workers averaged more than 32 cents an hour in Indiana and less than 26 cents in Maryland. Eighty-six percent of the Maryland pea-cannery workers earned less than 30 cents, as compared with 40 percent of the Indiana employees.

In 1939 workers in plants canning lima beans earned an average of 31 cents in Indiana, as compared with less than 25 cents in Maryland and less than 20 cents in Virginia.

More than 30,000 persons are employed in the canning industry in Indiana. Additional thousands, most of whom would be affected by the Barden bill exemptions, are employed in establishments handling livestock, poultry, and other farm products.

While the act has helped the Indiana employer in protecting him from low-wage competitors in other States, it has also helped many low-paid employees in Indiana.

Data from the women's bureau survey covering 61 Indiana canneries show that, whereas before the act nearly 14 percent of the workers received less than 25 cents an hour, in 1939, after the 25-cent hourly minimum wage became applicable, less than 5 percent of the workers in these same plants earned less than 25 cents.

The leaders of the Republican Party have been building up labor legislation for many years and have spoken fearlessly, frankly, on the subject of decent wages for the workers of this country.

Never let it be said that the party which rose to power on the slogan of the "full dinner pail" advocated or voted for amendments that would permit American wage earners to be paid less than a living wage. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY].

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the chairman of the Committee on Rules for this opportunity to discuss the pending rule. Unfortunately, we have but 1 hour to be divided among the entire membership, in which to discuss the most unusual rule reported to this House in my experience. This rule is so involved it would require four Philadelphia lawyers to explain its provisions. If adopted, this rule will make in order consideration of amendments to the Wage and Hour Act. At this time I am opposed to any change in the Wage and Hour Act, and I am sure, in so doing, that I am voicing the sentiments of every Democrat in this House from my State. In my opinion, we have not given this legislation a fair chance. The present act became law 2 years ago, and certainly when one considers all that had to be done to set up machinery necessary throughout the length and breadth of this land to carry out the requirements of the law, as well as to contend with the aggressive opposition of many employers who had been taking advantage of their employees by compelling them to work long hours for small wages, you will readily understand how difficult has been the task.

Mr. Speaker, as a Democrat, I am sorry that the discussion on this rule developed into a family fight. This rule is here because the Republicans joined with some of the Democrats on the Committee on Rules and succeeded in overriding the chairman. However, I feel sure that after the smoke of battle subsides, those of us who have always worked for peace and harmony within the party ranks will be able to bring about a reconciliation with our separated Democratic brethren. Certainly, the Republicans are delighted to see a split in our ranks, especially that group who will take advantage of the situation to drive holes into the present Wage and Hour Act.

I sincerely hope that we Democrats will submerge all of our present differences and join in the movement for the constant improvement of labor conditions, rather than contribute in any way to the downfall of this progressive legislation.

I regret that my friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] felt compelled to inject a sectional issue into the debate. This sectional issue has no place in a fair, honest discussion of the issues involved any more than race or creed. The sole issue is—what is best for the working men and women of this country.

Since I entered legislative life back in 1924, I have always heard the plight of the farmer emphasized, both in our State capitol as well as here in Washington. Throughout the years, if I am to believe all that has been uttered in this House by Representatives from the rural areas, the farmer no longer exists. His alleged condition would have caused his death years ago.

It is a bit disheartening to listen to the arguments that are being advanced on behalf of this rule, especially those arguments that have been directed at the Representatives from the metropolitan areas.

The Democrats from my State have voted for every single measure which sought to improve the conditions of the farmer and the workers on the farm. We have always given our support willingly and we propose to continue to help the farmer in every possible way.

I intend to vote against every single proposal to change the Wage and Hour Act or any of the other legislation which we have recently passed to improve the working conditions, and in that way raise the standard of living. I can assure you that every Democrat in the New York State delegation will stand solidly behind me in my fight to maintain the present act in its entirety because we believe that the pending bill is the opening wedge in a carefully conceived campaign to destroy the entire structure. I sincerely ask every Member of this House to give the most serious consideration and thought to the pending rule, and I am sure that as a result of mature deliberation I will have your support to defeat the pending rule and by defeating the rule we will show our loyalty not only to the workers of America but to the general welfare program of President Roosevelt. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen on the other side of the House, the two gentlemen who are members of the Rules Committee itself, have offered the most compelling reasons so far in this debate for voting down this unprecedented and unwarranted rule. I ask you not only in the name of the million or more workers in this country who so vitally require the protection of this act and who would lose its benefits under the Barden bill, but also the thousands of decent and fair employers who are complying with its terms, to vote down this rule. [Applause.]

The American people by a large preponderance have accepted this act. They believe it is a sound and necessary reform, and, in my judgment, they will resent its emasculation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, much has been said about the protection of the farmers under the Barden amendments to the act. This is the law:

Agriculture is exempted from the operation of this act. Agriculture includes farming in all its branches and among other things includes the cultivation and tillage of the soil, dairying, the production, cultivation, growing, and harvesting of any agricultural or horticultural commodities, including commodities defined as agricultural commodities in section 15 (g) of the Agricultural Marketing Act, the raising of livestock, bees, fur-bearing animals, or poultry, and any practices, including any forestry or lumbering operations, performed by a farmer or on a farm as an incident to or in conjunction with such farming operations. All these are exempted from the act now. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief statement?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not out of my time.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I just wanted to correct a statement that was made here.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It is somewhat startling to hear the chairman of the House Committee on Labor accuse the Committee on Rules of dictatorship, of refusing to permit the House to consider proposed legislation, when we recall that for something like 2 years or more we have not been able to get anything out of the Committee on Labor looking toward the amendment of this act or toward the amendment of the N. L. R. A.

In what I have to say now, because of the rules of the House, nothing that is said is to be presumed to refer to any Member of the House. There has been more bunk and nonsense connected with the opposition to the amendment of this legislation and to the amendment of the N. L. R. A. than we have heard in connection with any other legislation brought before the House.

Your attention is called to the noon edition of the Washington News. The very first editorial is captioned: "Is $12.60 too much?"

That is not the question at all. Then the editorial continues:

> Today, in the House of Representatives, an attempt will be made to remove the protection of the Wages and Hours Act from more than a million of these miserably paid workers—principally in such industries as canning, dairy products, logging, tobacco-stemming, pecan-shelling. Under the Barden amendments, workers in such industries would be thrown back upon their own devices—which means upon the mercies of employers who in many cases seem to regard $12.60 a week as a step toward communism.

Never was an editorial writer more mistaken as to the motives or the intentions of nine-tenths of those who are advocating amendments to the Wage and Hour Act.

The question of whether $12.60 a week is too much is not before the House. So far as I know, and I think I know the sentiment of the Members of the House, not one single Member advocates a reduction in the minimum hourly wage.

The question is whether or not you want to make the law fair. The law as it stands today permits a man who gets $1,000 a week, if he works one hour overtime, to charge time and a half for the overtime. Are you going to let it stand?

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No.

During the past few years the employers who are back of these amendments, the men who give the employment, who provide the jobs and pay the wages, have continued as the hours were lessened to pay the same weekly wage scale, and so have paid an increase of as much as 20 percent.

As an illustration—when men who were working 48 hours were, under the law, permitted to work but 44, in many an industry in Michigan no reduction was made in the weekly wage. When the number of hours which a man might work was reduced to 42 from 44, the weekly wage was not reduced. Again, when the number of hours was reduced to 40 per week, no reduction in the weekly wage was made.

The result was a substantial increase in wages for the number of hours worked; and, as an employer can only pay wages out of the sale of his product and as a reduction of the hours worked is inevitably reflected in the amount of the finished product produced, the resultant loss was borne by the employer; and today many an employer is finding it almost impossible to continue to pay the old wage scale. If the process continues, the result will be that in many an industry the employee will be placed upon an hourly, rather than upon a weekly, basis.

There are some who are opposed to any amendment to the law at all. Some few labor leaders who hold office are opposed to any amendments. Some others, larger in number, labor organizers, oppose any amendments. A still greater number, labor racketeers, like Scalise and Bioff, oppose amendments to the law. They have a direct pecuniary interest in the dues they can collect from the workers.

They would do well to take to heart the moral pointed out in another editorial in the Washington News of this noon which states:

> Isn't Westbrook Pegler about the best friend labor has had since Samuel Gompers, Mother Jones, and Andy Furuseth? Labor with the small l.
> For Pegler is the one who dug up the story of Scalise—as he did that of Willie Bioff, now in a Chicago clink for a long-delayed retribution running back to an earlier enterprise in the prostitute business which preceded his entrance into the more lucrative occupation of working the workers.

Scalise, a so-called friend of labor and a union official, draws $25,000 a year out of the dues he collects from employees, and he now stands in danger of going to the penitentiary because of the money he has extorted, on the other hand, from employers.

Bioff, the convicted criminal, is another who loudly proclaims himself as a friend of labor; who damns and excoriates all who would amend the law. But, luckily for labor, he is now spending his time in a jail in the city of Chicago.

Many do not want to give us a chance to perfect the legislation. Always when we offer a perfecting amendment it is said we want to deprive labor of a just and equitable wage. We want to amend the law so as to permit those who give the employment, those who are trying to operate their factories, those who are carrying on the small businesses of all kinds all over the country, a chance to pay, as we pay in the North, more than the minimum wage, and we want to give a chance to the employees as well to work these extra hours if they so desire.

We would like to amend the law so that private industry can continue to give employment, for the Government has failed, in spite of the expenditure of billions of dollars, to meet that problem.

We want to be fair to labor—and by labor I mean the women and the men who do the work. I do not mean either the few labor officials, the greater number of union organizers or the still greater number of union racketeers, who fatten themselves upon what they are able to extort from the pay envelope of the workers. We want to give the employees a law which will enable them, in private industry, to earn a fair and a just wage, so that they will not be dependent, either upon a Government dole, W. P. A. or P. W. A. work, or upon the checks doled out under a farm program which does not work. That we can do only by adopting perfecting amendments to this law.

Those who have complained so bitterly about the rule will have opportunity to vote to make it an open rule and, if they are sincere in their criticism, they can by their action bring the whole matter to the floor for a full and free discussion. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Does the gentleman from Illinois yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I think this rule might well be defeated upon the straight issue of whether or not the House should approve the unusual action taken by the Rules Committee. Certainly in my 12 years as a Member of the House I have never seen a rule of this kind reported by the Rules Committee. The gentleman from New York referred to a rule a few years ago in relation to the bonus, but in that case the Ways and Means Committee voted to request the Rules Committee to report out a rule leaving the Patman bill in order as a substitute. That is an entirely different situation than that which confronts us today.

The action of the Rules Committee in the pending resolution is unwarranted; as a matter of fact, it is absolutely high-handed.

Of course, the Rules Committee has the power, if it wants to abuse its power, but, certainly, the House of Representatives never intended that the Rules Committee should take the arbitrary action that they have taken on this particular occasion [applause], where a bill has never been reported out of committee or where the committee has never asked the Rules Committee to make a bill in order, the Rules Committee itself takes action by bringing forth a rule of this kind.

My friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] said he appeared before the Rules Committee. Could you or I appear before the Rules Committee on some bill we have introduced that is pending today before some committee of the House and expect the Rules Committee to give us a rule? Have you ever done that? The man who has had the longest years of service in this body of any Member has never applied to the Rules Committee for a rule to bring up for consideration a bill that has not been reported out of committee.

Now, what does this Barden bill refer to? It refers to the lowest salaried employees of the country, men and women who are receiving from 4 to 10 cents an hour, men and women who are still receiving it in some of the factories where they are resisting the law. The Wage and Hour Division has instituted court proceedings against some of those companies, and upon the information I received only yesterday, some of these canning factories are still paying their help an average of 10 cents an hour.

The report of this resolution is an unwarranted exercise of power. It is an abuse of power by the Rules Committee, and this House should overwhelmingly convey to the Rules Committee that we vigorously disapprove and will not stand for such action on the part of the Rules Committee in the future. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX and Mr. HINSHAW rose.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. If the House were to vote down the previous question, would the rule then be subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the previous question is voted down, then the rule is open for amendment.

The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 134, noes 126.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 185, nays 189, answered "present" 2, not voting 54, as follows:

So the previous question was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Voorhis of California (for) with Mr. Chapman (against).
Mr. Murdock of Utah (for) with Mr. Terry (against).
Mr. Merritt (for) with Mr. Secrest (against).
Mr. Kirwan (for) with Mr. Gilchrist (against).
Mr. Hill (for) with Mr. Seccombe (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Cochran with Mr. Gifford.
Mr. Keller with Mr. Rich.
Mr. Claypool with Mr. Martin of Massachusetts.
Mr. Boren with Mr. Short.
Mr. Caldwell with Mr. Crowther.
Mr. Starnes of Alabama with Mr. Johnson of Indiana.

Mr. Sutphin wth Mr. Rogers of Oklahoma.
Mr. Taylor with Mr. Scrugham.
Mr. Sheridan with Mr. Whelchel.

Mr. HORTON and Mr. MURRAY changed their votes from "aye to "no."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. KELLER. Therefore I withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GIFFORD. I withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present."

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, just a few minutes before the yote was taken, my colleague from Mississippi, Mr. COLMER, who was on the floor at the time, was called to the hospital because of the serious illness of his wife. That is the reason he was not here to vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A recapitulation of the vote is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Chair. The Chair does not think there is such a difference in the vote, 185 ayes to 189 noes, that it justifies a recapitulation and a recapitulation of the vote is refused.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman desires to offer an amendment, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], or if the gentleman from New York does not desire recognition, then the next ranking member of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. Does the gentleman from New York desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH], a member of the Labor Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is not a member of the Rules Committee. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: Page 2, line 4, after the period, strike out all language down to the end of line 7.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the pending resolution has been attacked upon the ground that it sets up a closed rule, insofar as the consideration of H. R. 7133 and H. R. 7349 are concerned. These are the two bills that have been referred to as the Ramspeck and Barden bills. I am not sensitive to the criticism to which the Committee on Rules has been subjected over the form of this rule. I do feel, however, that it is fair and proper to say to you that the rule was put in this form because of the interest of certain friends of labor, and of the farmer group, as represented by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN], author of one of the bills.

The amendment which I have offered seeks to do what the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules requested of the chairman of that committee that he do in the name and in behalf of the committee, which request the chairman of the Committee on Rules refused to honor.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman made reference to a request by the Democratic members of the committee.

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact the Republicans knew nothing about the whole show?

Mr. COX. Not a thing in the world, except that I did casually mention it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], but there was no effort made to get the Republican members of the committee to sign the request that was presented to the chairman of the Rules Committee. I did not do that for the reason that I did not want to subject the Republican members of the committee to any kind of criticism. I thought it fair to them that the whole matter rest upon action taken by the Democratic members of the committee.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Republican members of the Rules Committee did not join in reporting the rule?

Mr. COX. Oh, yes, yes; they joined in reporting the rule, but this had to do with a request made of the chairman of the committee that he offer an amendment to the rule. If the amendment that I have offered is adopted, then it will be in order, under the provisions of the rule, to move to substitute either the Ramspeck or the Barden bills, both of which will be subject to amendment. The rule so amended would, so far as I am able to understand, meet every objection that has been offered to the rule in this entire debate.

Now, certainly this question is important enough to receive the consideration of this body. The question comes to you here under a rule reported by the Rules Committee. I grant you that the committee was not petitioned or requested by the chairman of the Labor Committee to make such a rule as is offered.

You will recall the statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN]. He reminded you of the unusual circumstances that prevailed insofar as efforts to get modification of the wage and hour law were concerned. He is a member of the Labor Committee. He called attention to the fact that this measure had been tied up in the Labor Committee for many, many months. The committee had gone through the form—I think it fair to say that it was a mere form—of summoning before them a great number of people. Testimony was taken. The demand came to us from every part of the country that something be done, and yet no action whatever was taken or promised to be taken by the Labor Committee.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; with pleasure.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman knows that is absolutely untrue. The Labor Committee did act upon the bill and reported the bill to the House, but did not ask the Rules Committee for any rule.

Mr. COX. It is true that the Labor Committee did not ask for a rule. After this demand for change or amendment had grown to such large proportions, the Labor Committee did ultimately report a bill which is nothing more than a shadow of a real intent and purpose to amend the law to meet the needs of the people of this country who are being liquidated by its administration in the hands of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of Labor having it in charge. That is not any exaggeration when I say that small businesses are being liquidated.

I want to repeat that the Administrator, splendid gentleman though he may be, a man of the highest intelligence and understanding, yet he is a soldier. He knows how to take orders and he knows how to execute them.

I want to be fair with him. I believe if it were left to him to administer this law, to determine as to what represents justice and fair play, there would be little complaint coming from different parts of the country, but the Administrator is not a free man in the administration of this law. He is completely under the domination and under the control, so far as this law is concerned, of that same influence that stands back of the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to the rule.

Mr. COX. O Mr. Speaker, my friend has had his unhappy experience——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow the Chair to rule? The Chair thinks that the whole question is open, and that the gentleman from Georgia is proceeding in order.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. Of course, the gentleman will admit that under the rules of the House the author of this bill had a remedy if he thought the bill was not being considered by the Labor Committee. He could have placed a petition on the desk and if a majority of the Members of the House were in favor of consideration of that bill they would have signed the petition. That is the remedy he should have resorted to.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is a member of the Labor Committee——

Mr. HEALEY. No; I am not.

Mr. COX. Well, he was.

Mr. HEALEY. No; I never have been.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: When does he think the author of this bill might have hoped to have gotten action on the part of the Labor Committee of this House?

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Now, you have been criticizing the Rules Committee.

Mr. HEALEY. If the gentleman is directing his question to me, I think he might get it, and I think that is where he ought to get it, if you follow the time honored, orderly processes of this House, the democratic processes of this House, but I think your attitude is arbitrary and arrogant in bringing in a rule of this kind.

Mr. COX. What is happening now would never have taken place had the dean of this House, Chairman of the Rules Committee, evidenced a willingness to accept the recommendation of his colleagues, members of the Rules Committee.

To take you back to what happened, here is the extraordinary thing that took place: The Rules Committee reported out this rule by an overwhelming majority. The chairman finally was compelled—now, that is strong language, and I do not want to be offensive to him—but you want to remember that the normal procedure in reporting this rule to the House would have been for him to have come here and taken the floor in advocacy of the adoption of the rule; or, if he found himself in a position where such course would have been inconsistent with his views, he might have referred it to some other member of the committee who was prepared to support the rule. Now, when we get to the floor and the rule is criticized because it is closed insofar as two bills are concerned and on request of Democratic Members that amendment making it an open rule be offered, the Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], declines to offer the amendment or to yield to any other member of the Rules Committee to offer it. I know as well as you know that his refusal to offer such an amendment is responsible for his motion on the previous question being voted down. Do you doubt that? Now let us get back to this bill.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman, in his career in the House, recall a rule similar to this ever brought out by the Committee on Rules?

Mr. COX. I do not know whether it has happened in my experience, but I understand that there are precedents for it. I can say to the gentleman, however, that never before, in my experience, have I known of a committee behaving as regards an important question affecting the welfare of millions of people of this country as did the Committee on Labor. Now, it would be unbecoming of me to make any criticism of the Committee on Labor, and I do not want to do that.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I have great admiration for the chairman of that Committee on Labor, a very able Member of this body. She does not think that is true, but it does represent my best feelings.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman knows that on June 9 we tried to bring this bill up under a suspension of the rules. Does he not know that?

Mr. COX. Oh, yes; I know the gentlewoman wanted to bring it up under a suspension of the rules. But, mind you, her committee had given her instructions to employ all parliamentary means of bringing it to this House for consideration. If she had come before the Rules Committee I am sure there is not a doubt upon the mind of anybody but what the committee would have gladly opened the door to the House in order to have the benefit of your sound judgment upon the proposal that she was offering.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield to the good lady.

Mrs. NORTON. I do not think the gentleman has forgotten that the chairman of the Committee on Labor did come before the Rules Committee and ask for a closed rule, and it was denied.

Mr. COX. Oh, yes. Now, that is consistency, is it not? God bless you. [Laughter.] That is consistency. Here comes the Labor Committee en bloc with a few noble exceptions, distinguished exceptions—here comes the Labor Committee in the train of the chairman denouncing the pending rule because it is closed as to the Ramspeck and Barden bills. Nothing like it has ever been heard of, they say. And here she is now complaining of the Committee on Rules because it would not grant her a closed rule on one of her pet measures. [Laughter and applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. COX. I was taking the good lady at her word.

Mrs. NORTON. The chairman of the Committee on Labor felt that when the Rules Committee was so generous as to grant a closed rule on the other two bills certainly the Committee on Labor of the House had a perfect right to ask for a closed rule on its bill.

Mr. COX. All right, denounce the Rules Committee as you please—and maybe it is subject to the harshest condemnation—but I want to say one thing to you. I want to say it in behalf of the committee: That I believe that it is making a valuable contribution to constitutional government in America. [Applause.] Now, think of that as you please. The moon gazers and world heavers have not been able to push the committee about at will, and that is displeasing to some who want to reform this country all along the line.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. WOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman how long the Rules Committee held the wage-hour bill from this House.

Mr. COX. The unfortunate thing is that it was not able to hold it for always. [Laughter.] That is the bill which they said they brought into the House for the purpose of giving aid to the lowest-paid workers in this country. Well, they confessed here today to the fact that farm labor is not covered by the law. Think of it! A bill offered for the benefit of the lowest-paid laborer does not touch this class at all. There is not a man or a woman in America who has a thimble full of sense but who knows that the farm worker is the lowest-paid worker in America. Still nothing is done for him. What are you doing?

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. No; I do not yield to you. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. The gentleman ought to yield.

Mr. COX. What are you doing? Sit down.

Mr. HOOK. The gentleman will not yield?

Mr. COX. You know, these annoyances will arise. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I cannot yield.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. COX. No; I believe I would prefer not yielding.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order, that he is dealing in personalities, and not speaking to the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] will proceed in order.

(At this point certain words spoken in debate were, by unanimous consent of the House, withdrawn from the RECORD.)

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the words be taken down.

Mr. COX. Let me repeat them, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the words be taken down. This speaker is flagrantly violating the rules of the House.

Mr. COX. All right, let the House vote on it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan demands that the words be taken down. The gentleman from Georgia will suspend.

The Clerk will report the words the gentleman from Michigan demands be taken down.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Let me say for the benefit of the gentleman from Michigan if he would act upon my suggestion he might be very greatly benefited if he could find it possible to get himself out of John Lewis' vest pocket and stand on his own feet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule.

Many close questions come up with reference to statements made on the floor of the House when a demand is made that the words be taken down.

The Chair is of the opinion, applying this to himself as each Member has the right to apply it to himself, that for one Member to say that another Member is so under control of some individual that he is carried in that individual's vest pocket is a questioning of the gentleman's actions and motives which is not justified under the rules of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the Chair has sustained the point of order. I move that the gentleman from Georgia be permitted to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, there is no man in the world that could bow more willingly to any ruling made by you than myself, because there is no one in the world who could possibly have a more complete confidence in your fine sense of justice and your perfect mental balance than myself. However, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I was not permitted to complete my statement.

Now there are those of you who come here opposing any modification of this rule, and through Mr. Wallace you have sought to bring in the farmers and make it appear that they have endorsed through the performance of the Secretary over the radio a few evenings ago the position in opposition to change taken by the Committee on Labor and other Members of the Congress who oppose any sort of modification. This law is absolutely wrecking all the small businesses of this country. Let me say to you that you are fooling no one.

You set up this law for the purpose of putting small business out of business. The original measure is monopolistic. What you propose to do through the administration of the law—and you are doing it—is to wipe out small business everywhere. There is the determination expressed in the law and more pronouncedly in its administration by the soldier now in charge to keep rural sections forever rural and to confine industrial developments to those areas already highly industrialized.

Let me say to you Members who come from the West that your situation is no different from that of those of us who come from the South. You must find some means, you must find some way of securing employment for your increasing population. You must find some way of securing employment for the people on the farms who have been regulated out of their right to make a living for themselves and their families in the tilling of the soil.

Under the present regulations that are imposed you are not permitted to produce to the point of self-sufficiency, you are not permitted to produce in an unlimited manner. If you are ever in anywise to improve even in the direction of the great industrialized centers of this country, you must be able to develop some kind of industries in your sections. Under this law as it is written, and more certainly under the law as it is administered, no industry further than that already developed in your section of the country will ever be possible and that which you have will soon be put out of business.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOLAND. Do I correctly understand that the gentleman from Georgia is absolutely opposed to a uniform wage scale in this country?

Mr. COX. I will be candid with the gentleman, and I say in response to his question that I cannot conceive of a worse mistake that Congress has ever made than the thrusting of Federal power into the activities of the people as is done by this law. You seek to regiment, you seek to regulate a relationship that should have forever been kept free.

Mr. BOLAND. I want an answer to my question.

Mr. COX. If that is not an answer to the question, the gentleman is hard to satisfy.

Mr. BOLAND. I want to know this. Is the gentleman absolutely opposed to a uniform wage scale in this country? That is my question.

Mr. COX. Of course, I am opposed to any such law.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. I hope the gentleman is not contending that the development of industry in the sections he has referred to depends upon cheap wages and long hours.

Mr. COX. Well, I want to say to you that your sections of the country have certain advantages that make it impossible for us to compete with you on an absolutely even footing and you are undertaking to take away from us the natural advantages that we have.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. His section has the benefit of a preferential freight rate that prevents absolutely a uniform wage all over this country.

Mr. COX. Very true; and it was the businessmen of his section, and that section alone, that fell in behind the group supporting this law, and they are responsible for it being put upon this country. The papers of the gentleman's section even carried the declaration that it was important to the industrial East that the law be enacted because it would kill off competition from the South and the West.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. There are a great many imports coming in from foreign lands which are produced by workers who work long hours for wages which are way below the minimum set by the Fair Labor Standards Act. Would the gentleman support the following short amendment to this rule in order to protect the American agricultural and industrial workers from this unfair, cheap foreign-labor competition? I will read the proposed amendment:

It shall also be in order to consider amendments seeking to protect American industrial and agricultural workers who come under the jurisdiction of the Fair Labor Standards Act from the injurious effects of cheap foreign competition.

Mr. COX. The gentleman raises a question which I think properly belongs to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State, who is administering the foreign-trade agreements.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for my own information. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, we would then be ready to vote for the rule; and if we adopt the rule, then we will have what we think is an open rule?

Mr. COX. Absolutely open.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then, as I understand it, we will proceed to consider the Norton bill.

Mr. COX. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And after we have considered that, the first amendment to the Norton bill must be the Ramspeck bill?

Mr. COX. It is in order to substitute the Ramspeck bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. When we do that or when anybody does that, you say then it is an open rule, and then we can proceed to amend the Ramspeck bill, can we not?

Mr. COX. Very true.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then would it be in order, if the Barden bill were germane to the Ramspeck bill, to substitute the Barden bill for the Ramspeck bill?

Mr. COX. The Barden bill might be offered as an amendment to the Ramspeck bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Well, we will pass that; but I want to know this: After we have submitted the Ramspeck bill, and supposing we vote it down and then vote down the Barden bill, then, as I understand it, the Norton bill is back——

Mr. COX. Then you can return to the Norton bill and offer any amendments that you see fit.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That may be germane.

Mr. COX. That may be germane; yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has referred to the farmers in the course of his remarks——

Mr. COX. Yes; and I am not through with that subject. I want to return to it and I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I was going to call the gentleman's attention to this fact. The farm income for the year 1939, while this law was in operation, was larger than it was in 1938, prior to the operation of the act.

Mr. COX. Yes; in the chatter that went on between the Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division that observation was made.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That information likewise comes from Milo Perkins.

Mr. COX. Yes; I understand. He is probably supporting the position you take here, too.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it the purpose of the amendment the gentleman has offered to meet the objections of those who spoke prior to the vote on the adoption of the rule?

Mr. COX. Yes; that is correct.

Now, these city fellows, these big-town boys [laughter]——

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman, of course.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Georgia to move the previous question on the termination of his hour?

Mr. COX. When I shall have completed my statement, I shall be very glad to offer that motion.

Mr. McCORMACK. I did not say "very glad," but is it the gentleman's intention to do so?

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman an amendment he would like to offer? I am not particularly tight about the matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. I just wanted to find out, because if he did not intend to do so, then some of us might seek recognition.

Mr. COX. Yes. I was a member of the Rules Committee and wanted recognition in the consideration of the rule, but I could not get a minute's time from my chairman. I had to go to my friend the gentleman from New York and get time from him.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman cannot yield it.

Mr. COX. I want now to talk to my farmer friends for a few minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. In case the amendment is agreed to, then the Ramspeck bill may be offered as a substitute?

Mr. COX. I think that is correct.

Mr. WOOD. And then the amendment next in order would be the offer of the Barden bill as a substitute for the Ramspeck bill?

Mr. COX. That is correct.

Mr. WOOD. And after that amendments can be offered to the Norton bill?

Mr. COX. Oh, I suggest that the gentleman consult the Parliamentarian and let him untangle the puzzle if he is confused.

Mr. WOOD. I am asking whether that is the gentleman's interpretation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MAY. To suggest to the gentleman from Georgia, who is a member of the Rules Committee, in connection with the inquiry made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that I think the gentleman from Massachusetts had in mind the fact that any Member of the House may be recognized in this proceeding for 1 hour, and if so, we might be here for months.

Mr. COX. Well, that suits me.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Getting back to the question asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] as to the orderly procedure of the House to go through, I take it that when the gentleman from Georgia has consumed his hour he will then, of course, move the previous question, and, of course, if the previous question is then ordered, there will be a vote upon the adoption of his amendment, and on the rule, as amended, should his amendment prevail, which would throw the whole thing open to amendment after we get into the Committee of the Whole—that is, to germane amendments.

Mr. COX. That is correct.

Mr. WARREN. And that is the intention of the gentleman from Georgia, is it not—to move the previous question?

Mr. COX. That is my understanding, and I thank the gentleman for his clear-cut explanation, and I trust that is accepted by the membership of the House.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As I understand the rule, in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], at any time during the hour that the gentleman has on his motion he can yield to others?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Before the gentleman moves the previous question.

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman, in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], does not mean to state that after he has had a chance to offer his amendment and talk about it, he will then move the previous question and foreclose others who voted with him who want to talk and offer an amendment?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, speaking now to those who have never seen a farm except from a train or an automobile passing through the country, those who come here with a heart full of deep concern for the distressed people on the farms, I say to them that they are not fooling anybody; they are not fooling the farmer. You have been legislating for him for 150 years, and you have legislated him out of his right to make a living, and he knows it. The northern part of this country constitutes about one-third of the population and owns 95 percent of the total national wealth.

The South is made up of 40,000,000 of people, people who toil and do nothing else but toil. It has a third of the land area and owns 2½ percent of the national wealth, possessing at the same time a greater portion of the natural resources of the country. To you gentlemen who come from the West—and I happen to spot here and there one or two whose voices we have heard in support of the contention that we do nothing—it just happens that you possess a little less than 2½ percent of the total national wealth. The national income of the South is less than 10 percent and that of the West is about the same. Yet in land area the South and West represent far in excess of two-thirds of the entire country, and in population we represent a little in excess of two-thirds. That is what the city fellows who legislate for the farmers have done for the people in the South and the West.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman tell us a little bit about what percentage of the people in his section are really voters? Just what percentage of the people he represents? Let us hear something about that.

Mr. COX. Now, except for a disposition on the part of some to invoke the rules of the House against one wishing to express his mind, I probably would undertake the delicate operation of shaving this man from California. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes, of course.

Mr. KITCHENS. Does the gentleman feel that under the present law, in answer to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER], he will not be complaining about so many people coming to his State and it will not be necessary to appoint any more special committees of this House to investigate the migratory problem of his State?

Mr. COX. That is a very valuable contribution that the gentleman from Arkansas is making, and I hope the gentleman from California will profit by it.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; of course.

Mr. ARNOLD. I have the very highest regard for the gentleman from Georgia personally. I notice when he was talking about the gentleman from the city who during the past 150 years had beat the farmer down so low, he looked to the Democratic side of the House, and when he was talking about the West he looked to the Republican side. Then the gentleman started talking about the big cowboys from the city.

I want to know if during that 150 years most of the people who are here in the Congress were not on the Republican side from the big cities, and I would like to know now if the gentleman does not refer to Republicans as cowboys from the cities, the same as he does the Democrats? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Well, the gentleman can get his answer from the history books. I am not treating this subject as a political question. I do not care anything about the politics in it. I do not want it used either by the Democratic Party, or the Republican Party, to wreck and ruin America.

Now, let me say to you, you gentlemen who make automobiles, plow points, wheelbarrows, and hoes, you who pay your labor 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.50 per hour, you who now seek to use the wage-hour law to make more secure the advantage which you enjoy, we who represent the tillers of the soil are unwilling to let you speak for us. We have had too much of this already. Some of these advocates of reform, of great change, talk about industrial workers getting 10 cents an hour—some of them. My God, do you not know that the farmers of this country, or many of them, who are buyers of the things you make, in many instances get less than 10 cents per hour? You people from the rural sections, living in the small villages, will see on a train passing by a man with a lantern or a little flag about as big as your hand.

Did it ever occur to you that he gets more for a month's labor of short hours than a half dozen of your one-horse farmers get for an entire year's work? When these people that you are seeking to penalize, these people whose position you aggravate and make worse by this wage hour law, and its administration in the hands of a soldier, when they come to town to buy a plow point or buy your automobile, has it ever occurred to you that they are swapping from 10 to 15 hours of labor for 1 hour of the industrial worker? Has it ever occurred to you that that is the situation? You talk about what you want to do for the farmer. Well, God knows you have done enough already. If there is one prayer that I have to offer in deepest reverence it is that the farmers be spared of the care and tender solicitude of these big-town friends. [Applause.]

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. GEARHART. In the event your amendment is adopted, I was wondering what would be the effect on the rule which this resolution will put in order. If I may read a few words, I would like to have the gentleman's interpretation of them. Beginning at line 11, on page 1—

After the reading of the first section of such bill it shall be in order to move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as a substitute the text of the bill H. R. 7349, and all points of order against such substitute are hereby waived. It shall also be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the text of the bill H. R. 7133 as a substitute for the text of the substitute containing the language of the bill H. R. 7349.

This is the question I have in mind:

Will it be necessary to first adopt the Ramspeck bill as a substitute before a motion to substitute the Barden bill will be in order?

Mr. COX. I thought the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] made that clear. Will the gentleman not refer that to him for an answer, and let me complete my statement?

Mr. GEARHART. I do not think I am raising a question that has been answered. This resolution says in plain words that the Barden bill can be offered only as a substitute for the Ramspeck bill.

Mr. COX. That is very true.

Mr. GEARHART. That will mean that we will have to first adopt the Ramspeck bill before it will be in order to consider the Barden bill?

Mr. COX. That is a question that can be determined when the point of order is made.

Mr. Speaker, let me say to my friends that they have been very generous, and I appreciate it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman consider accepting an amendment to make the Norton bill only in order, with an open rule that any amendments may be offered? I think that would obviate the confusion of considering three bills at once.

Mr. COX. Let me say, in answer to the gentleman's question, that I hope this House will vote down the Norton bill, or at least that the House will substitute either the Ramspeck or the Barden bill, and then permit the offering of such amendments as may be desired. I say this in view of what has taken place. That is exactly what I think this House should do.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. As I understand it, the Ramspeck bill does not mention farmers. I would like to know how the Barden bill would help the farmers. Would the gentleman explain that briefly to us?

Mr. COX. I do not know that it would be of any help to the Barden bill, which is intended to help the farmer, to take the time to make an explanation to the gentleman. I do not mean to be disrespectful, but if there is anything with which I have little patience it is these big-town fellows who claim the right and the privilege of saying what is good for people who till the soil.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman did not answer my question.

Mr. COX. No. I say to the gentleman that I hope the House will not do that.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman let the House have a chance to vote on making the Norton bill in order?

Mr. COX. I am not in control of the House.

Mr. FERGUSON. Oh, yes; the gentleman is.

Mr. COX. I hope the House will not do it. I hope the House will adopt the amendment I have offered. It is not my amendment; it is an amendment which represents the views of eight members of the Rules Committee which I asked your chairman and my chairman to offer himself.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment and the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia moves the previous question on the amendment and on the resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. Do I understand that the gentleman from Georgia moves the previous question on his amendment and the resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, and so stated by the Chair.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COX: On page 2, line 4, after the period, strike out all down to the end of line 7.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Did I understand the Chair to say that the motion was on ordering the previous question on the amendment and the adoption of the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia moves the previous question on the amendment and on the resolution.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to have separate votes on the two propositions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion of the previous question cannot be divided.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Can a separate vote be had on the two propositions if the previous question is ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the previous question is ordered, the question will first recur on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia and then on the rule.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOOD. The vote will be on the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote now is on the previous question. If the previous question is ordered, the vote will then be on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia and then on the resolution, amended or not.

Mr. WOOD. There will be two separate votes, one on the amendment and one on the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the previous question be ordered?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH and Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 205, noes 50.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 167, noes 92.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the rule.

Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. SABATH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 233, nays 141, answered "present" 1, not voting 55, as follows:

Mr. Sheridan with Mr. Taylor.
Mr. Sutphin with Mr. Ryan.
Mr. Scrugham with Mr. Whelchel.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my vote of "no," and answer "present." I have a pair with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GIFFORD.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion by Mr. Cox, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet tomorrow at 11 o'clock, and that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in view of the ruling of the Speaker pro tempore, I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw certain remarks I made this afternoon to which objection was raised.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]?

There was no objection.

Messrs. CASEY of Massachusetts, THOMAS F. FORD, and WOODRUFF of Michigan were given permission to extend their own remorks in the RECORD.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include certain information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, is the Speaker pro tempore in position, or is he prepared, to state what business will be taken up next week?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would rather answer that question tomorrow.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, it has been decided that we will not sit Saturday. There are many Members who would like to make preparations to go home in view of the fact the House will not be in session on Saturday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may say that on Monday this bill will be taken up, if consideration is not completed tomorrow.

Mr. FISH. Can we have an understanding that the vote will be taken on the bill Monday in case we finish it tomorrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is all right with the Chair.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that if the consideration of the wage and hour bill is completed by tomorrow night the vote may be taken on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, may I ask what the rush is in the killing of the Wage and Hour Act?

Mr. FISH. There is no hurry.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is asking unanimous consent to put the final vote off. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it would seem hardly fair to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow, work all day tomorrow, finish the bill, and then put the vote off until some time next week. I do not believe that should be done, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may state a part of the program for next week. In case consideration of the wage and hour bill is completed on Monday, the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill will be taken up and disposed of on Tuesday. Further than that the Chair would like to have until tomorrow to make up the program for the remainder of next week.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech I made at the breaking of the ground for the first permanent building, the laboratory for photography, at Westover Field, Chicopee, Mass., on April 6, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Buffalo Evening News.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial appearing in today's news.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein correspondence with a resident of my county.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, and in both instances to include newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the New York Post of April 15.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a Supreme Court decision in the case of the so-called Little Steel against N. L. R. B.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS, Mr. GUYER of Kansas, and Mr. BUCKLEY of New York asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

WAGE AND HOUR ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks this afternoon I was interrupted by the gentlewoman from New Jersey while discussing the question of whether or not H. R. 7133 was before the Committee on Labor. My remark was that the bill was considered and discussed time and time again. The reply of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] was that the committee had discussed certain amendments, but that we never discussed my bill.

I desire at this time to report to the House that by reference to the minutes of the Committee on Labor it appears that on July 27, 1939, there was a vote taken on H. R. 7133, a roll-call vote, and the committee refused to report out H. R. 7133 by a vote of 10 to 6.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman says is very true, but I still insist the bill was never considered by the Labor Committee. The vote to which the gentleman refers is a vote that was taken across in the Appropriations Committee room when we were trying to decide on strategy, and I may say he forced this vote on the Labor Committee without the bill ever having been considered by the Labor Committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the lady said they were considering strategy. Is strategy a part of the work of the Labor Committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from New Jersey did not make any unanimous-consent request, therefore the gentleman from Michigan is out of order in reserving the right to object.

Mr. MICHENER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. The lady from New Jersey, interrupting the gentleman from North Carolina, who had time, stated that her committee did not consider this bill on its merits but that they were considering strategy. My parliamentary inquiry is this:

I understand the rules of the House obtain as the rules of the committee unless the committee has adopted rules inconsistent with the House rules. This being the case, has the committee authority to consider strategy and report to the House, for it is presumed to consider legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan and the present occupant of the chair have been here off and on for quite a while, and under the rules of the House strategy and strategic moves are indulged in very often.

Mr. MICHENER. By the leadership.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On both sides of the aisle.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, there is an intense interest in Congress and throughout the country in the proposal in the recent reorganization plan for a change in the present status of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board. I feel there is a growing sentiment against disturbing the present set-up. The Air Transport Association of America, an organization composed of practically all the scheduled air lines under the American flag everywhere, has definite views on this subject. I made inquiry of Colonel Gorrell, the president of this splendid association, and today have received his reply. I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, so it will be clearly understood that this group are firmly against any change at the present time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

AIR TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
Chicago, Ill., April 25, 1940.

The Honorable JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: In reply to your inquiry concerning the views of the air carriers who are members of the Air Transport Association of America respecting the proposed reorganization of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, I am authorized to state that the air-transport industry favors the continuation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority as an independent agency of Government.

In June of 1938 Congress created the Authority and made it an independent transportation agency similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Maritime Commission.

Since that time civil aeronautics has made a record unsurpassed in the history of the industry, either here or abroad.

At this stage in the development of aviation, and in the light of world conditions, the need for a fully independent Authority is even greater than it was in 1938.

No step should be taken which would materially alter the conditions under which the extraordinary advances of the last 2 years have been made and which would impair the power and position of the Authority in carrying forward the program which it has undertaken.

Civil aeronautics had been subjected to constant legislative and jurisdictional changes prior to 1938. It needs a period of stability.

Respectfully yours,

EDGAR S. GORRELL, President.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, and include therein certain newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON] before the State Democratic Organization.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made earlier in the afternoon on the Philippine travel-pay bill, and to include excerpts from the committee report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the other day I spoke of the great importance of our not allowing any foreign power to take over Greenland under the present circumstances until Denmark can take it back for herself. I want to remind the House that I have placed in the lobby two very fine maps which show Greenland's relation to Europe, Greenland's relation to the Western Hemisphere, and its great importance to us.

It is vital we should see that Greenland does not fall into the hands of any European power. You will see from the map its great significance, both as a naval base and as an air base.

The map also shows the Arctic Circle, and I want to call the attention of the House to four numbers of the National Geographic Magazine which describe Greenland in great detail. I have them here for all Members to see. I trust the Members will look at these maps and the magazines and will join with me in urging the administration to declare our interest in Greenland. To so declare our interest prevents any other government from taking possession of Greenland, an act which automatically forces us into difficulties with that government because of our responsibilities under the Monroe Doctrine. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FITZPATRICK, for 1 day, on account of attending a funeral in New York City.

To Mr. SANDAGER (at the request of Mr. RISK), for the remainder of the week, on account of critical illness of business associate.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (Rept. No. 2013), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 465

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 9195, a bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 4 hours, 1 hour to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Labor, 1 hour to be controlled by the ranking minority member of the Committee on Labor, and 2 hours to be controlled by the chairman of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Labor Relations Board, the bill shall be read, and after the reading of the first section of such bill it shall be in order to move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as a substitute the text of the bill H. R. 8813, and all points of order against such substitute are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill H. R. 9195 the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of discussion here this afternoon about the so-called Ramspeck bill amending the wage and hour law, and one gentleman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], made the absurd statement that the adoption of the Ramspeck bill would destroy the wage and hour law. If you will look in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 2260, you will find in parallel columns the Norton bill, the Ramspeck bill, and the Barden bill, and you will find that every section of the Ramspeck bill, except section 3, is in both the Barden bill and the Norton bill; the exception is an amendment dealing with a mining situation out in the West, which was placed in the bill at the request of some of the western Members of the House. So I am really mixed up in a fight here in which I am not very much concerned. The bill which I introduced was an effort made last summer to take out the sections of the Barden bill and the Norton bill that coincided and pass them and let the controversy remain over what was left. We did pass a Senate bill regarding small telephone exchanges last year, but the other noncontroversial amendments were not considered. I make this explanation so the RECORD will show the situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker pro tempore:

H. R. 7246. An act for the relief of Madeline Vera Buchholz;

H. R. 7406. An act granting the consent of Congress to the General State Authority, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and/or the Pennsylvania Bridge and Tunnel Commission, either singly or jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near the city of Middletown, Pa.;

H. R. 7407. An act granting the consent of Congress to the General State Authority, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and/or the Pennsylvania Bridge and Tunnel Commission, either singly or jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near the city of Millersburg, Pa.;

H. R. 7655. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River between the village of Barryville, N. Y., and the village of Shohola, Pa.;

H. R. 7660. An act to amend section 35B of the United States Criminal Code to prohibit purchase or receipt in pledge of clothing and other supplies issued to veterans maintained in Veterans' Administration facilities;

H. R. 7663. An act providing for sick leave for substitute postal employees;

H. R. 7814. An act for the relief of Gerald Henry Simpson;

H. R. 8320. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near Jefferson Barracks, Mo.;

H. R. 8397. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge or bridges across the St. Louis River at or near the city of Duluth, Minn., and the city of Superior, Wis., and to amend the act of August 7, 1939, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8398. An act amending acts extending the franking privilege to widows of ex-Presidents of the United States;

H. R. 8467. An act authorizing the Superior Oil Co., a California corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge or causeway, and approaches thereto, across the old channel of the Wabash River from Cut-Off Island, Posey County, Ind., to White County, Ill.;

H. R. 8471. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Susquehanna River, at or near Wyalusing, between Terry and Wyalusing Townships, in the county of Bradford, and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania;

SENATE

FRIDAY, APRIL 26, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 24, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, O Father, for this beauteous world in which Thou hast placed us, and since it is Thy creation and we ourselves are part of it, may we humbly learn its laws and trust its mighty powers. In our high and noble calling, help us, like all true men, to relate our vocation to the God in whom we believe and to the higher life of the people whom we serve, knowing that our supremest end is activity in the path of highest excellence, which carries the mind upward so that in rare moments it can share the beatitude of the Eternal Mind. Make us worthier of that better, higher world opened for us in the Saviour's broken heart.

We thank Thee for the universe of love and purity in Him, for the grace of His forgiveness, and the renewing crimson flood of His great sacrifice. May we never shrink from the searching and surpassing glory of this world revealed in Christ, and when for us it shall fade away may we not fear to commit ourselves in perfect trust to that other world which shall be our everlasting home in the Father's house of heavenly mansions where we shall see Him face to face and where we shall know even as we ourselves are known. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, April 25, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained from the Senate on public business.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

RETIRED PAY OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 189)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 1918, a bill "relating to the retired pay of certain retired Army officers."

Under the War Department Appropriation Act for 1923, officers retired under the provisions of that act having more than 10 and less than 20 years' commissioned service were authorized pay at the rate of 2½ percent of their active pay at time of retirement multiplied by the number of years of such service, and the officers retired with more than 20 years' commissioned service were authorized pay at the rate of 3 percent of their active pay multiplied by the complete years of such commissioned service.

This bill would allow certain officers who have performed active duty since retirement under that act to credit such service to increase the multiple of years of commissioned service in the computation of their retired pay. These officers under the present law are credited with such service for increase of longevity and period pay purposes, as are all other retired officers who have performed active duty since retirement, but such service is not credited to increase the multiple of years of commissioned service or the percentage of active-duty pay to be paid as retired pay, which was definitely fixed by the law under which they were retired.

The War Department in reporting upon this measure is of the opinion that the provisions of the War Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1923, pertaining to pay for those retired under the act, are based upon sound principles and are as liberal to the interest of the individual as is consistent with due regard to the best interest of the Government.

In view of the foregoing, I do not feel justified in giving this bill my approval.

ALLOWANCES TO CERTAIN NAVAL OFFICERS IN THE CANAL ZONE—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 190)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 2348, an act relating to allowances to certain naval officers stationed in the Canal Zone for rental of quarters. The purpose of the enactment is to authorize payments of rental allowance to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who occupied quarters belonging to the Government and under the jurisdiction of the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Co. during the fiscal years 1935 and 1936 for which they paid rental, the law in effect during these years providing that the rental allowance paid such officers should not exceed the rental rate charged for such quarters on March 5, 1934. Certain items of cost to the officers in connection with the rented quarters were by interpretation excluded from the term "rental rate" and the officer was thus not reimbursed all of his costs for quarters. Section 3 of the act of May 13, 1938, Private, No. 510, 52 Statute 1307, applicable to officers of the Army so situated authorized the refund of any collections for such excess payments, or payment of such excess costs to the officer, and S. 2348 is represented as placing officers of the Navy and Marine Corps so situated on the same basis as were officers of the Army by the act of May 13, 1938. The bill, however, provides that notwithstanding any other provision of law relating to rental allowances officers of the Navy and Marine Corps so situated shall receive the full amount of the rental allowance of their grade and period pay authorized by law (37 U. S. C. 10). This provision would give them the maximum amount authorized by the permanent law, would be greatly in excess of the payments made by them, and greatly in excess of the amount payable to an Army officer in the same situation under the act of May 13, 1938. For example, it appears a major of the Army was reimbursed $4.50 excess payment under section 3 of the act of May 13, 1938, while under this enactment a Navy or Marine Corps officer of the equivalent grade and length of service would receive $1,178.37. Furthermore, this amount would include the 5-percent economy deduction in effect from July 1, 1934, to March 31, 1935, which would not have been payable even though the provision for reduction of rental allowance under these circumstances had not been in effect.

There is also in section 2 of the enactment a disparity in the amounts reimbursable among officers of the Navy and Marine Corps identically situated.

I see no basis for providing so much more generously for officers of the Navy and Marine Corps than for officers of the Army serving under identical conditions, and feel compelled, therefore, to withhold my approval of the enrolled enactment. I would not object, however, to the enactment of legislation applicable to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps included within the provisions of the enrolled enactment that would follow the form and secure the same benefits to these officers as is provided by the act of May 13, 1938, for Army officers so situated; that is, place the officers in the same situation they would have been in had they been assigned quarters under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department.

REPORT OF ALASKAN INTERNATIONAL HIGHWAY COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress "to create a Commission to be known as the Alaskan International Highway Commission," approved May 31, 1938, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Commission.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR (S. DOC. NO. 188)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1941, in the amount of $12,410,500, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ESTATES OF INDIANS DYING INTESTATE WITHOUT HEIRS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the disposition of trust or restricted estates of Indians dying intestate without heirs, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of petitions from Colonel Crawford Camp, No. 105, United Spanish War Veterans, by Jessie Murphy, adjutant, of Connellsville, Pa., and the Thirteenth Minnesota United States Volunteers, by F. W. Pederson and George M. Landon, of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 289) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace April 11, 1899, on reconsideration, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding, which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the District of Columbia Chapter, National Lawyers Guild, protesting against the enactment of the so-called Barden, Norton, and Ramspeck bills, proposing to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the District of Columbia Chapter, National Lawyers Guild, protesting against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act as recommended by the so-called Smith committee in House bill 8813, and also the so-called Norton bill, being House bill 9195, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 3607) to authorize research by the Public Health Service relating to the cause, diagnosis, and treatment of dental diseases, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1528) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2883) for the relief of Daniel Steele, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1529) thereon.

PROTECTION OF CERTAIN FOREIGN PROPERTY WITHIN THE UNITED STATES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. DANAHER submitted several amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 252) to amend section 5 (b) of the act of October 6, 1917, as amended, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DANAHER submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 8745) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:

At the proper place in the bill, under the caption "National Park Service", insert the following:

"Navy and Marine Memorial: For labor and materials, including the preparation of revised plans and specifications, as may be necessary for the completion of the Navy and Marine Memorial, Washington, D. C., to be expended during the fiscal year 1941 under the direction of the National Park Service, $100,000."

Mr. DANAHER also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8745, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1941, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and orders to be printed.

(For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROAD FINANCING—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. TRUMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 264), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, authorized by Senate Resolution 71 and Senate Resolution 227, Seventy-fourth Congress, and Senate Resolution 86 and Senate Resolution 273, Seventy-fifth Congress, to investigate railroad financing and certain other matters, is hereby authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate, in furtherance of the purposes of the above-mentioned resolutions, $5,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized for said purposes.

THE FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published in the Washington Post of today with reference to the Farm Credit Administration, which appears in the Appendix.]

TROJAN HORSE—F. B. I.—HOOVER SPEECH

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, just as the American youth of another generation remember the Black Sox baseball scandal as something base and shocking to their faith, present-day American youth idolize J. Edgar Hoover and his G-men as the symbol of integrity, courage, and right. A few years ago, Mr. President, we glorified the gangster and the leader of criminal mobs. If J. Edgar Hoover never does another thing, this country owes him a debt of gratitude for having brought about a glorification of law and order.

Yesterday in this Chamber two distinguished Members of this body rose and criticized Mr. Hoover and the activities of the F. B. I. I should like to tell a little of the other side of the picture.

Recently the Federal Bureau of Investigation and Mr. Hoover have been the subject of an intensive "smear" campaign. They have been vilified by being compared to the secret police of Nazi Germany and Communist Russia. Now, what is the source and what is the purpose of this widespread and incessant attack upon the F. B. I.? Whence come these charges that the F. B. I. is an Ogpu or a Gestapo? If we will but study the source of the attack, I think we shall have the answer to the purpose. The purpose, Mr. President, is to destroy another American citadel of faith and decency. Also, let us not forget that the first step in the demoralization of a nation is the undermining and discrediting of its law-enforcement agencies.

The origin of the campaign is quite clear. It was the arrest in Detroit, early this year, of 17 Communists who had been indicted by a Federal grand jury on charges of soliciting recruits to fight in the recent war in Spain. These cases were subsequently ordered dismissed by Attorney General Jackson, although, as I pointed out in my recent remarks concerning the Department of Justice, cases of a like nature are being pressed against members of the so-called Christian Front in New York. Naturally, I hold no brief whatever for the Christian Front; but I cannot understand why the charges against one ideological group are dismissed, while those against the other are pressed.

Notwithstanding that these Detroit Communists have been freed, the radical forces, the false liberals, and the "pinks" throughout the country are up in arms against Mr. Hoover and the F. B. I. Around Washington my colleagues know as well as I there are rumors that prominent new dealers are using some of these radical elements to "get" J. Edgar Hoover. As I previously said, these rumors are to the effect that they wish to control the entire Department of Justice and pass upon the question of who is to be prosecuted and who is not to be prosecuted without hindrance. I have said that these rumors should be sifted, because, obviously, they make for a very unhealthy situation within one of the most important governmental agencies. The President himself supported appropriations for Mr. Hoover's division to be used for ferreting out spies and saboteurs in this country. With wars going on all over the world, it seems to me that this is a poor time to go trafficking in politics with the avowed purpose of "purging" some of the personnel of the Nation's greatest law-enforcement agency.

But on the question of the "smear" campaign against Mr. Hoover, we do not have to depend upon rumor. I hold in my hands a photostatic copy of a paper called The Review, a Communist publication edited by a Communist by the name of Joe Clark. In screaming headlines it says, "G-Men or Gestapo?" It goes on to charge that the F. B. I. is being used to smash the workers as the "war-mad Roosevelt administration reaches out its long reactionary arm to smash all antiwar forces." It carries a photograph of the Detroit men chained together. Beneath are the lines:

CHAINS ON DEMOCRACY

J. Edgar Hoover's stormtroopers raided the homes of these young Detroit citizens and dragged them off in chains to jail.

I ask that this photostatic copy be inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

G-MEN OR GESTAPO?

History repeats itself as the war-mad Roosevelt administration reaches out its long reactionary arm to smash all antiwar forces.

It's an axiom that President Wilson learned in '17: Labor's voice must be silenced to get America into imperialist war.

That's why the G-men are used today to do the same dirty work that the Gestapo agents perform for Hitler.

Armed with an additional appropriation of $1,300,000—which brings its budget to a new high of $8,775,000—J. Edgar Hoover's own Gestapo is already terrorizing the labor and progressive movement in a drive to whip up the war hysteria necessary to drag us "over there."

We charge the Department of Justice is engaged in a gigantic un-American conspiracy against the people.

Last month it announced that a list was almost completed of persons and groups to be raided and jailed "if we should become involved in a conflict with some other power." It's the old gag of protecting those in power who betray the people by throwing their leaders into the bastille. We had a dose of it back in 1920 in Attorney General Palmer's "red raids" of nearly 5,000 homes of labor leaders in a single night. The stage is set for a repeat performance. And J. Edgar Hoover, who was chief trigger-man for Palmer, is set to play the lead again.

On February 16, without legal warrants, the Government stormtroopers broke into 11 homes in Detroit in the middle of the night, ransacking their belongings, terrorizing their families, and finally dragging 11 people through the streets as common criminals.

And you know what their "crime" was? Aid to Spain.

Using the flimsy excuse that they were looking for one of the Detroit "criminals," the G-men struck again, breaking into the New York office of the Friends of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade.

Then, 2 weeks ago, the Worcester frame-up. The G-men had planted a "fink" in the Worcester Youth Council sometime ago. To ferret out "foreigners"? No! To wreck the rising progressive youth movement in Worcester.

And how many more stool pigeons are planted in progressive organizations in order to spy on them and smash them?

The F. B. I. announces it is combatting espionage and sagotage in industry. But have they turned up a single case of espionage or sabotage? They have not. They are not interested in that. Their self-confessed aim of planting informers, stool pigeons, and labor spies in over 500 industrial plants in this country is aimed at you—at your union—at labor. It's a program for spy hunting.

And while the G-men wield the club and gun in the North, the Ku Klux Klan rides again in the Southland.

But the G-men refuse to stop this mob violence, vigilantism, and lynching.

They refuse—just as they refuse to prosecute any un-American activity. That isn't their job. Their job is to push America into the war—and the more brutally the better.

This is an attack upon you—upon your organization—upon your liberties. Be vigilant. Watch for this un-American, antilabor activity. Expose it wherever you find it.

Detroit slowed up the work of this American Gestapo. The American people, with labor leading the way, can stop it, once and for all.

Your peace and your life are at stake.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the indisputable evidence is that the F. B. I. did not effect these arrests. The arrests were made by the United States marshal. I hold in my hand an article by the International News Service, published in the Washington Times-Herald on March 16, which not only makes this clear but throws further light upon the coddling treatment which the Department of Justice has given these so-called citizens. I ask that this article be inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

HOOVER MADE "GOAT" IN QUIZ OF LOYALISTS—PROSECUTOR DENIES F. B. I. CHIEF ORDERED PROBE

DETROIT, March 16.—Back of the Spanish Loyalist investigation in Detroit, which has been made a part of the Communist-inspired campaign to smear J. Edgar Hoover, Chief of the F. B. I., is a story of switched orders and misrepresentation with Hoover's Department as the apparent "goat."

That story came today from United States District Attorney John C. Lehr and United States Marshal John L. Barc. It disproves the loose gossip that Hoover—

1. Instigated the investigation;
2. Chained the prisoners taken as a result of the recruiting probe; or
3. Made any special issue of the case.

RELEASE PROTESTED

Barc said sentiment was against dropping the cases, as they later were on orders from Attorney General Robert H. Jackson.

"The better element of Detroit—the patriots and patriotic societies—protested the release of these people," he asserted.

Lehr told International News Service that the recruiting of men for the Loyalist forces came to his attention in 1938. He informed Assistant United States Attorney General Brien MacMahon, in Washington, on May 12 of that year.

INQUIRY ORDERED

A few weeks later Assistant United States Attorney John Rogge asked Lehr who told him to start the investigation. He replied, "MacMahon," and was told by Rogge to drop the probe. Later Rogge reversed the order.

In December 1939 Rogge ordered Lehr to put his information before a Federal grand jury. On February 3 indictments were handed down.

Lehr asked bonds of $20,000 in six cases and $10,000 in four cases. He believed that if freed on a lower bond, the defendants would leave the jurisdiction of the court.

TWO-THOUSAND-FIVE-HUNDRED-DOLLAR BOND FOR GIRL

Bond in the case of the single girl arrested was set at $2,500, and the same bonds were set for two doctors.

According to Marshal Barc, after arraignment, the prisoners became his charges, and the F. B. I. had nothing further to do with them.

Following his usual custom, the prisoners were handcuffed to a chain and taken to a cell block, where the handcuffs were removed. The girl was not handcuffed at any time, according to Barc.

There are only four deputy marshals in the Detroit court, and it is common practice to handcuff prisoners to a chain when their number exceeds that of the marshal's staff.

Lehr and Barc were of the opinion that the cases should have been prosecuted and that if they had been prosecuted there would have been no subsequent uproar about the handling of the prisoners.

Mr. BRIDGES. David Lawrence discusses the matter in his syndicated article which appeared in the Evening Star of March 19. He calls the attack on Mr. Hoover a "tangled piece of intrigue." I ask that this article be inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

"LEFT WING" ATTACK SEEN ON F. B. I.—OBSERVER DEFENDS BUREAU'S RECORD UNDER HOOVER

(By David Lawrence)

Every now and then a smoke screen is drawn across the face of a controversy hereabouts which makes it seem one thing on the surface when quite another set of influences is at work under cover of an attack.

Such a situation envelops the recurring bombardment that is being visited on the Federal Bureau of Investigation, commonly known as the F. B. I., and headed by J. Edgar Hoover. Lately, for instance, there has been a hue and cry about wire tapping, and Attorney General Jackson has just issued an order that there must not be any eavesdropping on the telephone lines.

But actually the amount of wire tapping practiced by G-men was relatively insignificant and was confined to kidnaping and certain types of criminal action wholly disconnected from any political or social questions.

Digging into the facts of such a tangled piece of intrigue, one finds several forces in America anxious to break down the highly efficient staff of the F. B. I. One is the underworld, which would be happy, indeed, to see J. Edgar Hoover out of the picture. Another is the group of agents of foreign governments who are engaged in espionage right now because of the large amount of war contracts placed here by the allies.

EFFECTIVE INQUIRY INTO COMMUNISM

The attack on J. Edgar Hoover, who has for many years been a career man in the Government service without any political affiliations, comes at a time when communistic activity is being investigated a little more effectively than ever before. Thus the arrest of certain persons in Detroit for securing enlistments for the Spanish Loyalists has been made the occasion of a general barrage from "left wing" quarters in America. The facts show that whatever was done in Detroit was at the instance of Frank Murphy when he was attorney general, and that alleged raiding at an early hour in the morning and other incidents complained of were done by the local United States attorney and United States marshal, who have accepted full responsibility.

But the effort to besmirch the F. B. I. has not been confined to alien forces. Some of it has arisen in the Senate itself where, though confessing that he had no facts, a denunciation of the F. B. I. was made by Senator Norris of Nebraska.

For several years there has been a feud between the various detective agencies of the Government. Sometimes it has been good-natured rivalry and sometimes it is interdepartmental jealousy and sometimes there has been bad feeling due to the prominence of one bureau as against another. But apart from this sort of skirmishing between the detective agencies, which most everybody who is familiar with Washington affairs has noted off and on during both Republican and Democratic administrations, there has been much discussion about the F. B. I. from the standpoint of its use for political purposes.

USE OF SECRET-SERVICE CHARGED

Back in the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt, the Secret Service was allegedly used by the President to watch members of Congress, and the law specifically was amended to limit the activities of the agents of the Treasury Department.

Many persons outside of Washington claim their wires have been tapped and that the administration tries to apply Ogpu or Gestapo methods. But there is not the slightest foundation for such reports. The most persuasive reason for saying so is that J. Edgar Hoover is the type of public official whose character and integrity would prevent misuse of the F. B. I. He has had the respect of every Attorney General under whom he has worked and he is known to have the confidence of President Roosevelt. But this seemingly does not prevent some of the "left wingers" hereabouts from seeking to undermine the F. B. I. and its able chief, and it is quite possible that Mr. Roosevelt does not know what is often being said and done in his behalf by the little group of "liberals" who seek to carry out their own purposes in government.

If the "left wing" should get control of the F. B. I. and use it for its own purposes, there would be justification for a decided change in the confidence which the public now has in the F. B. I. If politics or political chicanery is permitted to enter the one bureau which heretofore has been kept absolutely free from such cancers, the public would lose J. Edgar Hoover, for he is not the type of official to remain a moment in the service if either a Gestapo or an Ogpu is simulated by those who seek nowadays to control governmental bureaus for allegedly sociological reasons. The carefully directed attack on the F. B. I. warrants watching and if there is to be an investigation by Congress, it would be interesting to have the inquiry broad enough to include the recent activities of all the enemies the F. B. I. has made by its vigilant enforcement of Federal statutes or by investigations ordered specifically by the men who have served as Attorney General.

It may be, of course, that it is a mere coincidence that some of the influences with a grudge against the F. B. I. are engaging in a smear campaign against the Bureau and its Chief, but Congress might find it interesting to go into it anyway.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have in my hand an attack by the west coast radical whom Mme. Perkins refuses to deport, Harry Bridges. He delivered his attack at Harvard University, and it is duly reported in the Communist organ, the Daily Worker of February 29. I ask that this article be inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

BRIDGES RAPS F. B. I. IN HARVARD TALK—TELLS STUDENT UNION BUREAU IS GUILTY OF "CORRUPT PRACTICES"—RIDICULES BELIEF THAT WE POSSESS A FREE PRESS

CAMBRIDGE, February 28.—Harry Bridges, west coast C. I. O. leader, attacked the F. B. I. for its "corrupt practices" in an address here before 600 members of the Harvard Student Union. In his first public appearance since deportation proceedings against him were dropped by the Department of Labor, Bridges said that evidence of frequent violations of civil liberties had been presented to the F. B. I. by union leaders, but that no action had ever been taken on these charges.

Much of the evidence recently published concerning Willie Bioff, Hollywood A. F. of L. leader, had been given the Bureau by union men, Bridges declared, but no action was taken on them.

The F. B. I. was included in a group of "employers and Federal and State agencies" concerning which evidence of corrupt practices has been disclosed at his own hearing on the deportation charges.

"Belief that we have a free press is utterly ridiculous," Bridges said in a section of his address concerning the press. "The radio," he asserted, was "little better."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I could name several persons who have wittingly or unwittingly permitted themselves to be made vehicles of this smear campaign. There is no need to do so, however.

We have the amazing paradox, Mr. President, of subversive influences which refer to the President as "a war-mad reactionary" receiving encouragement in the administration over which Mr. Roosevelt presides. I say this is true if there is any basis whatever for the rumors we hear.

If it is true that members of the left-wing school in the New Deal are trying to "get" Mr. Hoover, it makes no difference to me what their purpose is. They are playing the same game as the subversive influences. You ask why I should bring these rumors to the Senate floor. I reply that they are being freely aired in the press; and, furthermore, there is not one of my colleagues who does not know that some new dealers have been engaged in intrigue ever since they have been here.

But, leaving aside any intrigue on their part, it seems to be an indisputable fact that these subversive influences are either intimidating the Department of Justice or finding it willing to cooperate. One or the other is true.

Why were the Detroit cases dismissed?

Why have not countless other Communists been prosecuted for failing to register at the State Department as foreign agents?

Mr. President, I suppose Mr. Hoover has his failings just as the rest of us mortals have. But here is a man who has instilled in the minds of millions of youngsters the desire to be G-men instead of Dillingers, and has given peace of mind to thousands of parents whose children are potential victims of kidnapers.

I, for one, do not intend to remain silent and permit the destruction of this man and the organization which he heads. The attack upon him is bigger than one man or any group of men.

In the past 12 years the F. B. I. has investigated 52,000 cases from which convictions have resulted. In not a single one of these cases was there a reversal by the court of appeals on the grounds that civil liberties had been violated, on charges of brutality, inhuman treatment, or third-degree tactics.

Recently the Federal district attorneys of the whole Nation commended the F. B. I. for its preservation of constitutional rights and civil liberties. Since 1932 the F. B. I. has successfully solved 177 of 179 kidnaping cases.

The Nazis landed in Norway through disguise, by posing as friends, by playing bands and singing. They held outstretched flowers and concealed daggers. They abused the tolerance of a friendly people.

Mr. President, is it not apparent to us all that influences just as bestial and deceitful, just as dishonest, are abusing our hospitality and our tolerance? Are they not posing as humanitarians and preying upon trusting minds? And when we pursue them they seek the shelter of the very freedom and liberty of the institutions which they seek to destroy.

As to one group of this country's subversive elements, there is not the slightest doubt that in their steady attack on our institutions, on our very way of living, they have had the active support, indeed, the encouragement and the coddling, of those who choose to call themselves the New Deal. Certain of these subversive elements have been fitted right into the so-called liberal movement which has had our country in its grip, and there is no doubt in my mind that they have pretty well directed it.

I realize that my remarks will bring down upon my head the charge that I am witch hunting. But I venture to say, Mr. President, that the Norwegian people today wish they had more carefully scrutinized those who, as a result of Norway's democratic institutions, were allowed to filter in and establish themselves, and who, at a given signal, committed the overt acts which paralyzed the nation politically, while the aggressor from across the narrow sea appeared with his battleships and troop transports to storm yet another citadel of democracy.

Almost as often as once a week this administration through some act or word seeks to concentrate our attention on the happenings in Europe, but at no time, Mr. President, has it done anything to direct attention to what is happening right here at home. Instead, it has sought in every way at its command to discourage those who have attempted to expose these happenings.

Mr. President, the lesson which the world has learned as a result of the recent happenings in Norway should be taken to heart, especially by Americans, for here, just as the Nazis through secret infiltration into the lives of the Norwegians were subsequently able to seize the country with amazing rapidity, so have alien forces been steadily undermining our own body politic for the past few years. Let us watch the Trojan horse in this country.

Mr. President, a very amazing story has been written by Mr. Leland Stowe, of the Chicago Daily News, relative to the so-called Trojan-horse occurrence in Norway. It appeared in two articles in the Washington Evening Star, and I ask that the articles be reprinted as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star of April 15, 1940]

NAVAL GUNS SPIKED, MINES DISCONNECTED, REPORTER DECLARES—VAST PLOT LET GERMANS WALK IN WITHOUT RESISTANCE, HE SAYS

(By Leland Stowe)

STOCKHOLM, April 15.—For the first time the story behind Germany's paralyzing 12-hour conquest of vital Norwegian ports on Tuesday, April 9, can be told. Between midnight and noon on the bewildering day, Norway's capital, all her principal seaports, and her most strategic coastal defense fell into German hands like an overripe plum.

Norwegian people were stunned as the Belgian people must have been stunned in 1914 and most of them still have not the slightest conception of how this incomprehensible tragedy could have happened.

I spent these hours in Oslo, together with the only other American newspapermen who were on the spot—Warren Irvin, of the National Broadcasting Co., and Edmund Stevens, of the Christian Science Monitor—and we ourselves could scarcely believe the evidence of our own eyes.

But I had to remain in Oslo through 4 days of German occupation to learn how this miracle of lightning naval and military occupation was made possible. Then I could scarcely believe my ears. After that, with the last train connections to Sweden severed, Irvin and myself decided to try somehow to get across the border. It was the only possible way to give a detailed account of the most astonishing thing that has happened since the second World War began.

PORTS SEIZED BY GIGANTIC CONSPIRACY

Norway's capital and great seaports were not captured by armed force. They were seized with unparalleled speed by means of a gigantic conspiracy which must undoubtedly rank among the most audacious, most perfectly oiled political plots of the past century.

By bribery and extraordinary infiltration on the part of Nazi agents and by treason on the part of a few highly placed Norwegian civilian and defense officials, the German dictatorship built a Trojan horse inside of Norway. Then, when the hour struck the German plotters spiked the guns of most of the Norwegian Navy and reduced its formidable fortresses to impotence.

Absolute control of only a handful of keymen in administrative positions and the navy was necessary to turn the trick and everything had been faultlessly prepared. The conspiracy was about 90 percent according to schedule. Only in two or three places was it marred by unexpected hitches, but Norway's sea gates were already wide open.

For the success of the German plan the capture of three key cities was essential, these being Oslo, Bergen, and Narvik. It is known that Narvik was betrayed to the Germans by its commanding officer. How Bergen's harbor defenses were taken remains a mystery, as far as I can learn. But most important of all to the Nazi plot was the immediate domination of Oslo Fjord with its mighty fortresses and the forcing of its virtually impregnable narrows at Drobak, together with the seizure of the great Norwegian naval base at Horten.

Only in this manner could the Germans penetrate to Oslo and deliver an almost irreparable blow to Norway's parliamentary government. To seize all of Oslo Fjord and force its narrows would have appeared impossible to any foreign government except the Nazi dictatorship, but, by methods even more astonishingly efficient than those which it used against Austria and Czechoslovakia, the inconceivable was accomplished. Until now, I believe, the outside world has had to guess how it was done.

GERMANS SAILED NIGHT OF APRIL 4

To understand the conspiracy's scope one must go back somewhere near the climax of the plot. In Oslo I learned, on the most reliable authority, that Germany's sea forces and troopships sailed from German ports for their Norwegian adventure during the night of Thursday, April 4—3 full days before the British mined the upper Norwegian coast between Bergen and Narvik. I also was informed with impressive assurance that the German Army chiefs strongly opposed Fuehrer Adolf Hitler on the plan to invade Norway, because they insisted that communication lines for an army of occupation in Norway would be most dangerously limited and exposed. Nazi radical leaders supported Der Fuehrer and the decision was taken against the Regular Army chiefs' counsels.

On Friday night, April 5, while the German Fleet and transports already were streaming toward Norway, an event of enormous historical importance occurred in Oslo, and until now has probably never been reported. The German legation held a soiree to which it invited 200 persons representing Norway's influential personalities. All the members of the Government were invited, as well as many officers of the defense forces, leading bankers, shipping executives, and industrialists. The invitation emphasized the importance of the soiree by reading, "White ties, uniforms, and decorations."

Despite the great formality imposed, it was no official dinner. Norway's elite had been invited to see an unusually interesting film. It proved to be the motion picture Baptism of Fire, depicting in the most graphic details Germany's aerial destruction in Poland. For more than an hour the distinguished Norwegian audience sat in icy silence, gripped by the horror of many of the scenes. Afterward the German Minister explained that the film was not a war, but a peace, film, since it showed what nations which elected peace would save their people from suffering. The Norwegians left the German Legation that night filled with gloomy, ominous thoughts.

QUISLING RETURNED TO OSLO ON APRIL 6

In Oslo I learned that Maj. Vidkun Quisling, leader of the pro-Nazi Norwegian party, called the Camling, and now Premier of the so-called national government set up after the German occupation, was in Berlin at the time the film was shown in Oslo and while the expedition was being organized. He returned to Oslo on Saturday, April 6. On Sunday night the British sowed mine fields below Narvik. On Monday Berlin's press flamed against this provocation. In the first hours of Tuesday, April 9, Norway's naval defenses were betrayed to the German fleet and the first German troops landed at Fornebo, Oslo's airport, a few hours after daybreak.

This brings us to the methods by which Oslo Fjord and Oslo itself were captured from the sea early in the morning hours of April 9. The Germans could not enter without controlling the vital Norse naval base at Horten. At 1:30 o'clock that morning—3½ hours before Berlin's ultimatum was handed to Foreign Minister Dr. Halvdan Koht—the commander of three Norwegian warships at Horten received an urgent message. It was supposedly signed by Dr. Koht himself and accepted as coming direct from the Government via the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. It ordered Norwegian ships not to fight against the German warships which were about to come up the fjord and to put all their men ashore immediately, without their arms.

Without questioning the origin of the order, the commander ordered all his men ashore except stokers and messmen.

From here on a slight hitch which was costly for the Germans occurred. The Norse minelayer Olaf Trygvason had unexpectedly put in for repairs the previous evening. Its presence apparently was unknown to the leaders of the conspiracy in Oslo. This was the only Norwegian war vessel which did not receive the order and so remained in condition to fight. Afterward the Norwegian sailor who verified these developments declared, "It was only through treason that the Germans got in."

Meanwhile, an even greater coup had been scored by the plotters. The narrows of Oslo Fjord were mined and controlled from Drobak. About 1:30 o'clock in the morning of April 9 these mines were all rendered harmless by being electrically disconnected from the Drobak central. The mystery of who ordered this to be done remained unsolved when I left Oslo, but this move enabled the German cruiser to penetrate the narrows before dawn.

At 4:30, still half an hour before the German Minister handed the ultimatum to Dr. Koht, a German cruiser, believed to have been the Emden, accompanied by two submarines, reached Horten. The three Norse war vessels were completely helpless, but the little mine layer, Olaf Trygvason, blocked the entrance to the narrows. It immediately discharged torpedoes and sank the cruiser and the submarine. It was reported, though I was unable to confirm this, that the cruiser Bluecher also was sunk by the narrows fort, called Oskarsborg.

GERMANS LANDED AND SEIZED HORTEN

In any case, all other crews were ashore without arms at Horten, and by daybreak the Germans landed marines and seized Horten. The way through the narrows was open and Oslo defenseless from the sea.

I talked to another Norwegian who was a member of the Horten naval base that night. He confirmed all the main details of the above events, including the fact that two German cruisers were sunk.

"Later the Germans got about 100 men ashore," he related. "There was some fighting. We had 4 men killed; the Germans, 2. But there was nothing we could do. The officers on our ships ran up white flags. We didn't know why, and I still don't know why. We thought they had orders from the government."

In this fashion Norway's capital was betrayed from within and the German occupation of Oslo assured before its Government knew what had happened or Parliament had courageously refused to capitulate.

Before the Germans' capture of Horten the Oslo Government had already ordered mobilization as a precaution. Accordingly, before daybreak on April 9 scores of young Norwegians reported at the Horten railroad station. They were immediately surrounded by the German marines landing party and placed aboard other German ships which came up.

When German warships approached the formidable Oskarsborg fortress, at the narrows above Horten, so it was stated there afterward, they radioed the fort's commander not to shoot. According to report, the Nazi said: "We've got your own men aboard." The fortress guns remained silent and the German warships passed into Oslo's inner harbor. The occupation of Oslo was then inevitable.

Meanwhile, we had spent an eerie night in Oslo's Grand Hotel with a succession of air alarms, the first of which sounded at 12:35 o'clock in the morning, about the time mobilization was ordered. At first I could not believe my ears, as the sirens were so different from those in Helsinki. They sounded like motorcars honking in a traffic jam. Later Stevens and I decided that the Norwegians were only air-alarming as a precaution. So I refused to get up until 7 o'clock, when a Finnish diplomat informed me of the ultimatum and the Government's decision to leave.

PLANES DOVE OVER THE CITY

At 7:45 o'clock, while we still had not the slightest idea what had happened in Oslo Fjord and at Horten, five Nazi bombers suddenly came roaring over the rooftops, so low they almost touched them. We watched them come, expecting bombs momentarily. For 2½ hours German planes dove over the city, always only three or five in number. They were intended to terrorize the populace into surrender and the authorities into inaction while the first troops landed by air at Fornebo outside the city.

Thousands of Osloans gazed curiously and fearfully, but no panic occurred. None of us dreamed that German warships were in the inner harbor and that Oslo was already doomed. We still thought that British ships and planes might come at any moment. It seemed utterly incredible that the narrows of Oslo Fjord could have been forced by the Germans, and its powerful forts silenced.

The same madness of incomprehensible events continued all day long. First was mystification over the complete lack of defense of the city by its naval forces and coastal forts. Then it was the immunity of the low-flying Nazi planes to thousands of machine-gun bullets which pattered almost incessantly until after 10 o'clock. Then it was the further fact that only one anti-aircraft battery seemed to be firing against the German planes, and this became silent after firing only a few shells, all of which were inexplicably wide of the mark.

Finally, at 10: 30 o'clock, came an equally fantastic lull in which German planes only circled occasionally and absolutely nothing seemed to happen. Tens of thousands of persons, clustered in the streets and on the sidewalks, looked and waited, utterly baffled. We all asked where were the British, but also where were the Germans.

BATTLE TO HAVE DISPATCH ACCEPTED

Meanwhile, I had a great battle to get the telegraph office to accept a dispatch without a special Government press card.

At 9 o'clock in the morning Stevens and myself could find no responsible chief at his post in the telegraph building, only groups of perplexed employees standing in the corridors—those few who had reported for work. It was only through the personal intervention of Raymond Cox, first secretary, who remained in charge of the American Legation, that our first dispatches were finally accepted—and the only ones which were allowed to pass for more than 24 hours.

But Norway's capital in every quarter was the scene of dazed disorganization, completely without leadership. Apparently even the men who had been called to the colors did not know where to go or simply forgot about it. The streets were filled with men of fighting age, all standing watching the German planes, waiting and speculating, but doing nothing and going nowhere.

It was like this until 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon. Then, as I rushed up to the hotel desk, a porter asked me, "Aren't you going out to see the Germans come in?"

"What do you mean, the Germans?"

"Yes; they are marching up Carl Johan Boulevard any minute now."

I called Irvin and Stevens and we rushed outside into the strangest conceivable scene. Oslo's beautiful main boulevard was jammed with people, all flocking to see the Germans come in. Strangest of all, Norwegian policemen were calmly forming lines along the sidewalks and clearing the streets for the Germans' triumphal entry. One of the policemen told me that the Germans would be there within 10 minutes.

NONE OF DISPATCH WAS SENT

All this and what followed I told in a dispatch which was filed that afternoon—but the Germans had just taken over the telegraph building and I learned 2 days later that not a line of my dispatch was ever sent. Meanwhile, we supposed that the world knew most of the story.

We waited half an hour on the hotel balcony with an excellent view all the way up the boulevard to its beginning, at the foot of the hill on which the royal palace stands. Shortly before 3 o'clock two trucks filled with a dozen German soldiers rolled up the street. The soldiers lolled in them, with their guns dangling, as if they had been assured that they had not the slightest resistance to fear. From the rear of the second truck two machine guns poked their noses meaningfully straight down the boulevard. Their operators lay prone with intent, hard faces, ready to fire. This was the only show of force, and all that was needed.

At 3 o'clock there was a murmur through the crowd. We could see two mounted men swinging into the boulevard in front of the palace, then six more, then the head of a marching column in field gray. The mounted men were Norwegian policemen actually escorting the German troops which were occupying the capital. We looked uncomprehendingly. Later I was told that Norwegian policemen never carry any kind of arms. This was also why they failed to fulfill the Government's order to arrest Major Quisling.

The German column marched steadily nearer through a lane of 20,000 or 30,000 Osloans, fully half of which were men of military age. A tall, broad-shouldered officer, Gen. Nikolaus von Falkenhorst, and 2 other officers marched directly behind the mounted police. Then came the German regulars in columns of threes, as if to make the line look as long as possible. One out of nine carried light machine guns; all toted compact aluminum kits and bulky shoulder packs.

They were hard-muscled, stony-faced men. They marched with guns on their shoulders, with beautiful precision. Mostly, they stared straight ahead, but some could not restrain triumphant smiles toward the onlookers. Several times General von Falkenhorst and the other two officers returned Nazi salutes from persons in the crowd who must have been German advance agents who had been busy in Oslo for weeks before the crowning moment. From our hotel balcony two Nazis gave the salute. I noticed in particular the beaming face of a chic, slim, blond German woman whose husband had been very active in our hotel since we arrived on the previous Thursday.

COLUMN COMPOSED OF TWO BATTALIONS

It was a thin, unbelievably short column. It required only 6 or 7 minutes to march past. It was composed of only 2 incomplete battalions—surely less than 1,500 men in all. Norway's capital of nearly 300,000 inhabitants was being occupied by a German force of approximately 1,500 men.

The last of the German troops went by without a single jeer or hiss, without a single tear noticeable on any Norwegian face. Like children, the people stared. Thousands of young men stood watching this occupation parade. Not one hand or voice was raised. We could discern no sign of resentment upon any face about us. This was the most incomprehensible thing among all the incomprehensible things of the fantastic 24 hours.

Somehow it seemed as if curiosity was the strongest sentiment in the throng of Osloans who watched the Germans come in. No other emotion was betrayed in the countless faces we scanned anxiously. The only indignant people we met or saw that day were foreigners. The Norwegians of Oslo seemed stunned beyond recovery. Everyone acted curiously like children suddenly given a chance to see a parade of strange creatures out of prehistoric times—something which had no connection with real life.

But within 2 hours real life was making itself felt in Oslo. The Germans had occupied the capital without dropping a bomb, without firing a shot within the city limits. They simply had paraded in and taken it over much as Frenchmen or Italians might parade into a colonial interior village somewhere in Africa. Now they went to work. It was the urgent task of the tiny force of 1,500 men to seize key places in the nation's capital. They did it swiftly, without any fear of interruption.

When I hurried into the telegraph building I had hopes. There were still no German troops guarding the door. But immediately I knew it was too late. The tip-off came when a woman employee, who had always addressed me in perfect English, spoke to me in German and tried to refuse my message on the grounds that I had no special telegraph card. But her chief had already accepted my dispatch at 1 o'clock. Finally, she accepted it reluctantly, together with $64 worth of Norwegian crowns which had to be paid in advance. Then she told me in German that I must see Fraulein Hauge tomorrow morning or no more messages would be accepted. Of course, my own and all other dispatches for the next 24 hours were never sent. The Germans had closed all the wires as well as telephone lines to the outside world.

GERMAN SOLDIERS IN PARLIAMENT

The next day, Wednesday, was as unbelievable as the events of April 9 had been. German troops now stood guard in the Parliament, the university, the city hall, and other public buildings. My first shock came early in the morning as I passed the Storting (Parliament). Two-score German soldiers filled the open windows on the third floor of the building, all singing lustily, while one pumped joyfully at his accordion. Osloans stood watching and listening on the sidewalks below. I looked closely but so far as I could see they were simply curious and somewhat entertained.

As on the previous night after the occupation, the city's cafes were filled in almost normal fashion, and a large number of young men were lolling in them as if there were no such thing as a regular Norwegian army, ready to offer resistance to an invader, only 50 miles north of the capital. Wherever we went we saw groups of young people clustered around German soldiers on guard. Some of them chatted pleasantly with the soldiers, some stared at their rifles and machine guns, and asked questions about them. Many young girls gazed admiringly at the men in field-gray uniforms.

Outside the telegraph building I encountered an open car with half a dozen hardened German regulars who had a machine gun mounted for action. The crowd laughed and joked with the soldiers; one man, apparently half-intoxicated, shouted "Deutschland uber Alles" several times. The soldiers laughed. The chief of the machine-gun crew looked down upon his admirers with an indescribable smile. He stood up proudly like a member of a conquering Roman legion who realized that he had the right to do so.

Such scenes, far from infrequent, had not ended when I left Oslo on Friday. By that time, however, many young Norwegians had disappeared from the capital with packs on their backs. A great many more went after the Germans landed 20,000 troops on Oslo's quays on Thursday afternoon. This sight at last awakened many men from the daze which they had been in. Many others, however, still remained in the capital on Friday—seemingly a large part of the men.

RECEIVED COURTEOUSLY AT NAZI LEGATION

On Wednesday evening, we discovered that the Quisling government had been formed in room 430 of the Continental Hotel. I went there about a matter which was said to require the new Premier's personal decision. Three Germans in civilian clothes, and one Norwegian, were in room 430. After waiting, I saw Major Quisling very briefly, but he turned for advice to a sharp-faced German who introduced himself as Reichsamtleiter Schoedt. The Reichsamtleiter decided the matter while another German assisted in giving further directions. From there, we were referred to the German Legation, where we were received courteously. It appeared that the German military censorship was not yet completely organized and nothing could be arranged about the transmission of dispatches until the next day.

Nevertheless, we made another call at the telegraph building. The public hall was deserted when we entered, after passing German guards. Inside two German privates were standing. While we wrote our cablegrams they began an exercise in mass psychology. They marched 15 or 20 steps, slowly and calculatedly pounding the heels of their boots down on the cement floor at every step. Each step echoed loudly and menacingly against the ceiling. After a few seconds' pause, the two soldiers pounded their heels again.

They continued this exercise as long as we were in the hall. The echo of their hobnailed heels was amazingly eloquent.

This is how Norway's capital was captured without a bomb being dropped and without a shot being fired within several miles of the city.

I believe this to be the first story of any completeness to reach the outside world. I also believe it to be the most important newspaper dispatch I have ever had the occasion to write. It is my conviction, for the sake of history and also for the sake of the ultimate restoration of security and freedom in all three Scandinavian countries, that it is crying to be told now. I am closing it with the earnest hope that it will reach America and the outside world quickly.

[From the Washington Evening Star of April 17, 1940]

THREE THOUSAND GERMANS HELD OSLO 2 DAYS BY BLUFF AND MUSIC—ROLLICKING TUNES LULLED NATIVES INTO FORGETTING RESISTANCE UNTIL TOO LATE

(By Leland Stowe)

STOCKHOLM, April 17.—The Nazi regime conquered Oslo by ruse and treason, but less than 3,000 German troops held Norway's capital for the first 48 hours by a gigantic bluff. Most of all, they kept the more than 250,000 Osloans, who remained in the capital, mesmerized by music discreetly intermixed with cocky parades in different sections of the city by 20, 50, or perhaps 100 soldiers at a time.

But music and song were the chief weapons used to lull the public into an illusion of normalcy. Thus, we witnessed the extraordinary spectacle of a nation's capital being held securely by impromptu soldiers' choruses, by one 12-piece military band and by 2 accordions.

The Germans, at least the Nazi leaders, have learned a lot more about psychology than they are given credit for. This is why the tiny force of German occupation was able to dominate Oslo from the moment it set foot on the land, simply through bluff and rollicking tunes. The Nazi band began its concerts in the park along Carl Johan Boulevard, in the center of the city, the morning after the occupation. Soon several hundred Norwegians clustered around, listening to a jovial rendition of Roll Out the Barrel. They kept coming and pausing for 10 minutes or more in groups, and nobody seemed to think of rolling out the Germans.

SOLDIERS SING ON MARCH

On Wednesday morning, too, one company of spick-and-span men, their rifles shining, marched down Carl Johan Boulevard, pounding their heels slowly and singing as they went.

Meanwhile skeleton bodies of troops, occupying Parliament and City Hall, also developed an urge to sing popular songs and old German favorites from the windows. But the cleverest bit of musical mass psychology was pulled last Thursday afternoon just after the first of 20,000 German troops debarked in Oslo Harbor, thereby assuring the Nazi grip on the capital.

After watching the first transports tie up at the quays, I rushed to the telegraph office. When I returned, half an hour later, the harbor's semicircle of quays was a curious sight. I heard what sounded like a students' chorus at a football match long before it could press its way through the throngs of Osloans near the embankment. Lounging on the embankment were perhaps three platoons of German infantry. Their kits, blankets, rifles, and bayonets all were piled in neat rows on the sidewalk below them.

CONSCIENCES SUFFER

The soldiers sat with their arms locked, and swinging from side to side, shouted out the words of the German song, Going to Town, with splendid harmony on the refrain. Before them stood a hardy Teuton getting the maximum syncopation from his accordion. The singers all acted like a group of carefree young men whose only desire in life is to have fun and serenade people. Behind their booming choruses was the implication that there was nothing serious about these thousands of iron-muscled troops who were marching down the gangplanks at the quay's edge.

Almost unbelieving, several thousand Osloans paused and listened in the course of the next 2 hours. But their expressions had changed from the incomprehensible curiosity and the seeming indifference of the last 2 days. Now, for the first time, there were many faces with harassed lines and troubled eyes.

All the songs chosen had lots of gayety. They attracted people but did not hold so many. Something, some sharp realization, had at last sunk into the consciences of the Norwegians at Oslo. After 48 hours it was beginning to sink in.

I walked on a few paces, for another body of singing soldiers was so close that the songs clashed midway between the two groups. These field-gray men, standing as they sang, had one tenor whose voice was a winner. One of their best songs, and the one that each group sang repeatedly, was something about a Rhineland town which "has the finest Maedels (girls) in the world. We want to love them. We want to love them."

With those kinds of songs people are not supposed to remember that their capital is being conquered for inestimable months or years. Yet a great many Osloans did not linger as long now around the German troops as they had been lingering the last 2 days. They were seeing an enormous amount of machine guns, too, and several more troopships, lined with soldiers, out in the harbor waiting to tie up. From the largest of these more singing echoed shoreward.

Meanwhile, up in the park directly in front of Parliament, the people of Oslo, from 11 o'clock in the morning onward, had been treated to the most amazing band concert the Norwegian capital probably ever heard. A little 12-piece band played almost unceasingly all afternoon just as if nothing important were happening anywhere, least of all down in the harbor. The German band played countless American dance tunes, interspersed with German waltzes and occasional Nazi marches. They kept up their entertainment, never lacking an audience of 200 or 300. The soldiers only ended their zestful music at nightfall, when fully 5,000 more troops had already safely augmented the Germans' exposed shoestring garrison of occupation.

The next morning, Friday the 12th, the music period of the occupation had completely ended. There was no further need for bluff. Also, much more serious business was at hand. That morning, for the first time, I saw no German soldiers standing guard at the Parliament and university buildings. Until now they had stood like statues or had tramped ostentatiously back and forth. Now all had gone. I was puzzled to see that the German guards had been replaced by Norwegian police at the Parliament doors.

We still could not understand why Oslo's big, strapping policemen remained in the capital. Nor why the city had been occupied without the electric current being cut off or the slightest cessation of trolley-car service, or any strike in other services as a show of passive resistance.

During the first 3 days I saw a single individual who seemed ashamed. Perhaps he was the only one, because those young men who believed that Norwegians must also fight for their own freedom had left or were leaving town. When we left Oslo, their absence or departure for the first time had become slightly noticeable.

Before leaving, we learned from a Red Cross nurse that one Norwegian had been shot by the occupation forces for refusing to drive a commandeered car. This was the only case we had heard of up to that time.

With the arrival of 20 or more transports, however, resistance inside Oslo became impossible. Roll Out the Barrel had become the unparalleled, incredible dirge of Norwegian independence so far as Osloans were concerned.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have attempted to give merely a brief outline of some of the things which are happening in this nation today, some of the things which should demand the attention of every thoughtful American. I question what sort of Americans we show ourselves to be, with all the trouble in the world today, with the situation in this country as it is, with large groups attempting to undermine our Constitution and our country, when we sit here passively and show very little concern about these influences which are at work. We do not want another Trojan-horse episode in this country. When we see what has happened to little Norway and see how that country has been laid prostrate as a result of the infiltration of elements from other lands, it seems to be time that our Nation should take account of stock and take some definite action to put its house in order.

TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1940—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WHEELER submitted a report, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(For conference report see page 5836 of the House proceedings.)

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR—FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 15, after the words "Provided further", to strike out "That expenditures under the several classes of objects of expenditure for which this appropriation is available shall not exceed by more than 10 percent the amounts estimated for such objects of expenditure by classes, in the schedule for the fiscal year 1941 appearing in the Budget for such fiscal year under this head, and any such excess must be approved in writing by the Federal Security Administrator in such amounts as he shall designate" and in lieu thereof to insert "That expenditures under the several classes of objects of expenditure for which this appropriation is available shall not exceed by more than 10 percent the amounts estimated for such objects of expenditure by classes, in the schedule for the fiscal year 1941 appearing in the Budget for such fiscal year under this head, such amounts to be amended to reflect any proportionate change which each should bear in connection with the total amount appropriated herein, and any such excess up to 10 percent must be approved in writing by the Federal Security Administrator in such amounts as he shall designate."

So as to make the further provisos read:

Provided further, That expenditures under the several classes of objects of expenditure for which this appropriation is available shall not exceed by more than 10 percent the amounts estimated for such objects of expenditure by classes, in the schedule for the fiscal year 1941 appearing in the Budget for such fiscal year under this head, such amounts to be amended to reflect any proportionate change which each should bear in connection with the total amount appropriated herein, and any such excess up to 10 percent must be approved in writing by the Federal Security Administrator in such amounts as he shall designate: Provided further, That the foregoing proviso shall not apply, to whatever extent the President shall direct, in the event of an emergency declared, by the President, to exist.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement concerning this amendment, which I think is a step in the right direction. It is my understanding that until this year a lump sum was appropriated for the Civilian Conservation Corps, and those who operate the Civilian Conservation Corps could spend the money in any way they desired within the total lump sum.

I think most Senators will agree with me that that is not good procedure, and that the procedure we have applied to the regular agencies of government is one which should be applied to the C. C. C. In our regular appropriations we have an item for pay, an item for subsistence, an item for clothing, an item for transportation, and so on. This amendment requires the C. C. C. not to exceed the proportions for the various items which are set forth in the Budget. In my judgment, it would be better to itemize in the law all the various accounts for which money is appropriated.

I am happy to say that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], has requested that next year when the appropriations for the C. C. C. are under consideration they be submitted in such form that we can itemize the various amounts, as we can do for the Army, the Navy, and the other regular departments of the Government.

I merely wanted the RECORD to show that this is the prospect and express the hope that nothing will prevent its accomplishment next year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we did the best we could. We arranged the appropriations according to the Budget, which was the only guide we had as to the figures. Next year we will certainly have every item segregated, and the appropriation will be made along that line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 19, line 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Education—Vocational education", on page 24, line 20, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That the apportionment to the States shall be computed on the basis of not to exceed $3,000,000, as authorized by the acts approved June 2, 1920, June 5, 1924, June 9, 1930, June 30, 1932, August 14, 1935, and August 10 1939," and insert "That the apportionment to the States shall be computed in accordance with the acts approved June 2, 1920, June 5, 1924, June 9, 1930, June 30, 1932, August 14, 1935, and August 10, 1939, on the basis of not to exceed $3,000,000 for the fiscal year 1941", so as to read:

Provided, That the apportionment to the States shall be computed in accordance with the acts approved June 2, 1920, June 5, 1924, June 9, 1930, June 30, 1932, August 14, 1935, and August 10, 1939, on the basis of not to exceed $3,000,000 for the fiscal year 1941.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Tennessee explain the purpose of this change?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is largely a change in language only. If the Senator will read the two items he will find it is a transposition of terms in order to make the language clearer, that is all.

Mr. DANAHER. Is it not a plan of reappointment which will be applicable solely for the fiscal year 1941, as worded?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator tell us, then, why we should change it just for the year 1941, if we are not to effect a change in policy?

Mr. McKELLAR. The whole bill applies only to the year 1941. We are appropriating only for 1941, and it is made to accord with the remainder of the bill. There is nothing ulterior about the change, I will say to the Senator. The language was suggested by the Department as being the better way to handle the matter, and it was agreed to by the committee.

Mr. DANAHER. It is apparent that the act of June 2, 1920, and other acts enumerated, set up a policy of apportionment, and the apportionment now in existence under the acts referred to has been followed for many years. Now, apparently, we are to adopt a new policy for the year 1941, and I desire to know what the purpose is.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not a new policy for 1941 at all. It merely makes it applicable to the year 1941. No different policy is set up. It is exactly the same as it has been all the time.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 24, line 20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service", on page 35, line 5, before the word "of", to strike out "$1,600,000" and insert "$1,650,000", so as to read:

Disease and sanitation investigations: For carrying out the provisions of section 603 of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, and section 1 of the act of August 14, 1912, including rent and personnel and other services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and items otherwise properly chargeable to the appropriations for printing and binding, stationery, and miscellaneous and contingent expenses of the Federal Security Agency and Public Health Service, the provisions of section 6, act of August 23, 1912 (31 U. S. C. 669), to the contrary notwithstanding, the packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of the personal effects of commissioned officers, and other personnel of the Public Health Service upon permanent change of station, and including the purchase (not to exceed $2,500), exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles for official use in field work, $1,650,000, of which not to exceed $215,790 may be transferred, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to the appropriation "Pay, etc., commissioned officers, Public Health Service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Social Security Board", on page 37, line 21, after the word "members", to strike out "not to the compensation of persons or organizations temporarily employed for the special services described in the second proviso of this paragraph", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For all authorized and necessary administrative expenses of the Social Security Board in performing the duties imposed upon it by law, including three Board members, an executive director at a salary of $9,500 a year, and other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, including not to exceed $10,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Board when specifically authorized by the chairman and not to exceed $5,000 for travel in foreign countries; not to exceed $10,000 for payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of persons serving while away from their home, without other compensation, in an advisory capacity to the Social Security Board; expenses of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household goods and other personal effects (not to exceed in any case 5,000 pounds) of officers and employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty (including employees transferred from duty at Baltimore, Md., to duty at Washington, D. C.) when specifically authorized by the Board; supplies; reproducing, photographing, and all other equipment, office appliances, and labor-saving devices; services; advertising, postage, telephone, telegraph; newspapers and press clippings (not to exceed $1,500), periodicals, manuscripts and special reports, purchase and exchange of law-books and other books of reference; library membership fees or dues in organizations which issue publications to members only or to members at a lower price than to others, payment for which may be made in advance; alterations and repairs; rentals, including garages, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; expenses incident to moving offices of the Board from one building to another in Washington and from Baltimore to Washington; purchase and exchange, not to exceed $5,000, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles to be used only for official purposes in the District of Columbia and in the field; and miscellaneous items, including those for public instruction and information deemed necessary by the Board, $27,219,500: Provided, That the Board may expend, of the sum herein appropriated, not to exceed $100,000 for the procurement of information relating to the death of individuals entitled to benefits, receiving benefits, or upon whose death some other individual may become entitled to benefits, under title II of the Social Security Act, as amended, from proper State and local officials, including officials of the District of Columbia, Alaska, and Hawaii and for personal services in connection with the procurement of such information, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), and the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States: Provided further, That no salary shall be paid for personal services from the money herein appropriated under the heading "Social Security Board" in excess of the rates allowed by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended for similar services: Provided further, That this latter proviso shall not apply to the salaries of the Board members.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 18, after the numerals "1935", to insert "as amended", so as to read:

Grants to States for old-age assistance: For grants to States for assistance to aged needy individuals, as authorized in title I of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, as amended, $245,000,000, of which sum such amount as may be necessary shall be available for grants under such title I for any period in the fiscal year 1940 subsequent to March 31, 1940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 8, after the numerals "1935", to insert "as amended", so as to read:

Grants to States for unemployment-compensation administration: For grants to States for unemployment-compensation administration, as authorized in title III of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, as amended, including rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $61,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Youth Administration", on page 41, line 19, after the word "student", to strike out "aid" and insert "work program", and in line 24, after the word "persons", to strike out "$97,085,000" and insert "$95,984,000", so as to read:

PAR. 1. Part-time youth work and student work program: To enable the National Youth Administration, which is hereby extended to and including June 30, 1941, under the supervision and direction of the Federal Security Agency, to engage in the following types of programs for assistance to needy young persons, $95,984,000, namely.

(a) To provide part-time employment for needy young persons in schools, colleges, and universities to enable such persons to continue their education.

(b) To provide employment and training for unemployed young persons on public projects of the following types:

(I) The construction, improvement, and repair of non-Federal public buildings and grounds, parks, and other recreational facilities; bridges, highways, roads, streets, and alleys; airports and airway facilities; water and sanitation facilities; facilities for conservation; irrigation and flood control; pest eradication; and work on all other non-Federal public facilities, including cooperative associations receiving financial assistance from the Rural Electrification Administration or other public agencies;

(II) The construction, improvement, and repair of buildings or other facilities of Federal agencies;

(III) The production, repair, and renovation of goods, articles, and foodstuffs for needy individuals and for public institutions providing that products so produced do not replace normal purchases of such individuals or institutions;

(IV) Professional, clerical, and other nonconstruction services in the fields of education, recreation, research, professional, cultural, and clerical activities for the benefit of public and nonprofit organizations;

(V) The prosecution of work of the types enumerated above which involve the maintenance of young persons in camps, institutions, and other resident facilities.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Tennessee whether this is an actual reduction in the appropriation for the N. Y. A.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it is a mere change made at the request of the department. If the Senator will look on page 43 he will find, in lines 20 and 21, that the amount of $5,290,000 is increased to $6,376,000, and in that way the amount of $97,085,000 had to be reduced to $95,984,000.

Mr. GEORGE. So the amount actually appropriated is the same as appropriated by the House?

Mr. McKELLAR. The amount appropriated is the same as that appropriated by the House.

Mr. GEORGE. There has been no reduction?

Mr. McKELLAR. There has been no reduction.

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to hear that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 16, after "paragraph 1,", to strike out "$5,290,000" and insert "$6,376,000"; in line 21, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,290,000" and insert "$6,376,000"; and in line 22, after the word "amounts", to insert "not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $783,000", so as to read:

PAR. 2. Salaries and other administrative expenses: For personal services and necessary miscellaneous expenses in the District of Columbia and elsewhere for carrying out the administration of the programs set forth in paragraph 1, including supplies and equipment; purchase and exchange of books of reference, directories, and periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; travel expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings of officials and employees on official business; rental at the seat of government and elsewhere; purchase, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and such other expenses as may be necessary for the accomplishment of the objectives set forth in paragraph 1, $6,376,000: Provided, That the National Youth Administration may transfer from the above sum to the appropriation in paragraph 1 such amounts as will not be required for the purposes of this paragraph: Provided further, That there may be transferred from the above sum $6,376,000 to appropriations of the Treasury Department such amounts, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $783,000, as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget may determine to be proper, to reimburse such appropriations on account of expenditures therefrom in connection with the accomplishments of the purposes of the appropriations herein for the National Youth Administration.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. On page 38 appears an item, "Grants to States for old-age assistance." Am I to understand that to be the item for the contribution by the Federal Government to the States for the payment of old-age benefits?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I very much regret that under the rules of the Senate I cannot offer an amendment legislative in its character that would affect this particular item. It will be recalled that when we last had the social-security amendments before the Senate in July 1939, the Senate adopted an amendment offered by me, which would have provided that in the matter of assistance to aged individuals the Federal Government would make contribution of two-thirds, up to as much as $15 per month per individual, and that from that amount upward the usual contribution of 50 percent each way would be continued in the future.

The House of Representatives refused to take any action to consider the matter, and when it went to conference we were unable to secure any favorable action on the part of the House.

I should like at this point to have inserted in the RECORD a copy of the amendment which was adopted at that time by the Senate, and I should also like to have incorporated in the RECORD the vote in the Senate by which that amendment was adopted. It was adopted by a vote of 43 yeas and 35 nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 11, 1939]

PAYMENT TO STATES

SEC. 3. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for old-age assistance, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing January 1, 1940, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as old-age assistance, equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as old-age assistance under the State plan with respect to each needy individual who at the time of such expenditure is 65 years of age or older and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any such individual for any month as exceeds $40:

(A) Two-thirds of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditure with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $15 multiplied by the total number of such individuals who received old-age assistance for such month, plus

(B) One-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A), and (2) 5 percent of the amount of the payment under clause (1) of this subsection, which shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for old-age assistance, or both, and for no other purpose.

On page 4, line 8, strike out "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof "the State's proportionate share."

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 12, 1939]

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 35, as follows:

Yeas 43: Andrews, Barkley, Bilbo, Bone, Borah, Bulow, Chavez, Clark of Idaho, Connally, Downey, Ellender, Frazier, George, Guffey, Harrison, Hatch, Hayden, Hill, Hughes, La Follette, Lee, McKellar, Miller, Minton, Murray, Neely, Nye O'Mahoney Overton, Pittman, Reynolds, Russell, Schwartz, Schwellenbach, Sheppard, Shipstead, Slattery, Stewart, Thomas of Oklahoma, Thomas of Utah, Truman, Van Nuys, Wagner.

Nays 35: Adams, Austin, Barbour, Bridges, Burke, Byrd, Capper, Clark of Missouri, Danaher, Gerry, Gibson, Glass, Green, Gurney, Herring, Holman, Holt, Johnson of California, Johnson of Colorado, King, Lodge, Lucas, McNary, Maloney, Mead, Norris, Radcliffe, Reed, Taft, Tobey, Townsend, Vandenberg, Walsh, White, Wiley.

Not voting 18: Ashurst Bailey, Bankhead, Brown, Byrnes, Caraway, Davis, Donahey, Gillette, Hale, Logan, Lundeen, McCarran, Pepper, Smathers, Smith, Tydings, Wheeler.

So Mr. CONNALLY's amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I recall that the Senator presented an amendment, or a bill, at the time to which he refers—I believe it was in the form of an amendment—and I was very heartily in favor of it, and voted for it, and I was very sorry it was not enacted into law. I hope at the next session of Congress the Senator will reintroduce his proposal, as I should like to vote for it again.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

The Committee on Finance has appointed a subcommittee, of which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is chairman, for the purpose of studying the whole social-security system. I happen to have the honor of being a member of that subcommittee.

I desire to say that I expect to present this matter again to that subcommittee, and I am sure I will receive the approval of the subcommittee.

I have also introduced a bill to that effect, but being under the rules a revenue measure, I have not been able to get it before the Senate at this session. Of course, I shall not undertake to introduce any amendment at this time.

Mr. President, let me say that the amendment is a very moderate one, and as I see it, strikes at probably the weakest point in our present old-age assistance from the Federal viewpoint. Our theory of making contributions 50–50 to the States was a sound one if the economic condition of all the States were similar. That would require them to put up an equal amount. But as a matter of fact that is not the case, and, under the present system, it simply means that when a rich State does or is able to give its pensioners a large amount, and therefore they will need less from the Federal Government, the Federal Government will say "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath."

So you get a large amount from the State, and therefore you get another large amount from the Federal Government.

If you live in a poor State you get a mere little dole, and therefore you do not need any more, and we will give you a small-sized dole.

Mr. President, I regard it not as an extravagant, wild visionary proposal at all, but one which strikes at the weakest point in all our social-security legislation.

It seems to me that if the Federal Government owes any duty to an old person it owes the same duty to that person, whether he resides in Arizona or in Maine, and it is unwise and unsound to say to that Federal pensioner "We owe you a duty, but we do not owe you more than $2.20 if you live in one State, and we owe you $20 if you live in another State."

The pensions paid to retired Federal employees are not based upon any such scale. The pensions paid to retired soldiers and sailors are not based upon any such basis of economic theory. The pensions paid to veterans of the World War are not based on the theory that if a man lives in Indiana he should get a large pension, but if he lives in Arkansas he should get a small pension.

So, Mr. President, I want to call this matter again to the attention of the Senate. The Senate has already expressed itself by rather a substantial majority as favoring the principle involved, and the subcommittee of the Finance Committee expects to study this whole problem. I hope that as the result of that study we shall be able to come back to the Senate at the next session at least with legislation on this question, and I believe that if we should adopt some plan of this kind it would have much influence in allaying extravagant and visionary schemes that may be proposed.

I commend this subject to the attention and study of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, we have moved so rapidly along with the amendments that we have passed the point at which I wanted to offer an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we are not very far from the end of the bill. I shall be perfectly willing that the Senator be given the opportunity to ask for reconsideration of the particular amendment involved, and then offer the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida to the committee amendment.

Mr. MINTON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 16, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent that may be justified by differences in the cost of living" and insert "That the National Youth Administrator shall so distribute funds among the several States for the operation of the projects specified in paragraph 1 (b) of this title that the amount made available during the fiscal year for the operation of such projects for the benefit of the young people of each individual State shall bear the same ratio to the total funds made available for this purpose in all States as the youth population of that State bears to the total youth population of the United States with a variance not exceeding 5 percent", so as to read:

PAR. 4. The Administrator of the National Youth Administration shall, subject to the approval of the Federal Security Administrator, fix the monthly earnings and hours of work for youth workers engaged on work projects financed in whole or in part from the appropriation in paragraph 1, but such determination shall not have the effect of establishing a national average labor cost per youth worker on such projects during the fiscal year 1941 substantially different from the national average labor cost per such worker on such projects prevailing at the close of the fiscal year 1940: Provided, That the National Youth Administrator shall so distribute funds among the several States for the operation of the projects specified in paragraph 1 (b) of this title that the amount made available during the fiscal year for the operation of such projects for the benefit of the young people of each individual State shall bear the same ratio to the total funds made available for this purpose in all States as the youth population of that State bears to the total youth population of the United States with a variance not exceeding 5 percent.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I understood the clerk to read the amendment on page 44, beginning in line 16 through the word "living" in line 19, but there is further language following that in line 19 and ending in line 3, on page 45.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the amendment to strike out certain language and to insert other language was read as printed.

Mr. DANAHER. I failed to hear the clerk read the portion with respect to the insertion of certain language. Before we leave the subject, and reserving the right to comment on it, I wish the Senator from Tennessee would explain the plan of allocation of funds, which is contemplated in the language beginning in line 19, on page 44, and ending in line 3 on page 45.

Mr. McKELLAR. The explanation is to be found in the two provisos. The House provided:

That such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than may be justified by differences in the cost of living.

The Senate committee thought that that should be modified and changed and inserted in lieu thereof the following language:

That the National Youth Administrator shall so distribute funds among the several States for the operation of the projects specified in paragraph 1 (b) of this title that the amount made available during the fiscal year for the operation of such projects for the benefit of the young people of each individual State shall bear the same ratio to the total funds made available for this purpose in all States as the youth population of that State bears to the total youth population of the United States with a variance not exceeding 5 percent.

It was believed by the Senate committee that that was a fairer and a more just way of handling the matter, in order to prevent any discrimination of any kind in favor of anyone, and that to adjust differences which might arise, a leeway of 5 percent should be permitted to the Administrator. For that reason the language was changed.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator further, In what way does that formula vary from the present law?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no present law covering it. The provision is carried in legislation from year to year. The National Youth Administration was under the W. P. A. last year, as the Senator recalls, and was carried in legislation providing for the W. P. A.

However, there is a change by reason of a readjustment of agencies. Last year an amendment to the W. P. A. Act provided that the monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than can be justified by differences in the cost of living. The committee thought there ought to be a different way of arriving at it. I think the method adopted by the committee is fairer, and I think on reflection the Senator will regard it as a fairer way of adjusting the matter.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to make clear to the Senator that I have not voiced objection to the amendment. I am merely trying to understand it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure the Senator would not object to it.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me ask the Senator, Who ascertains what the total youth population is in any State?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Administrator in Washington ascertains it through the administrator in the State.

Mr. DANAHER. How does he do it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me read the present law. I read from the last W. P. A. Act:

The Administrator of the National Youth Administration shall fix the monthly earnings and hours of work for youth workers engaged on work projects of such Administration financed in whole or in part from the appropriation in this section, but such determination shall not have the effect of establishing a national average labor cost per youth worker on such projects during the fiscal year 1940 substantially different from the national average labor cost per such worker on such projects prevailing at the close of the fiscal year 1939.

When the House put in the provision which has already been read, and with which the Senator is familiar, the Senate committee came to the conclusion that it might work undue hardships, and so the committee substituted the language of the amendment which has been read. I am sure that on reflection the Senator will believe that that is the proper method.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 9, to strike out:

PAR. 12. No person shall be employed or retained in employment in any administrative position, or in any supervisory position on any project, under the appropriation in paragraph 1 or paragraph 2 unless such person before engaging in such employment subscribes to the following oath:

And in lieu thereof to insert:

PAR. 12. No person shall be employed or retained in employment in any administrative position, or in any supervisory position on any project, and no person shall receive assistance in the form of payments or otherwise from the United States for services rendered under the National Youth Administration, under the appropriation in paragraph 1 or paragraph 2 unless such person before engaging in such employment or receiving such assistance subscribes to the following oath:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title IV—National Labor Relations Board", on page 55, line 14, after the word "law", to strike out "$2,072,000" and insert "$2,272,000", so as to read:

Salaries: For three Board members of the National Labor Relations Board and other personnel services of the Board in the District of Columbia and elsewhere necessary in performing the duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law, $2,272,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 23, after the word "automobile", to strike out "$621,000" and insert "$674,000", so as to read:

Miscellaneous expenses (other than salaries): For all authorized and necessary expenditures, other than salaries, of the National Labor Relations Board in performing duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law, including rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; repairs and alterations; communication services; contract stenographic reporting services; lawbooks; books of reference; newspapers; periodicals; and operation, maintenance, and repair of one automobile, $674,000:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 5, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$125,000", so as to read:

Printing and binding: For all printing and binding for the National Labor Relations Board in Washington and elsewhere, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title VII—General provisions", on page 61, after line 7, to strike out:

SEC. 702. None of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the salary of any person appointed to a non-civil-service position, under the appropriations in the respective titles in this act, if the effect of such appointment is to increase the number of non-civil-service employees from the State of residence of any such non-civil-service appointee beyond the number of non-civil-service employees to which such State is entitled, under the appropriations in the respective titles of this act, on a basis of population: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any position, the appointment of which is made by the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is also proposed to renumber the sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerks will be authorized to renumber the sections.

That concludes the committee amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have two or three amendments to offer on behalf of the committee. I should like to offer those before we take up any others.

On behalf of the committee, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk, and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, on behalf of the committee, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, line 20, after the words "as follows:" it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated the Administrator may expend not to exceed $2,500 for temporary employment of persons, by contract or otherwise, for special services determined necessary by the Administrator, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and the civil-service and classification laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On behalf of the committee I offer another amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 39, line 10, after the figures "$61,000,000" it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Social Security Board is hereby authorized to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to the Postmaster General for postage, out of the amount herein appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary and at such intervals as shall be determined by the Board, under a procedure to be prescribed and agreed upon by and between the Board and the Postmaster General, for the transmission of official mail matter heretofore transmitted free pursuant to the provisions of section 13 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1933 (29 U. S. C. 491), and for the transmission of official mail matter in connection with the unemployment compensation administration of States receiving grants out of the funds herein appropriated; the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to extend to the States receiving such grants the privilege of transmission without prepayment of postage of official mail of the class upon which the Board is hereinabove authorized to certify amounts for payment of postage.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 35, line 5, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is reconsidered.

Mr. MINTON. On behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, line 4, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out "$1,650,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And including not to exceed $100,000 for researches, investigations, and studies relating to the cause, diagnosis, and control of pneumonia, influenza, and the common cold, $1,750,000.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the Senate will recall that late yesterday afternoon the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] offered this amendment, but owing to the parliamentary situation which then existed he was unable to obtain consideration for it. The Senator from Florida is unable to be present today. On his behalf, being in sympathy with the amendment, I am offering it at this time.

All the amendment seeks to do is to provide an additional $100,000 to be used for researches, investigations, and studies relating to the cause, diagnosis, and control of pneumonia, influenza, and the common cold.

Mr. President, it is common knowledge that these are probably the most noisome and destructive diseases known to the human family. It is also known to us all that at the present time such progress is being made in the field of research and study with reference to these particular diseases as to startle even the medical profession itself. So it seems to me that at this time the Government could well afford to provide the Public Health Service with an additional $100,000 which it may spend in the study and consideration of these particular diseases.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the United States Public Health Service request that sum, and for that purpose?

Mr. MINTON. No.

Mr. DANAHER. Whose idea is it?

Mr. MINTON. I think it is the idea of the Senator from Florida, although the Public Health Service, itself, feels that it could very wisely use this sum at this time in this particular field of endeavor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, perhaps I ought to say a word in this connection. This appropriation was not recommended by the committee, and was not asked for by the Department.

Common colds are bad. I believe I have them as frequently as anyone else. Sometimes I think I have them more frequently than anyone else in the world. However, I do not think it is the duty of the Government of the United States to spend $100,000 at this time for investigation and research as to the common cold, or even as to the other diseases mentioned. It is very fine work. I will agree to that. Any work of research along that line which will promote the health of the country is a good thing; but I do not believe there is any constitutional or legal warrant for it. The law does not now provide for it. Probably the law would have to be amended before it would be in order. I am not making a point of order against the amendment, because I feel sure the Senate will vote it down. It ought not to be in the bill. The committee has not recommended it. The House did not recommend it, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Does the Senator recall how much we are spending investigating diseases of animals, such as Bang's disease, and other diseases?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not happen to know.

Mr. OVERTON. It is a very large amount, is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not happen to be a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I cannot answer. I shall have to ask some member of that committee.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is a very able member of the Appropriations Committee. How much is being spent for the eradication of such pests as the grasshopper?

Mr. McKELLAR. Several million dollars.

Mr. OVERTON. Does not the Senator think it would be wise for us to do something in the interest of human beings?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we are doing many things in the interest of human beings; but unfortunately I do not think we are warranted, either by our Constitution or laws, in making such independent investigations, especially when they are not recommended by the Department or by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. OVERTON. I assume that the United States Public Health Service would have no objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think any department of the Government would object to any appropriation given to it for any purpose whatsoever.

Mr. OVERTON. I think that is a pretty broad statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we can all agree to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator have any information as to how many hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent by such research organizations as the Rockefeller Foundation and others, in trying to find a remedy for the common cold, and methods of treatment and prevention?

Mr. McKELLAR. Enormous sums are being spent all the time by the medical profession.

There is one further objection to this amendment which strikes me with considerable force. It was first asked that $50,000 be used for this purpose. The testimony was that the Department was entitled to the $50,000 for the following reason: Last year we appropriated $50,000 to ascertain whether or not the poisons used in sprays for the purpose of killing insects on apples, oranges, and other fruits were injurious to human life or human health. They spent that $50,000, made their report, and finished the entire subject. Then, some officers of the Health Service felt that that $50,000 ought to be appropriated for this purpose, which is an entirely different purpose. Their idea was that having once been appropriated for the Department, that appropriation ought to remain with the Department for all time. I hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is there in the bill any appropriation of any kind for the purpose contemplated by the amendment of the Senator from Florida? I am not thoroughly familiar with all the appropriations in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes.

Mr. MINTON. How much?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is an appropriation of $1,650,000 in this bill.

Mr. MINTON. For what?

Mr. McKELLAR. For researches into various diseases. Researches and examinations are conducted. The Department can make their studies of such diseases as they think proper. There is no question about the money already being in this bill. The amount is $1,650,000, according to the Senate committee amendment, which has once been adopted and has now been reconsidered. The House provided an appropriation of $1,600,000, so the appropriation is obliged to be at least $1,600,000 for the purpose of these investigations.

Mr. MINTON. That would include, I presume, the study of the other diseases mentioned in the amendment; but this amendment would earmark $100,000 for the special study of the diseases which are the most common, among them—colds. It is time, I think the Senator will agree, that some action should be taken along that line.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think colds are most common, but I am not sure whether the other diseases mentioned in the amendment are among the most common or not.

Mr. MINTON. A chart which has been placed upon our desks shows that, at least in the Army, influenza is the cause of most of the sick reports.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and we appropriated a large sum in the Army bill for investigations to ascertain about that. As I stated in the committee, I recall very distinctly that in 1917, when I happened to be a member of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, while the World War was in progress, influenza and common colds were even more prevalent within the Army and in the country generally than they are now. Influenza seems to have been epidemic in a great many States, and we did not have the proper means of treating it in the Army.

But the Congress appropriated money to investigate and combat that disease, and the disease was treated and the soldiers were greatly benefited by the treatment.

Under the circumstances I believe we should not increase the appropriation for the purpose contemplated. The Department has not asked for it; there is no Budget estimate for it; it has not been passed upon by the House, and both the House committee and the Senate committee left it out. I think the Senate ought to leave it out.

Mr. MINTON. Let me ask the Senator from Tennessee if it is not true, if he knows——

Mr. McKELLAR. If I know, I will be glad to answer.

Mr. MINTON. That since the Budget estimates were prepared there has been revealed to the public by scientists and doctors wonderful advances which have been made in the study and treatment of the diseases referred to in the amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; there have been.

Mr. MINTON. I recall some reports in the newspapers quite recently showing that there has been put upon the market or brought to the attention of the scientific world and the medical world a medicine that is very effective in the treatment of pneumonia. If these advances are being made so rapidly and so startling in this particular field, may not the Federal Government spend $100,000 in that field to advantage at this particular time?

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator entirely that tremendous advances have been made in researches by the medical profession into a great many diseases, and pneumonia and other diseases are included among them. I think it is clear that the medical profession is making the greatest strides in its history in its research and discoveries. I think the medical profession is doing a wonderful work. It is doing it on its own initiative, and I do not believe that the expenditure of $100,000 for the Public Health Service in this respect would be of any advantage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin be kind enough to yield to me, as I have to leave the Chamber, so that I may offer a clarifying amendment to which there is no objection? If there shall be objection, I will immediately withdraw it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well.

Mr. BYRNES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On line 10, page 50, after the words "United States", it is proposed to insert:

And to persons receiving assistance in the form of payments from the United States for services rendered under the National Youth Administration.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to make clear that young men, young boys, receiving payment from the National Youth Administration for working in a college or other educational institution may, in case of injury, be entitled to the same benefits under the Compensation Act as are other young men who are the beneficiaries of the National Youth Administration but who are employed at some place other than in a college or school.

The amendment is necessary because of an interpretation by the attorney for the Employees' Compensation Commission. As a result, the situation in New York and in some other States is quite bad, because the law requires that these employees be insured.

There is no objection to this amendment on the part of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, unfortunately the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, is necessarily absent today, and I am authorized by him to state that if he had been able to be present he would offer the amendment which I am about to offer. Therefore I offer it on behalf of the Senator from Virginia and myself.

On page 32, at the beginning of line 18, I move to strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$7,000,000."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. This morning the senior Senator from Virginia called me and stated that he would necessarily have to leave town today and would not be here, and he wanted me to pair with him, he being very much in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. I supported the amendment in the committee, but the committee voted me down. I am now representing the committee, and for that reason I am going to vote against the Senator's amendment. However, I shall be paired with the Senator from Virginia on it. It is an amendment about which the Senator from Virginia feels very deeply, and I am going to pair with him without transfer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator for his statement.

Mr. President, I have the honor to be the co-author of the enabling legislation, commonly called the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill, which inaugurated the conservative but carefully considered program to control and eradicate venereal diseases.

I wish briefly, Mr. President, to summarize the facts showing the importance of controlling venereal diseases and the necessity for carrying forward the program which up to now has been so successfully administrated under the direction of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, Dr. Thomas Parran.

First, I wish to discuss and to summarize the importance of controlling the disease of syphilis. That disease, Mr. President, is responsible for 15 percent of blindness; it is responsible for 10 percent of the insanity in the United States. There are 8,000 syphilitic insane admitted to overcrowded institutions for the insane throughout the 48 States and the District of Columbia. There are 43,000 beds occupied and maintained in public and private institutions in the United States for mental care of patients whose mental disability is due to syphilis.

Syphilis can be eradicated if we but have the courage, the vision, and the determination to carry on the work which has already been begun. If we allow only $2 a day as an estimate of the cost of caring for the mental manifestations of syphilis—and I may say that that is a very low estimate—it is costing the people of the United States $31,000,000 a year to care for this one aspect of the tragic result of syphilis, a disease which science and the medical profession now have the means of treating so that it can be eradicated, or at least brought under control.

Mr. President, in the face of such a situation it is not economy for the Congress to fail to provide the additional $2,000,000 authorized for this purpose this year in the La Follette-Bulwinkle Act. I may say, in passing, that in drawing that legislation we consulted with the best authorities in the United States. We arrived at very conservative estimates for the gradual stepping-up of the program in order that it might be carefully developed and might proceed with a reasonable degree of conservatism, so that in the initial stages the work done should be sound, and its efficacy demonstrated, before large sums of money were provided.

Furthermore, let me say that $10,000,000 a year is spent for the care of syphilitic blind in the United States.

Sixty thousand babies are born in this country every year with congenital syphilis, which medical science, if given an opportunity, can prevent.

Forty thousand persons die in the United States each year from heart disease caused by syphilis.

One hundred and sixty thousand persons in the United States who have heart disease due to syphilis are incapacitated.

Today syphilis can be virtually stamped out and brought under control; and a marvelous characteristic of the treatment now provided for syphilis is that within a very short space of time after a patient undergoes treatment it becomes impossible for the patient further to communicate the disease. In short, medical science has provided us with what may be termed a chemical quarantine.

In the Scandinavian countries this disease has become a rarity because of their prolonged program for its eradication and control. Likewise, we have in our own country examples which indicate what can be done if this program is carried out on a sufficiently broad scale.

I wish to read briefly from the statement of Dr. N. A. Nelson, of the Massachusetts Department of Health, appearing in the House hearings on the pending bill at page 987. In 1915 Massachusetts, without Federal assistance, inaugurated a program which it has continued to follow. Dr. Nelson said:

A study of syphilis in pregnant women made between 1915 and 1919 disclosed that about 10 percent of the 10,000 examined had the disease. Another study of 17,000 pregnant women, made between the years 1930 to 1935, disclosed that only about 2 percent had the disease. This was in the face of the fact that a far more sensitive blood test was in use during the latter period. It has been concluded, therefore, that syphilis in pregnancy has been reduced by 75 or 80 percent, at least, during the last 10 or 15 years.

Shall we quibble over $2,000,000 when expert testimony is available to the Members of this body showing what can be done to prevent the terrible scourge which this disease inflicts upon its victims?

Continuing from Dr. Nelson:

In 1939 only 27 cases of congenital syphilis were reported in infants from the entire State, and the largest clinics in the State report admissions of not more than half a dozen new cases of congenital infection in children of all ages each year.

Admissions to mental-disease hospitals for, and deaths from, general paralysis of the insane have declined at least 75 percent during the last 25 years.

In 1926, the first year for which data are available as to the stage of syphilis reported, the reported rate of early syphilis was 46 per 100,000 population. In 1939 the rate was 13.9, only 30 percent of the earlier rate.

I also wish to quote in this connection from a statement by Dr. Carl N. Neupert, of the Wisconsin State Board of Health. Wisconsin inaugurated a program in 1919, and has carried it on effectively ever since.

Dr. Neupert says:

The objectives in this program are primarily humanitarian and economic. From an economic standpoint, investments in prevention, and therefore reduction in incidence, of syphilis can be shown to produce bountiful returns. An insane hospital of 800 beds located near the State capital showed, in an initial survey, that 13 percent of its inmates were there as a result of syphilis; 10 years later, a similar survey revealed that this percentage had been reduced to less than 4. It has been accurately determined that each case of insanity due to syphilis in this hospital costs the State $5,000 for care, and so forth, from the time of entry until death. On this basis, if the 13-percent ratio had continued, there would have been 270 more cases due to syphilis in that hospital during those 10 years than there were. This represents a saving of $1,350,000. With similar circumstances obtaining in the northern State hospital for the insane of equal size, there was an additional saving during that period of $1,350,000, or a total of $2,700,000. This saving was only one of the many resulting from an expenditure of tax moneys totaling $683,025.13 as shown above.

Mr. President, I was informed by a member of the faculty of the medical school of the University of Wisconsin that the program in that State has gone forward so successfully that it is now becoming difficult to find in a clinical patient an original lesion due to syphilis for demonstration purposes in teaching medical students dermatology and syphilology. So it cannot be denied that we have within our grasp the means of virtually stamping out this horrible scourge and bringing it under control in this country; and all I am pleading with the Senate for is the amount authorized in the original act, a sum of $2,000,000, in addition to what the committee and the House have seen fit to allow.

Mr. President, great credit is due to Dr. Thomas Parran since he became Surgeon General for the leading part he has taken in breaking down the taboo against the discussion of venereal disease. Syphilis, however, has certain dramatic, though ghastly, characteristics which appeal to the imagination and which make it possible to dramatize its effects and to make a public appeal for a campaign to eradicate it or at least to bring it under control.

Unfortunately, that is not true of gonorrhea, which is a menace to the health of men, women, and children all over the United States. In the summary which I am about to make I am leaning very heavily upon the testimony and upon the masterful book written by Dr. Pelouze, of the medical school of the University of Pennsylvania. He is one of the outstanding experts in the United States, if not in the world, on the subject of gonorrhea.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. BONE. I do not desire to interrupt the thread of the Senator's argument, but I wonder if any of the data he has before him indicate what part syphilis plays in heart disease.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, 40,000 people in the United States die every year as the result of heart disease caused by syphilis, and 160,000 persons are incapacitated every year as the result of syphilitic heart disease.

Next to the common cold, gonorrhea takes second place in the order of frequency of disease in the United States. There are three times as many new cases of gonorrhea a year as there are of syphilis. There are 3.5 percent new cases of gonorrhea in the armed forces of the United States as compared with syphilis. In contrast with syphilis, gonorrhea is transmissible as long as one germ is present. In other words, under the treatment of syphilis, as I have pointed out, practically as soon as the patient comes under the treatment a tentative quarantine is produced, and so long as the patient remains under treatment the disease cannot be communicated. But unfortunately that is not so in the case of gonorrhea, for so long as one germ is present the disease may be communicated to others. In other words, gonorrhea is a 100-percent public-health problem.

Gonorrhea deals more lightly with the adult male, as compared with females of all ages, and perhaps for that reason it has in the past been regarded as not so serious a menace. But Dr. Pelouze, after his exhaustive studies, is responsible for the statement that gonorrhea is responsible for 30 percent of the childless marriages in the United States. It causes 7 percent of the blindness in children in this country. There is no way of measuring the great amount of invalidism gonorrhea produces in women. It is certainly recognized by all students as being the cause of many operations on the female organs of generation. It is one of the great hidden causes of marital unhappiness and divorce.

Gonorrhea infects many thousands of our female children, and produces in many of them, through the isolation of the old treatment, a picture in practice of personality changes, which unfortunately in many of them last throughout their lives.

In children of school age, thousands of whom contract the disease, it causes prolonged and serious interruption of their education. In older girls the disease commonly causes mental scars which not infrequently turn them toward prostitution. In young men it frequently acts as a deterrent to marriage.

Fortunately, within the last couple of years great progress has been made in coping with this disease. Sulfanilimid and sulfapyridin are producing remarkable results. There is also another one of this ring, sulfathiasol, which has not yet been released by the Food and Drug Administration, but Dr. Pelouze, in his testimony before the committee, stated that it gives hope of all the effectiveness of sulfanilimid and sulfapyridin without containing their poisonous principle. If, under sufficient and careful clinical and laboratory tests, this should prove to be so, thus enabling it to be utilized by the Public Health Service and by practicing physicians, there is hope that this drug can be administered to ambulatory patients without fear of any of the systemic complications involved in the utilization of sulfanilimid and sulfapyridin. As many Senators perhaps know, those two drugs produce complications, and sometimes a form of temporary anemia which makes it necessary to keep the patient under close clinical observation as to the content of the blood and its make-up. But if this new drug should prove to be as effective as is now hoped it may be entirely possible to treat persons without their being hospitalized, or without their being brought under such close clinical observation as is now necessary.

Mr. President, we are ready to make a great medical and educational attack upon gonorrhea, but funds are lacking.

I am making an especial appeal for the adoption of the pending amendment, proposed on behalf of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and myself, in order that the educational and medical attack upon gonorrhea may be carried forward hand in hand with the wonderful progress which is being made in controlling and eradicating syphilis.

Let me briefly summarize the great advance which has already been made since the enactment of the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill. In 1936 there were 800 clinics in the United States handling and treating venereal diseases. On January 1, 1940, there were 2,563 such clinics in the United States.

Last year 103,000 men, women, and children were discharged with their diseases completely cured or arrested.

In 1930, 7,700,000 doses of arsenical drugs were given. In 1939, 12,300,000 doses were given.

There has been a fivefold increase in the amount of free drugs distributed by the States between 1936 and 1940.

The total number of syphilitic patients admitted to clinics in 1936 was 80,000. In 1940 the number was 250,000.

Forty-four thousand patients suffering with gonorrhea were admitted in 1936 and 72,000 in 1940.

There has been a 52-percent increase in blood tests during the first 6 months of 1940.

Mr. President, the States and their various subdivisions are doing their full share in cooperation with the effort being put forth by the Federal Government. In the last fiscal year Federal funds allotted to the States amounted to $4,379,250. The amount appropriated by State, city, and county governments was in excess of $6,000,000.

The total administrative expense for this program amounts to only 3.75 percent. The States have budgeted 78 percent for treatment, laboratory facilities, case finding, and case-holding efforts, showing that a very large percentage of the funds made available for the Federal Government, the cities, States, and counties is going for the actual treatment of patients. The remaining 22 percent was budgeted for public and professional education, training of technicians, such as doctors and nurses, and for special consultation service, embracing larger centers and rural centers so as to improve diagnosis and treatment.

No one denies that this program is being efficiently administered, and that it is bringing great hope to thousands upon thousands of people all over the United States. There is urgent need that the program should go forward and not be held merely in status quo. If the Congress should fail to provide the money authorized in the original act, many of the States, which, as I have pointed out, are now, with their subdivisions, providing more money than is the Federal Government, would feel that the Federal Government had lost its zeal for this program, and the effect might be disastrous.

Mr. President, we are spending $2,000,000,000 this year for national defense. Is it too much to ask $2,000,000 in this amendment in order to provide additional services to the people of this country in eradicating these two scourges?

In this connection I desire to read a letter dated February 17, 1940, from an authority whom I am sure no one will rise on this floor to question. It is a letter from Tucson, Ariz., addressed to Representative LOUIS LUDLOW, of the House of Representatives, and signed by Gen. John J. Pershing. The letter is as follows:

TUCSON, ARIZ., February 17, 1940.

Congressman LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: In your letter of January 31 you request a statement of my views on the question of social diseases.

Upon our entry into the World War it was well known that these diseases had always been a serious handicap to the effectiveness of armies. At the outset, therefore, we instituted regulations by which we were able to keep the incidence of venereal diseases at a lower rate than ever before known in our own or any other army. A very different and appalling national situation is presented by statistics today. As military preparedness depends largely upon the health of our Nation, the prevalence of these diseases would be a serious problem in a national emergency. Moreover, we owe it to posterity to do something about it.

The Public Health Service has undertaken to solve this problem, and I am gratified to know that you and the Appropriations Committee are interested in its importance.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. PERSHING.

Mr. President, as many Senators know, Army maneuvers on a large scale are to take place this year. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to a chart taken from the San Antonio Evening News of March 17, 1940, which shows that all States in the Nation, except 15, are furnishing troops for the mammoth third Army maneuvers. Such large concentrations of troops, drawn from various sections of the United States create an emergency problem, so far as the control of these two diseases is concerned, and it is upon that basis, in part, that I appeal for the amendment which I have tendered.

I wish to read a brief excerpt from an article appearing in Time Magazine of April 8, 1940:

At Fort Benning, Ga., where new ways and weapons are tested, the soldiers of this new Army acted pretty much as soldiers always have. On their nights off they sought liquor and girls in the dollar-houses and tawdry taverns of staid old Columbus, Ga., or in the honky-tonk and juke joints across the Chattahoochee River in wild, wide-open Phoenix City, Ala. The liquor was there, but the girls were gone or going, lining the roadsides in their bright dresses to bum rides to fairer pastures. This seemed strange behavior, for troops by the thousands were assembling in the South for maneuvers at Fort Benning this month, in Louisiana and Texas next month. By military precedent older than Xerxes, the commercial ladies should have followed the soldiers, not run away.

They were fleeing because mustachioed Brig. Gen. Asa L. Singleton noted an alarming increase of venereal disease at Fort Benning. Forthwith he laid down the law to Columbus and Phoenix City: Run out the prostitutes or both towns would be declared "out of bounds" for Fort Benning troops.

Mr. President, as I stated a moment ago, we are spending approximately $2,000,000,000 this year for national defense. It is my contention, and I think it is a fair construction to put upon General Pershing's letter that it is his construction, that the best national defense is a strong and healthy population. The large concentration of troops for maneuvers presents an emergency problem. My appeal to the Senate, Mr. President, is that, as we prepare to make America strong against any foreign foe, we shall not fail to carry on a successful domestic war here at home against two of the most deadly enemies to the health and happiness of the people of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the pending amendment, offered jointly by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] would increase the appropriation to fight syphilis in the United States from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000.

I desire to speak briefly in support of the amendment.

At the outset I should like to congratulate the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Because of his efforts, which commenced in 1936, and which were followed in 1937 by the passage of the La Follette-Bulwinkle Act, an effective campaign against syphilis in the United States was commenced for the first time.

As a practical example, I call the attention of the Senate to the case of my own State, the Commonwealth of Kentucky. In 1930, 680 new cases of syphilis were reported in that State In 1939, 9,722 new cases were reported. I am not persuaded that there were not as many cases in 1930 as in 1939, but before a partially adequate treatment was provided those cases were never reported to the public-health authorities.

I think we are exceedingly fortunate in our State to have Dr. Arthur McCormick as commissioner of public health. He and his father have guided the destinies of the health of the people of Kentucky for more than half a century.

Further to indicate my interest in and to urge upon the Members of the Senate their support of this very important amendment, I refer to some remarks which I made before the committee when the question was brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations.

As the result of the passage of the original La Follette-Bulwinkle Act, clinics were organized and are now in operation in 106 of the 120 counties of Kentucky. Only patients who are known to be unable to pay for treatment at the hands of private physicians are admitted to these clinics, and 70.9 percent of the new cases of syphilis discovered in Kentucky in 1939 were economically unable to afford adequate treatment for their respective syphilitic infections. It is known that of the 6,892 new cases admitted for treatment in the public clinics, 45 percent were female and 55 percent were male cases. In 66 percent of the female cases the ages of the women suffering from the disease were from 15 to 35 years—the period when women bear the most children. It is known that except for this treatment potential mothers would have gone untreated, and the result would have been, in 5 or 6 cases, the birth either of a dead child or of a child infected with syphilis.

There are approximately 2,800,000 people in Kentucky, about 227,000 of whom are colored, who suffer from syphilis in the ratio of about 15 to 1 as compared with the white people.

I think we should make a serious mistake if we should refuse to appropriate an additional $2,000,000, and thus cause the public-health authorities of the several States in the United States to let up in a very important work which, in my judgment, if permitted to be continued, will eventually result in the almost complete eradication of this dreaded disease.

Mr. President, I ask that a portion of my statement before the Committee on Appropriations, found in the committee hearings beginning on page 119 and continuing to page 122, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEASURES FOR CONTROL OF SYPHILIS IN KENTUCKY

Senator CHANDLER. Measures for the control of syphilis in Kentucky have become more widespread during the past year than ever before in the history of the State. This intensified effort was made possible by the passage of the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill in 1937. Some idea may be obtained of the rapidity of the growth of measures designed to control syphilis in the State when it is pointed out that there were only 680 new cases reported to the State department of health in 1930, while in 1939 there were 9,722 such cases reported. This astonishing increase, which has been gradual year by year over the intervening years, does not indicate, we believe, that there was more syphilis in Kentucky in 1939 than there was in 1930, but merely, with increased facilities for finding and treating syphilis, we have been able to bring a greater proportion of the infected population under control.

PROGRESS MADE

When Kentucky first obtained its pro rata share of the $3,000,000 appropriated under the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill in 1938, approximately 2,000 more new patients were brought under treatment during the first fiscal year after these new funds were made available. During the following year, 1939, when $5,000,000 was made available, with Kentucky receiving its pro rata share, the State had approximately doubled the number of patients under treatment during these 2 years when contrasted with any similar period previous to having available these funds. Kentucky is not a wealthy State; in fact, it is among the poorest of the States when comparison is made on the basis of per capita income. Without the availability of such funds as come to the State through the authority of the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill, it would have been practically impossible for it to have accomplished such a result.

Syphilis control in the State of Kentucky is being effected by all the avenues which public health and medical science afford for the effective handling of the problem. The people of the State are being offered public-health education through every available channel. They are being made more and more conscious of the fact that syphilis is an outstanding public-health menace. Their willingness to cooperate in this campaign is attested to by the rapidity and extent of the gains thus far made.

CLINICS

Another esesntial in the control of syphilis is the organization of clinics, manned by trained personnel, and readily available to the infected population, particularly to those people who are suffering from the disease and who, because of economic need, are unable to afford treatment from their own resources. Such clinics have been organized and are now in operation in 106 of the 120 counties of Kentucky, and for those counties in which no clinic exists there is not one in which there is not a clinic available to its infected people in its neighboring county.

LABORATORIES

An essential in the control of syphilis, as well as the control of the other venereal diseases, is the availability of laboratory service to assist in the diagnosis and detection of these diseases. Since the availability of funds appropriated under the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill, the serologic laboratory for the diagnosis of syphilis in the State Department of Health of Kentucky, has been doubled in its capacity. Whereas, before the availability of these funds the serologic laboratory was running approximately 250 blood specimens a day, the same laboratory is now running approximately 500 a day. This laboratory provides for testing blood specimens submitted, not only from the public-health clinics of the State, but from practicing physicians throughout the State, in its effort to aid in unconvering and bringing under treatment as many cases of the disease as possible.

EFFECT IN KENTUCKY OF REDUCTION IN APPROPRIATION

If the sum made available during the coming fiscal year is reduced from $5,000,000 to $3,000,000, it will mean that two-fifths or approximately 4,000 of the patients being treated in the public-health clinics of Kentucky will be deprived of further treatment. This means that these patients will be dropped, many of them to relapse into communicable stages of the disease, and thereby become flagrant public-health menaces and many of them will suffer the known consequences of inadequate treatment, which means total or partial invalidism resulting in their care at the expense of the taxpayers in the State's eleemosynary institutions.

To diminish the appropriation under the authority of the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill from $5,000,000 to $3,000,000 would make largely ineffective both our recently passed premarital and anticipated prenatal laws. It is conservatively estimated that these two laws will add between two and three thousand cases of syphilis annually to the case load that is already being treated in the public-health clinics of the State. At present it requires all of the funds which the State has available to carry its case load and these facilities would obviously be inadequate with an added two to three thousand cases yearly.

PROBLEM OF SYPHILIS CONTROL IN KENTUCKY

The following facts will serve to emphasize more definitely the problem of syphilis control in Kentucky.

During the calendar year 1939 there was a total of 9,722 new cases of syphilis reported to the State department of health by physicians and health officers throughout the State. Of this 9,722 new patients 6,892 of them were reported as being admitted to their first treatment in the public-health clinics; that is, 70.9 percent of the newly reported cases of syphilis during 1939 were placed under treatment in the public-health clinics of the State. Only patients who are known to be unable to pay for treatment at the hands of private physicians are admitted to these clinics, hence 70.9 percent of the new cases of syphilis that were discovered in Kentucky in 1939 were economically unable to afford adequate treatment for their respective syphilitic infections.

Of the 6,892 new patients that were admitted to treatment in public-health clinics in 1939, 3,154, or 45 percent, were females while 3,738, or 54 percent, were males. Something of the importance of the characteristics of this group of patients is realized when it is pointed out that 2,087, or 66 percent, of the females were between the ages of 15 to 35 years, hence of the age when women bear most children. It is known that these potential mothers, had they gone untreated, would have given birth to dead or diseased babies 5 times out of 6 pregnancies.

Something of the importance of the age distribution of these cases is emphasized when it is realized that 276, or 4 percent, of the 6,892 new cases admitted to the public-health clinics for treatment were under 15 years of age, and of this number 221, or 80 percent, were children who contracted the disease before their birth and were thereby absolute innocent child victims of syphilis.

Further, when studied as to age distribution, of the 6,892 new patients admitted to the clinics, 3,079, or 45 percent, of them were between the ages of 15 and 30 years. These patients were found to have the disease during the most active years of their lives when most of them were just starting their careers and were least able to afford adequate treatment.

Further, with respect to the age distribution of these patients, 3,537, or 51 percent, of the 6,892 new cases admitted to clinics were in people over 30 years of age. Of this 3,537 patients, a total of 3,033, or 85.7 percent, of them were in the late stages of the disease; that is, they had the disease in the stage which sends many of them to the insane asylums and hospitals because of syphilitic brain and heart diseases.

When this group of patients is studied with respect to color, it is found that 3,502 of the total of 6,892 new patients admitted to clinics were white people. Since the white population of the State was 2,770,000 in 1939, the attack rate per thousand white population of the State was 1.3 cases per thousand. Of the total of 6,892 patients admitted to clinics, 3,390 of them were Negroes. With the Negro population of the State at 225,000 in 1939, the attack rate for the colored people of the State would be 15 cases per thousand population. This means that syphilis attacks Negroes approximately 12 times more frequently than it attacks white people. As is well known, people of the colored race are least able to pay for adequate treatment for syphilis, and therefore, unless funds are provided, most, if not all, of the colored people who have syphilis will go inadequately treated or entirely untreated.

PUBLIC-HEALTH CLINICS

In the matter of treating patients in the public-health clinics of the State of Kentucky it should be pointed out that during calendar year 1939 there was an average of 7,372 patients under treatment for syphilis in these clinics each month. Each one of these patients was given an average of 2.9 treatments per month. If each patient received an average of 2.9 treatments per month then they received an average of 35 treatments per patient for the year of 1939. Progress in the treatment of syphilis in Kentucky may be emphasized when it is pointed out that for the preceding year, 1938, calculated on the same basis, it was found that patients received an average of only 12 treatments per patient for the year, whereas, this average was only 3 treatments per patient for the year of 1937. This is pointed out in order to emphasize the influence that the increase in funds has brought about in the adequacy of the treatment of syphilis in Kentucky since the passage of the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill.

PROGRESS IN CONTROL OF VENEREAL DISEASES

It was hoped by all health authorities throughout the country that the appropriation under the authority of the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill would have been increased from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940–1941, and progress would continue. If this appropriation is not increased, it certainly should not be diminished and progress curtailed. Thus far, progress in venereal-disease control has been gratifying, even though all the money yet appropriated by Federal, State, and local governments and other agencies does not yet approximate a conservative estimate considered by medical and public-health experts to be necessary for the most effective public-health campaign against syphilis and other venereal diseases.

Senator CHANDLER. I do not need to take further time of the committee except to say to you that I think that they are doing very fine work. I think it ought to be continued, and such appropriations ought to be made as you can spare under the circumstances, because they are doing a fine job.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I urge Members of the Senate to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered jointly by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The amendment was agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTAL WATER FOR IRRIGATED AREAS

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, it is not my intention to take more than a few moments of the time of the Senate. The matter I wish to discuss deals with reclamation appropriations as they affect Idaho. As a bill affecting those appropriations will be before the Senate in a few days I desire to make a statement at this time.

Mr. President, it was my good fortune during my previous term in the Senate to serve as chairman of the Committee on Reclamation. At that time I made a very careful study and interested myself in a movement to secure supplemental water for the many irrigated areas which lacked sufficient water to make farming operations successful. In the region of the United States where irrigation is used, the element most important to the success of the farmer is an ample supply of water.

Many farmers from other sections of the country occasionally express the fear that the development of these irrigated areas will mean additional surpluses of farm crops. This is entirely a mistaken idea. These western areas have proven to be especially adapted to the production of fruits, vegetables, beans, peas, sugar beets, potatoes, grains, and other crops, and a very profitable livestock industry which includes cattle, sheep, and dairying has been developed. Approximately 75 percent of the products in this section are consumed in the immediate area of production.

The fear of potential competition from the newly irrigated lands of the West should be immediately dispelled when we realize the nature of the crops produced. Representative WHITE of Idaho in a recent speech before the Rivers and Harbors Congress, pointed out that only 2 percent of the cotton grown in the United States, six-tenths of 1 percent of the wheat, and less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the corn is produced on Federal irrigation projects. On the other hand, were it not for the corn and other grains that western cattle consume on middle western feed lots, surpluses would be far more serious.

Moreover, the people whose homes in the West have been made possible by irrigation, form a splendid and steadily consuming market for products produced in our big industrial sections. A survey in 1937 by the Idaho State Planning Board of incoming shipments received at stations in the Boise Project area alone gives us an indication of the extent of the market which Federal reclamation projects create. During that year more than 300 carloads of foodstuffs were shipped into the Boise area from States as far east as Massachusetts and as far southeast as Florida. From Michigan came 312 carloads of automobiles and trucks, this exclusive of the automotive equipment manufactured in Michigan and assembled in California that came to Idaho. The area consumed in that single year more than 50 carloads of household equipment, also from Michigan. Sixty-five carloads of farm supplies came from Minnesota; 114 carloads of oils, greases, steel products, and so forth, from Pennsylvania; 57 carloads of motor vehicles, building materials, and miscellaneous merchandise from Missouri. Louisiana, Arkansas, Florida, Alabama, Connecticut, Kentucky, Nebraska, Ohio, and Indiana are other States which shipped substantial quantities of their products to the Boise region during that year. Such markets as are provided by the western irrigated sections are far too important to the economic welfare of our Nation to be neglected.

The results of the Idaho survey are summarized in Senate Document 36 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, National Irrigation Policy and Its Significance. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the portion of the document dealing with this survey printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUMMARY OF THE SURVEY BY THE IDAHO STATE PLANNING BOARD OF INCOMING RAILROAD SHIPMENTS RECEIVED AT STATIONS OF THE BOISE PROJECT AREA IN 1937 AS IT APPEARS IN SENATE DOCUMENT NO. 36 OF THE SEVENTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

The Boise survey, listing the incoming commodities received in carload lots, revealed that more than 300 carloads of foodstuffs were shipped to the area in that year from States as far east as Massachusetts and New York and as far in the southeast as Florida. Manufactured goods shipped to the project included automobiles and trucks, tractors, farm machinery and equipment, household furniture, and miscellaneous merchandise from 30 States of the Midwest, the South, and the East.

A check of purchases by typical individual farmers of the Boise and other Idaho projects indicates that approximately 75 percent of their average annual income is expended for the purchase of eastern manufactured articles and products.

* * * * * * *

The diversified character of the shipments in carload lots to the Boise project is illustrative of the market the projects afford. Shipments originating in a few States are cited as examples.

From Michigan 312 carloads of automobiles and trucks were shipped direct by rail, in addition to automotive equipment manufactured in Michigan but shipped to Idaho from California assembly plants, and in addition to that arriving in Idaho in highway caravans. Food processors in Michigan shipped 29 carloads of cereals; and manufacturers of electrical goods, furniture, and household equipment forwarded more than 50 carloads of their products.

Minnesota found a market for 65 carloads of farm supplies, consisting of building material, household equipment, canned goods, cereals, and fresh meats.

From a State as far east as Pennsylvania came 114 carloads, including shipments of lubricating oils and greases, dry groceries and miscellaneous food supplies, electric ranges, steel and steel products, etc.

Automobile and truck assembly plants in Missouri shipped 57 carloads of motor vehicles and more than that number made up of cereals and other foods, building material, and miscellaneous merchandise.

Louisiana and Arkansas each shipped 50 carloads of merchandise, including foodstuffs, furniture, building material, and miscellaneous goods.

Citrus fruits, canned goods, and vegetables in carload lots from Florida were recorded; and from Alabama also came miscellaneous food supplies, furniture, and other material.

Connecticut shipped eight carloads of radios, six carloads of washing machines, and other carloads of hardware and general merchandise.

Kentucky forwarded nearly 100 carloads of miscellaneous merchandise, steel and steel products, and building material.

Food processors of Indiana found a market for 25 carloads of canned goods, corn products, and fresh meats, while industrial plants shipped more than 50 carloads of electric equipment, building material, and miscellaneous merchandise.

The industrial plants and food processors of the eastern section of Nebraska found a market on the Boise project for more than 30 carloads of their products.

Ohio, with its diversified manufacturing developments, supplied 134 carloads of industrial products, including agricultural implements and farm supplies, electric refrigerators, and general household equipment, building material, and miscellaneous merchandise.

Oklahoma's oil refineries shipped more than 50 carloads of gasoline, lubricating oil, and grease.

The diversified agriculture and industries of Texas provided the Boise area with nearly 150 carloads, including 13 of citrus fruits, 55 of miscellaneous food supplies, 40 of miscellaneous merchandise, and 25 of gasoline and lubricating oils.

The outlet for Wisconsin's industrial plants is shown in the forwarding of 140 carloads of agricultural implements, farm supplies, foodstuffs, furniture, and other household equipment, building material, and miscellaneous merchandise.

Sources of supply extend as far to the northeast as Massachusetts which shipped dry groceries, furniture, and building material. New York State provided nearly half a hundred carloads of foodstuffs, building material, and miscellaneous merchandise.

From the South—Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee—came food supplies and building material, as well as manufactured articles.

Maryland, North Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia are included in the list of States forwarding carload lots of industrial products or food supplies to the Boise project.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, at present the West is being called upon to assume an added burden as thousands of families made homeless by drought, duststorms, and foreclosure sales in the Middle West are seeking new homes in this region. Fairly reliable estimates show that probably about 15,000 families, comprising an average of four members each, have settled in Idaho since 1934. The addition of 60,000 practically destitute persons to the population of a State which normally has about 460,000 presents a very serious situation.

It is possible to give many of these people a place on the irrigated land of the West. From the broadest national point of view, this is the most economical and most efficient way of caring for as many of these people as possible. Mr. Page, the Commissioner of Reclamation, demonstrated this fact rather conclusively in his testimony before the House Appropriations Committee when he pointed out that during the 1933 to 1936 period per capita relief costs in the drought area were $175, while outside the Dust Bowl relief costs averaged only $58 per capita.

Typical projects—

Says a statement inserted in the House hearings by Mr. Page—reported relief expenditures in nonirrigated areas three times those in reclamation-project sections.

The importance of reclamation development in the entire West may well be emphasized by an examination of the needs for new construction and additional water in Idaho. This is a matter of tremendous importance to the irrigator, who may be forced to sit helplessly by at the close of a long dry summer and watch the crops which he has so carefully planned and nourished wither and die from lack of moisture. It is of vital importance to this man, because those crops are the means by which he expects to keep his family from going hungry, to keep his children warmly clothed and in school.

That is the man whose cause I plead now, the little irrigator who 8, 10, even 20, years ago accepted a piece of raw land in the belief that the Government-sponsored development would supply him with the moisture needed to make that land productive. Years of labor and toil lie behind this man. They show in fences, ditches, and cultivation. They show in the improvements. Here is the work of a lifetime, the making of a home. This man has fulfilled his part of the contract. He has a right to expect the Government to fulfill its part.

Idaho is one of the States most dependent on irrigation. Large sections of our population subsist on the results, directly and indirectly, of artificial crop moisture. We must have irrigation, and no more beneficial help can be given an Idaho farmer than to provide him with the supplemental water necessary to insure normal crop production year after year.

It is not my purpose to be selfish in this matter, but an examination of the records clearly shows that Idaho has not received her just proportion of the funds allotted to reclamation uses.

Statistics supplied to me by the Bureau of Reclamation show that a total of $299,064,902.84 was expended between March 1933 and June 30, 1939. This sum was spent in 15 States in arid sections of our Nation. Of the total, Idaho received only $6,103,571.19, or actually less than 3 percent. That amount was entirely inadequate to meet the reclamation needs of the State, and is clearly a discrimination against Idaho. I shall do everything within my power to see that this situation is corrected.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the table supplied by the Reclamation Bureau containing the data referred to.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, the discrimination against Idaho is evident in the current Budget. Last year $60,223,000 was spent for new reclamation development throughout the United States. This year only $44,097,000 was allowed by the Budget Bureau for new construction. Of this sum, Idaho is allotted only $700,000, which is less than 2 percent of the total, and wholly inadequate to carry on the necessary work. Idaho should have at least $3,500,000 additional for supplemental irrigation works this year.

The $700,000 is allotted to work on the Payette division of the Boise project, whereas the Bureau of Reclamation has found that $1,500,000 is necessary adequately to carry on work on this project. When completed the Payette division of the Boise project will bring water to land that years ago was taken up in homesteads under the Government's implied promise that irrigation would be made available. From $30,000 to $40,000 in revenue will be obtained each year from the sale of electrical power to offset a part of the cost of this project to the settlers.

Approximately $1,000,000, in addition to the reappropriation of the unexpended balance now available, is needed this year for the Arrowrock division of the Boise project. This project is designed to make supplemental water available in the Boise Valley section and remove the constant threat of drought and loss of crops. Diversified farming has made water necessary until late in the growing season, and when water is not available the loss and resulting hardship are tremendous. It has been reliably estimated that lack of an adequate water supply reduces the value of the crop return on this project from $5 to $10 per acre, which means an aggregate annual loss of from one to two million dollars to the farmers.

Approximately $1,000,000 is needed to commence work on the Grand Valley Reservoir on the south fork of the Snake River. This reservoir would permit the storage of water, which is badly needed by farmers now on the land in southeastern Idaho.

According to the estimates of the Idaho Commissioner of Reclamation, approximately $400,000 is needed in Idaho during the fiscal year 1941 for the construction of small reservoirs to make supplemental water available for many small farms which are now suffering from lack of water.

Moreover, about $240,000 is needed in Idaho for general investigation of reclamation projects. The total amount allotted by the Budget Bureau is only $300,000 for investigations in all the States, so it can be readily seen that when the needs of Idaho and other States are considered this appropriation must be raised to at least $1,000,000.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate for a more complete examination of the needs of Idaho for reclamation development. I have mentioned the various sums needed, however, in order to give a cross section of the situation throughout the entire West. I do not want my position misunderstood. With the present condition of agriculture, furnishing supplemental water is the greatest assistance that can be given to the farmers in the irrigated regions of the West. Water shortages at critical times all too frequently rob farmers of the fruits of their labor and prevent these regions, which have already been developed, from enjoying the prosperity they should have.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the testimony of Representative HENRY C. DWORSHAK, of Idaho, before the House Appropriations Committee, which goes somewhat more into the details of the current needs of the State.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL INVESTIGATIONS

The item for investigations in the bill under consideration is $300,000. I am sure that this is not a sufficient amount, as I am informed by our Idaho commissioner of reclamation that absolutely necessary work in Idaho for the fiscal year 1941 will cost $240,000. At the present time the Bureau of Reclamation has in progress investigations on the Boise River; however, in order to complete the work and secure the information necessary to plan the most economical and feasible use of available water the investigations must be extended to certain sections of the Snake and Salmon Rivers; $100,000 will be required to finish this particular job and necessary work in other sections of Idaho will cost $140,000. Other States undoubtedly have similar problems, and, if Idaho needs $240,000, certainly $1,000,000 will be a minimum necessary for general investigations work in all reclamation States.

SMALL RESERVOIRS

Idaho has large areas of land now under cultivation that needs supplemental water. I would like to see a substantial appropriation made under provisions of Case-Wheeler Act for construction of small reservoirs. Our Idaho commissioner of reclamation lists 14 projects for consideration under this program, as follows:

Mann Creek Dam, Washington County, Idaho; Little Payette Lake Dam, Valley County, Idaho; Devil Creek Dam, Oneida County, Idaho; Medicine Lodge Creek Dam, Clark County, Idaho; Horse Flat Dam, Washington County, Idaho; Montpelier Creek Dam, Bear Lake County, Idaho; Lost Valley Dam (enlargement) and Hornet Creek Dam, Adams County, Idaho; Mission Creek Dam, Nez Perce County, Idaho; Georgetown Creek Dam, Bear Lake County, Idaho; West Camas Creek Dam, Clark County, Idaho; Cottonwood Creek Dam, Franklin County, Idaho; Bennett Creek Dam, Elmore County, Idaho; Squaw Flat Dam, Washington County, Idaho.

Idaho needs $400,000 for the fiscal year 1941 for construction of small reservoirs.

Mr. Spofford further states:

"I wish to emphasize that the above are minimum requirements and that I further recommend that the following additional amounts be appropriated for construction at the earliest possible date:

Twin spring and/or other site on Boise River	$2,000,000
Cascade Dam and for distribution facilities on Black Canyon	2,000,000
Grand Valley, Upper Snake River	2,000,000

SUMMARY

In conclusion, may I again urge that appropriations be made in the bill under consideration as follows:

Reappropriate the unexpended Twin Springs balance with amendment as suggested making same available at other sites if current investigations indicate a more feasible location on Boise River.

Appropriation for beginning construction on Grand Valley Reservoir on Upper Snake River of not less than $1,000,000.

Appropriation for small reservoir construction which will permit an allotment to Idaho of not less than $400,000.

Increase the item for general investigations to a minimum of $1,000,000.

Teton and Squirrel Meadows development to complete program outlined several years ago.

The above item for construction of the Grand Valley Reservoir is of particular importance, because it embraces to the fullest extent the multiple uses of water on the Upper Snake River, as outlined in the Debler report. For several seasons there has been a wastage of water over Milner Dam approximating 1,000,000 acre-feet annually, while irrigation water is sorely needed to supplement the existing supply and thereby greatly increase the value of the crops. Likewise the flood-control features of this project have been stressed, and there are ample outlets already available for the electric power which can be generated at the dam site. For the past decade action has been delayed on conservation of Upper Snake River water resources, and this project now affords one of the feasible and inexpensive developments with absolute assurance of repayment to the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, there is no State where the accomplishments of the Federal reclamation program stand out in justification of its continuance more than in Idaho, and I am here today to urge this committee to include in the Department of the Interior appropriation bill adequate appropriations for providing supplemental water for the Boise and Payette divisions of the Boise project, Idaho, and for privately irrigated areas in upper Snake River Valley.

It is somewhat disturbing to learn that the Budget Bureau did not include allowances for Twin Springs or other construction for storage on Boise River or for the upper Snake River developments, all of which, I feel, should have additional funds.

While the Payette division of the Boise project is not in my district, its speedy completion will be helpful to the State of Idaho.

In reviewing the results of Federal reclamation in Idaho, I have been impressed with the record of the Minidoka project, which lies wholly in my district, and which is one of the oldest operations under the Bureau of Reclamation. It is very interesting to note that more than one-half of the entire cost of construction has been repaid, although nearly a third of the outlay was made on the Gooding division, completed within the past 10 years. One Minidoka district has paid all but 15 percent of its entire construction cost of $2,756,000.

Considering the length of time the Boise project has been on a repayment basis, its record is equally good.

NEED FOR ADDITIONAL LAND

The need for additional irrigated land and for supplemental water for areas already developed has been accentuated by the heavy migrations of farm families from the Great Plains drought areas and other sections of the country. Although thousands of these folk moved on to California, Washington, and Oregon, and others turned southward to Utah, there have remained in Idaho something like 15,000 families, most of whom have an agricultural background.

For a State the size of Idaho, the wave of migrations has created an acute problem. The Bureau of the Census in 1930 reported we had a few less than 28,000 irrigated farms so you can see that the opportunities for settling any considerable number of the new arrivals were limited. The shortage of water in many sections threatened to force abandonment of some irrigated areas and still further reduce the chances for agricultural development.

SUPPLEMENTAL WATER

It should be explained perhaps that the need for supplemental water is due partially to changes in farming practices since most of the projects were constructed. Formerly, the water users raised early crops and were not particularly concerned about late water. Now they have turned to producing sugar beets, fruits, and vegetables and to dairying, which requires fall pasturage. Water requirements are, therefore, spread over a longer period and when the supply begins to fail in midsummer, the farmers are seriously handicapped and their production is cut down.

When it is considered that even with water difficulties the value of crop production on land in Idaho dependent on Federal projects for water runs from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 a year, the importance of the purchasing power to the country as a whole is emphasized. Since something like three-fourths of the farmers' income is expended for manufactured goods and processed foodstuffs in the Midwest, East, and South, their money goes to swell the pay rolls of the industrial centers and help the farmers of other sections of the country.

Idaho's problems are common to the other Intermountain and the Pacific Coast States. Advancement of the Federal reclamation program offers a solution that has long been postponed.

Idaho's urgent reclamation needs for the fiscal year 1941 are very clearly and conservatively stated by our own Idaho commissioner of reclamation, Mr. James Spofford, in a letter to me dated February 1, 1940, and which I quote as follows:

"Reappropriation of the unexpended balance of 1939 Twin Springs item and also the making of same available for construction also at any similar site on the Boise River should investigations now in progress indicate a more suitable site has been found.

"Payette division, Boise project, Budget Bureau recommendation, $700,000. Bureau will need a minimum of not less than $1,200,000.

"Grand Valley Dam, Upper Snake River, for beginning construction of supplemental storage for Upper Snake River water users, $1,000,000."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, at the conclusion of my remarks, a number of letters and excerpts from letters which I have received from individuals and groups in my State who are vitally interested in reclamation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the letters will be printed in the RECORD.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, in conclusion, I should like to say a few words about the cost of reclamation.

Many people concede the value of reclamation, but tell us that the cost is prohibitive. These people overlook a very important fact. The irrigation and reclamation development in connection with these projects is, in the strictest sense, self-liquidating. Every dollar will be repaid.

In asking for funds to provide adequate water for these reclaimed areas, the people of the West are asking not for charity but for an opportunity to enjoy the prosperity to which they are rightfully entitled by their labors. The Budget Bureau this year allotted $44,000,000 for reclamation construction. The most reliable figures available indicate that the cost of a single modern battleship is more than $100,000,000. The admirals speak glibly in terms of billions for naval construction. Certainly the people of the West are not being unreasonable when they ask for a sum equivalent to one battleship a year. An appropriation of $100,000,000 a year for reclamation would eventually return to the Federal Treasury, but the prosperous farming communities made possible by the use of this money would continue to grow.

To make it possible for farmers to obtain more adequate income, to give homes to those dispossessed by drought, dust storms, and foreclosures is as real a defense of democracy as that provided by battleships and 16-inch guns.

EXHIBIT 1

SOUTHWESTERN IDAHO WATER CONSERVATION PROJECT, INC.,
Boise, Idaho, April 1, 1940.

Hon. JOHN THOMAS,
United States Senator, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: I know you have been advised as to the plans and purposes of the southwestern Idaho water-conservation project. It is an effort on behalf of the farmers in southwestern Idaho to correct a wrong under which they have suffered for many years due to lack of sufficient water to properly irrigate the lands under the Government projects, as well as under some of the old private projects in this section. I have for upward of 30 years owned some 500 acres of irrigated land in this section, and I know from actual experience the losses that have been sustained through an insufficient water supply. It is estimated that this part of the State has suffered aggregate losses approximating $20,000,000, due to the shortage of water. When the Arrowrock Reservoir was constructed, the landowners were led to believe that it would furnish an ample supplemental water supply for all the lands in the Boise project. Much of the land was acquired upon such report and with the understanding that the water supply would be ample. There is every reason why the Government should do its full share to rectify a situation in which it has had an important part. I feel keenly that if the shortage had been due to an erroneous estimate by private parties, the Government would have taken notice of the situation before this.

Notwithstanding the shortage of water and the losses that the farmers have had to bear, they have done amazingly well in paying back the charges of the Reclamation Service for the construction of the Government projects. We have a right to be proud of the record they have made.

One of the things this section needs now is an appropriation for a comprehensive survey of the storage facilities for supplemental water. There should be an appropriation of perhaps half a million dollars for this work. What is not needed will, of course, not be spent. I have attended many meetings of the farmers and businessmen of this section, and I know how keenly they feel they have not received the attention or consideration they should have in appropriations for such investigation.

No doubt Mr. Rising, who represents this association in Washington, has contacted you and discussed this matter with you in person. I feel sure that you will give this your earnest consideration.

Very truly yours,

OLIVER O. HAGA, Director.

F. W. JARVIS, ATTORNEY AND COUNSELOR,
Caldwell, Idaho, March 23, 1940.

Hon. JOHN THOMAS,
Senator from Idaho, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: The board of directors of the Black Canyon Irrigation District, the residents of the Black Canyon Irrigation District, and myself are greatly disturbed by the present press reports, which state that funds for reclamation will be greatly curtailed.

As you know, the Black Canyon project is partially completed, and, in our opinion, it would be a great injustice at this time to curtail funds for the completion of the project, and particularly the Cascade Dam.

The project covers approximately 50,000 acres. The main canal for this project is entirely completed, and out of the 50,000 acres, 26,000 acres are under the gravity system and on which water will be available at the present time. However, there will not be sufficient water on this land for the entire irrigation season without supplemental water. The Government to date has spent approximately $3,200,000 on the work so far, meaning that this project is approximately half finished. There will be 24,000 acres in the project that will be under the pump unit and which will rely entirely on its source of water from the Cascade Dam.

As you probably know, hundreds of families from the Dust Bowl are in Idaho, waiting for an opportunity to secure a few acres of irrigated land for the purpose of rehabitating themselves. It is, therefore, necessary that the appropriation of $700,000 for the Boise project be substantially increased so that the work can commence on the Cascade Dam.

The board of directors of the Black Canyon irrigation district, the settlers in the project, and myself are looking to you and are depending upon you to see that the Cascade Dam appropriation will be substantially increased to insure an early completion of the project, and we trust that you will succeed in obtaining this additional appropriation.

If I can be of any assistance in any way, please do not hesitate to write me.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) F. W. JARVIS,
Attorney, Black Canyon Irrigation District.

THE IDAHO COMMONER,
Idaho Falls, Idaho, January 27, 1940.

Senator JOHN THOMAS,
Gooding, Idaho.

DEAR SENATOR: Congratulations! I am glad that you have determined to resume your services to the Republican Party and the State of Idaho. We need more men in public office today who have the ability to keep their feet on the ground and know where they are going. I am sure you measure up to this opportunity and responsibility.

* * * * * * *

As you are probably aware, the South Fork Reservoir project has made substantial progress the past year and seems now to have the blessings of the Reclamation Bureau. It is generally believed that a little aggressive action on the part of the Idaho congressional delegation will insure the early construction of this reservoir.

Despite unusually heavy January precipitation this year, the water outlook for the 1940 season is not bright. Latest watershed reports indicate probable 1940 run-off to be about 50 percent normal, dependent, of course, on our late-season storms. The situation, however, is serious enough that it is causing some concern. It is entirely possible that the 1940 irrigation experience in the Snake River Valley will be such as to justify immediate construction of the South Fork Reservoir. I am informed that approximately 3,000,000 acre-feet of water has gone to waste over the Milner Dam the past 3 years. Today, if the South Fork Reservoir had been constructed, it would be full and provide the entire valley with adequate insurance against a possible 1940 water shortage.

* * * * * * *

With kindest regards, I am,
Yours sincerely,

ADEN HYDE.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE WATER MEETING OF THE SNAKE RIVER WATER USERS HELD AT IDAHO FALLS MARCH 4, 1940

Whereas the United States Bureau of Reclamation has recommended the proposed Grand Valley Reservoir feature of the upper

Snake River project as a feasible site for the construction of a reservoir of 1,300,000 acre-feet capacity and has proposed an equitable plan for distribution of the estimated cost among power, flood-control, and irrigation interests, and

Whereas applications for storage space in excess of the reservoir capacity have already been received and power interests have agreed to sign contracts for the power output at the rates and terms suggested by the Bureau of Reclamation, and

Whereas there is urgent need in southern Idaho for the power, reserve-water supplies, and flood-control protection to be made available by this proposed reservoir: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we extend our thanks to the members of the Idaho congressional delegation for their efforts to secure congressional authorization for this project, and urge them to continue same until said authorization is secured.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Caldwell, Idaho, April 3, 1940.

Hon. JOHN THOMAS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JACK: I have recently been appointed a director of the Western Idaho Water Conservation Project, Inc.

It is gratifying to receive the many reports from Washington telling of the excellent work being done by our Congressmen and Senators in the interests of our reclamation program. Such concerted action cannot fail to bring about the desired results.

There is a growing realization throughout southwestern Idaho that our most pressing need is for funds to carry forward a complete, coordinated engineering survey as to the specific engineering requirements of all projects lying within our area.

While the feasibility of the program seeking to utilize all of our water and power resources is known to the Department of Reclamation and the Army engineers, engineering data upon which construction plans must be based are needed immediately.

I feel sure you will not overlook any opportunity to help along this good work.

Sincerely,

(Signed) C. L. MILLER.

LEWISTON, IDAHO, March 19, 1940.

Hon. JOHN THOMAS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: Being one of the property owners of Lewiston orchard irrigation district, I am writing you, asking that you make every available effort possible to have the reclamation survey of the Lewiston orchards district. I believe this would be a great benefit to both people and the State. We do not have enough water here, and if there were plenty of water some of the people on relief would be self-supporting. I believe if this district were enlarged it would be more economically operated, giving us cheaper water rates.

Yours truly,

WILLARD ROSS.

SAFETY IN THE AIR

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the last crash of an air liner since the Air Safety Board and the Civil Aeronautics Authority took over the business of regulating travel in the air occurred 13 months ago, namely, on March 26, 1939. In that particular crash 12 persons were involved; 8 of them were burned to death or otherwise lost their lives, 4 were thrown clear when the plane struck the ground, but all were injured. The pilot is still convalescing, and unless marked improvement takes place shortly one of his legs will have to be amputated.

The Air Safety Board made an immediate investigation, which revealed, among other things, that the plane was not equipped with the latest and safest type of propellers, commonly referred to as the full-feathering type. This new type of propeller is controllable from the pilot's cockpit; and when something goes wrong with a motor, the pilot, in the flash of a second, can by touching a control in the cockpit turn the blades parallel to the line of flight of the plane. This has two immediate effects: First, it stops the propeller on the disabled engine from rotating and brings all moving parts of the crippled motor to a standstill, thereby eliminating the terrific vibration which usually develops under such conditions when the aircraft is equipped with the older type two-position or constant-speed propellers. Such vibration has on several occasions resulted in loss of control of the airplane, further structural failures, and in some cases fire in the air.

Second, when the propeller is feathered, head resistance is reduced to a minimum, and the performance of the airplane with one engine dead is greatly increased.

The Air Safety Board not only found that the airplane involved in the accident referred to was not equipped with the safest type of propeller but that the propeller-control mechanism for the type of propeller employed was obsolete and inadequate, under the circumstances, to meet safety requirements. If the airplane involved in the accident had been equipped with full-feathering propellers, there could be no reasonable doubt that the accident would never have occurred.

How many crashes have been caused for the same reason is, of course, unknown but it is felt that the number is substantial.

Immediately after investigating the crash in question the Air Safety Board recommended to the Authority that it require all air liners to be equipped with full-feathering propellers. This was done, and it is one concrete example of what has been done to make air travel safe. There are many others, some of which I hope at some later time to be able to call to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. President, I have read nearly according to the text a paragraph from a letter received by me today from the Air Line Pilots Association, signed by David L. Bencke, president. I ask unanimous consent to insert the entire letter in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, April 24, 1940.

Hon. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: On April 16 I wrote you voicing the unanimous protest of the men at the controls of the Nation's air liners against Reorganization Plan No. IV calling for the abolishment of the Air Safety Board and the new Air Authority, and placing the independent duties of the entire C. A. A. back under the Department of Commerce.

In this letter the pilots pointed out that during the years that civil aeronautics and air transportation were regulated by the Department of Commerce 473 lives were lost in air crashes, of which number 146 were line pilots. We contrasted this with a world's safety record of no air-passenger fatalities in this country for 12 months and no pilots killed for 16 months. By the time you receive this letter the record will be no passenger fatalities in 13 months and no pilot fatalities in 17 months. This adds new emphasis to the argument, Why not leave well enough alone?

In view of the fact that Reorganization Plan No. IV calls for the abolishment of the Air Safety Board the question naturally arises, What has this agency done since assuming its independent duties of investigating crashes and making air-safety recommendations to prevent recurrences? In a little more than a year and one-half the record shows that the Board has investigated 2,947 air crashes, the large majority of which occurred in so-called miscellaneous flying not on the air lines, 268 of which resulted in fatalities. As a result of these investigations the Air Safety Board has transmitted 115 air-safety recommendations to the Authority, pointing out what should be done to prevent recurrences. This will give you an idea of the amount of work that has been accomplished by the Air Safety Board in a remarkably short period of time, in addition to all the other work of getting organized under the new law, and so forth.

Obviously it would be impossible to describe all of the air-safety recommendations that have been made, but I would like to tell you about just one so you will have an idea as to just how important the work of this Board is to the preservation of human life in air travel. On March 26, 1939, a crash occurred on one of the air lines which, incidentally, was the last crash since the Air Safety Board and the new Authority took over that resulted in loss of life either to passengers or crew. Twelve persons were on board this ill-fated air liner. Eight were killed outright or burned to death in the wreckage. Four were thrown clear when the plane struck the ground. All were injured. The pilot is still convalescing, and unless a marked improvement takes place shortly, one of his legs will have to be amputated. The Air Safety Board made an immediate investigation which revealed, among other things, that the plane was not equipped with the latest, safest type of propellers, commonly referred to as the full-feathering type. This new type of propeller is controllable from the pilot's cockpit, and when something goes wrong with a motor the pilot in a flash of a second can, by touching a control in the cockpit, turn the blades parallel to the line of flight of the plane. This has two immediate effects: First, it stops the propeller on the disabled engine from rotating, bringing all moving parts of the crippled motor to a standstill and thereby eliminating the terrific vibration which usually develops under such conditions when the aircraft is equipped with the older type two-position or constant-speed propellers. This vibration has on several occasions resulted in loss of control of the airplane, further structural failures, and in some cases fire in the air. Second, when a propeller is feathered, head resistance is reduced to a minimum, and the performance of the airplane with one engine dead is greatly increased. The Air Safety Board not only found that the airplane involved in this accident was not equipped with the safest type propeller, but that the propeller-control mechanism for the type propeller employed was obsolete and inadequate to meet safety requirements under the circumstances. If the airplane involved in the accident I have just described had been equipped with full-feathering propellers, there can be no reasonable doubt that the accident would never have occurred.

Just how many crashes have been caused for the same reason is, of course, unknown, but it is felt that the number is quite substantial. Immediately after investigating the crash in question the Air Safety Board recommended to the Authority that it require all air liners to be equipped with full-feathering propellers. This is just one concrete example of what has been done to make air travel safe. There are many others.

It is argued that abolishing the Air Safety Board would save a few top salaries. What these savings really amount to are the salaries of the Air Safety Board members. There are three, and they receive $7,500 a year each, making a total of $22,500 annually. Assuming that this amount is saved is an error, because if Reorganization Plan No. IV is approved, someone connected with the Federal Government must still investigate accidents, and they must be paid, so, in reality, the savings are really zero unless a much lower type of personnel is used for this highly important work of preserving human life, which certainly would not be wise.

Let us contrast this with what air crashes have cost the air lines and the Federal Government during the period from the late twenties to 1938, when the Air Safety Board and the new Authority took over. It costs the Federal Government, because air transportation is a subsidized industry, and in the final analysis this subsidy which comes from the public fluctuates with the earning power of the industry. During the period the Department of Commerce controlled air transportation and civil flying there were 130 fatal air-line accidents. It is well known that the cost of one air-line accident is, conservatively, $150,000 to $250,000, representing the loss of equipment and the cost of damage suits, death and injury claims, etc., to say nothing of many more thousands of dollars lost because of loss of patronage resulting in the fact that a crash-scared public does not patronize air travel. This has been proven. We have only to multiply the cost of one crash, which we will conservatively estimate at $200,000, by 130, the total number of fatal air-line crashes during the period that the Department of Commerce controlled air transportation, to give us the startling figure of $26,000,000. Properly to evaluate the situation there must be added to this figure the amount of money lost in patronage to the air lines due to the public being afraid to ride during the period that the Department of Commerce regulated air transportation. Of course, it is not possible to estimate what this figure really is, but obviously it amounts to a staggering sum.

Safety is the axis around which everything vital to the success of air travel revolves. People were not born with wings, but they have learned to use them, and the extent to which this use will reach is limitless, depending only on one factor, and that is the safety factor. People have traveled on the surface of the earth and on water since the beginning of time. To get them to take to the air depends entirely on the psychology of self-preservation which is again the one and same thing—safety. The ultimate question, as far as the public is concerned, is: Is it safe? This question must be answered conclusively in the affirmative and stay answered if air travel is to succeed.

When Congress created the Air Safety Board and the new Air Authority it had a two-fold effect. First, it destroyed the psychology of fear of air travel on the part of the public. Second, it replaced this fear with confidence in the safety of air travel.

The history of politically involved and perfunctory control of air transportation under the Department of Commerce is well known. The startling number of terrible crashes that occurred during this period involved the loss of thousands upon thousands of dollars and 473 lives. The price of present safety standards has been high. It must not be in vain. We must go forward. It is a question that is vital and far-reaching to the Nation, and it is vital to the Nation's defense because the best security that our people can have as a reserve to our air-fighting force is an extensive, highly developed, and well-patronized air transportation network. The record since the Air Safety Board and the Authority took over under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 definitely proves this can be done. We must not go back to the old order.

Nearly all of us fly and, therefore, this is not only the problem of the pilots but the problem of all of us as well.

Briefly, this is once more a fight to save an industry and to save human life.

Again, the pilots that fly on the most extensive civil air network in the world earnestly and respectfully appeal to you for your support to set aside the President's proposal to abolish the Air Safety Board and the new Air Authority.

Respectfully,

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION,
DAVID L. BEHNCKE, President.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. GAVAGAN, Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. SEGER, and Mr. CARTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 6901) granting increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War, returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was

Resolved, That the said bill do not pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives not agreeing to pass the same.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR—FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which is made necessary by reason of the transfer of funds from the W. P. A. to this particular activity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 50, line 15, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That for carrying out the purposes of this paragraph there shall be made available to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission from the appropriation in such paragraph 1 the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as such Commission, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, estimates and certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury will be necessary for such purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I may explain that no additional money is involved in the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I inquire what is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. The purpose of the proviso is to permit certain claims for injuries to be paid out of funds herein appropriated. There was no provision made for that in the bill, and, as the Senator knows, last year all this activity was under the W. P. A. The amendment is designed merely to permit the use of money which has already been appropriated. There is no additional money involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 48, line 18, after the figure "2", it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the paragraph down to and including line 21 and insert a period after the figure "2."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the language which I am seeking to strike out reads as follows:

And such appropriations shall not be available for the compensation of the incumbent of any position placed in the competitive classified civil service of the United States after January 10, 1939.

That provision is found in the part of the bill referring to the National Youth Administration. Its effect would be, if Congress should adopt the bill which is now before the Committee on Civil Service, popularly known as the Ramspeck bill, to make it very doubtful whether those portions of the bill which refer to the administrative staff of the National Youth Administration would be effective during the next fiscal year.

The question was considered in the other House and the Member of the House in charge of the bill took the position that if the Ramspeck bill should pass it would eliminate this provision of the pending appropriation bill. It is my opinion that that is a very doubtful question. The provision is nothing more than a limitation upon the appropriation, and, if the Congress should pass the Ramspeck bill and the particular incumbents should, under the Ramspeck bill, become eligible for the civil service, certainly they could not, if we should permit this phrase to remain in this bill, receive any compensation during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made.

I ask the Senator from Tennessee if the matter cannot be taken to conference and discussed from that point of view. I do not know what is the status of the Ramspeck bill; I do not know whether the committee will report it favorably or unfavorably or what changes they may make. I know, however, that they completed hearings a few days ago.

It seems to me, if the Congress is likely to adopt legislation which would make these employees eligible for the civil service, that it would not be correct at this time, with the matter pending before one of the committees of the Senate, to include this provision in the appropriation bill. I think that the matter should be discussed in conference with the Representative from the House who took the position that it would be eliminated by the passage of the Ramspeck bill. I do not agree with that conclusion, I may say.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the House considered this matter very carefully, and did not desire to anticipate the passage of the Ramspeck bill. I think the position of the House is correct. I do not think we ought to anticipate the blanketing into the civil service of these temporary employees. I think it would be exceedingly unwise in the case of a temporary service of this kind, which merely exists from year to year and which may not be in existence by the time the Ramspeck bill is passed, if it should be passed, to strike from the pending bill the provision in question. For that reason, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. May I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the statement made on the floor of the House on March 28?

Mr. McKELLAR. I remember that statement, and a similar statement was made before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, but after careful examination the committee declined to adopt the amendment suggested.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, is it not true that if the bill passes in its present form, that matter will be in conference, anyway?

Mr. McKELLAR. It will be.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to make inquiry as to how that situation could exist?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think I am mistaken about it. No; this paragraph will not be in conference.

Mr. LODGE. It is my understanding that in the House bill the words which the Senator from Washington seeks to strike out were stricken out.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; that is not correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the words were retained in the House bill, but the Senator from Massachusetts, who is a member of the committee, will recall that this whole matter was discussed in the committee, and my recollection is that the committee unanimously refused to strike out any portion of the language. The striking out of the language would be virtually in anticipation that the Ramspeck bill would become the law at this session of Congress. It may or may not become the law; I am not advised as to that; I do not know what the situation is in regard to that bill; but certainly I do not think in considering an appropriation bill we should assume that the Congress will pass a bill which would put several hundred thousand, as I remember the number, of temporary employees permanently into the civil service.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Washington.

It is my understanding that the statement of the Senator from Tennessee is entirely correct. The action was taken unanimously in the subcommittee, on the ground that it was not advisable to anticipate any action which might take place in the future.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. I merely wish to make the observation that the Committee on the Civil Service has concluded hearings on the Ramspeck bill, and will shortly go into executive session for the consideration of that bill. What the determination will be, when the bill will be reported, I do not know; but the committee is diligently progressing in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee has said that to take the action which my amendment suggests would be anticipating certain action by the Congress on the Ramspeck bill. That is just the opposite of the situation. To take the action which is included in this bill, in the language which I am asking to strike out, is to anticipate a situation.

If the Congress does not pass the Ramspeck bill, then there will be no necessity for this language in the pending bill. If the Congress does pass the Ramspeck bill, and if it includes provision for civil-service status for these employees of the National Youth Administration, then we are in this appropriation anticipating a situation, and depriving these persons of an opportunity to receive compensation if they go under civil-service status.

I should like to call attention to what was said about it.

On March 28, contained on page 5506 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this session, the following statement was made by Mr. TARVER:

> Now, with regard to the legislative situation, if the Ramspeck bill passes the Senate and is approved by the President after the passage of this appropriation bill, the Ramspeck bill, whatever its provisions may be, will take precedence over the provisions of this bill.

That is the point on which I am in disagreement with the gentlemen of the House and in disagreement with the Senator from Tennessee, because we have a distinct limitation upon an appropriation bill; and if we include this limitation, then the passage of the Ramspeck bill so far as these employees during the coming fiscal year are concerned would be an utterly futile act.

I think the amendment should be accepted by the Senator and taken to conference, and discussed from that point of view in the conference.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in view of all the references that have been made to the civil service, and to the Ramspeck bill, and to the amendment under consideration, it may be that this is a fitting and proper time for me to call to the attention of the Senate the operations under existing law in certain particulars.

I had previously notified my distinguished colleague [Mr. MALONEY] that I was opposed to the nomination of a gentleman named Allan Measom to be postmaster in Southport, Conn. I had also notified the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that I should want to appear before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with reference to the matter.

About the 10th of August 1939, a Bridgeport, Conn., newspaper carried the story that my distinguished colleague had asked that the Civil Service Commission call for another examination to fill the vacancy in the office of postmaster in the Southport, Conn., post office.

Mr. President, such an examination was held. It was either the fifth or the sixth such examination in as many years. As a result of the last examination, a gentleman named Mr. Henry B. MacQuarrie stood highest. He received from the Civil Service Commission a grade of 82.78 percent. The fact that Mr. MacQuarrie stood highest in that particular examination would be of scant significance if it were not for the fact that not only had he stood highest in every preceding examination since 1933, but there were times when he was the only man to pass the examination.

It seemed so singular that such a man as Mr. MacQuarrie, who had been appointed postmaster in 1929 and had served with credit to himself until 1933, was not appointed, that I wrote to the Civil Service Commission for the purpose of ascertaining the facts.

Under date of August 18, 1939, I addressed this letter to the Civil Service Commission:

AUGUST 18, 1939.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Seventh and F Streets NW., Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I enclose herewith copy of a letter sent me by Attorney Ned E. Ostmark concerning the postmastership at the Southport post office in Fairfield, Conn. I shall personally appreciate an explanation. If the facts stated in the enclosed copy are true, I should like to know how the same is possible and under what regulations the procedure is authorized. Thank you for your courtesy and cooperation.

Faithfully yours,

JOHN A. DANAHER.

At the same time I addressed an identical letter to Mr. Farley as Postmaster General. Since the letter is in identical terms, I will not include it in the RECORD at this point. However, it was important, it seemed to me, that the matter be submitted fairly and squarely to both departments affected, chiefly for the reason that the replies become of interest.

I received a reply first from the Postmaster General's office. Under date of August 24, 1939, there came this letter:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, August 24, 1939.

HON. JOHN A. DANAHER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR DANAHER: In the absence of the Postmaster General, I wish to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 18, 1939, transmitting a copy of a communication addressed to you by Mr. Ned E. Ostmark, chairman of the Republican Town Committee of Fairfield, and written in behalf of Henry B. MacQuarrie, an applicant for the postmastership at Southport, Conn.

The statements contained therein have been carefully noted, but I feel I should advise you that the register established as the result of an examination held in February 1937 is no longer available in view of the new law extending the classified civil service to include first-, second-, and third-class postmasters.

An open competitive examination was conducted in November 1938 in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 25, 1938, but an incomplete register was certified.

It was incomplete, let me interpolate, apparently on the ground that Mr. MacQuarrie, a Republican, was the only one to pass.

At any rate, the letter continues:

As the Department desires to make a selection from a complete register the Civil Service Commission was requested to announce a second open competitive examination. Mr. MacQuarrie is free to participate therein, or if he does not desire to do so, the rating obtained by him in the examination held in November 1938 will be used by the Civil Service Commission in making up the new register.

Sincerely yours,

W. W. HOWES,
First Assistant Postmaster General.

The press recently informed us that Mr. Howes has resigned his position to enter the campaign of 1940 in behalf, I understand, of a certain distinguished Postmaster General. Whether or not that is true, I cannot say; but when he speaks in this letter about the Department desiring a complete register, let me point out that the second examination was held, and that in that examination only two candidates passed, and that they still have not a complete register; notwithstanding which on the 15th of April 1940, the Postmaster General sent to the Senate the nomination of Mr. Allan Measom to be postmaster at Southport.

But let me continue.

Perhaps the most illuminating item in this more or less interesting matter is the letter of the Civil Service Commission dated August 24, 1939, addressed to me in reply to my letter of August 18:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., August 24, 1939.

HON. JOHN A. DANAHER,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR DANAHER: The Commission has your letter of August 18 relative to the matter of filling the vacancy in the position of postmaster at Southport, Conn., an office of the second class.

In order that you may have a full understanding of the circumstances surrounding the failure of Mr. Henry B. MacQuarrie to receive appointment as postmaster, there is outlined below a history of the former examinations, as well as the last examination of November 19, 1938, held for that position.

A competitive examination was held on October 10, 1933, for the position of second-class postmaster at Southport, Conn., under the provisions of the Executive order of July 12, 1933, which at that time governed the appointment of Presidential postmasters. That order provided for the certification of the names of not less than three eligibles—

Not less than three, Mr. President—

if as many as three could be obtained, to the Postmaster General, who might make selection of one of the highest three for appointment to fill the vacancy. Only two eligibles were obtained as a result of the examination for postmaster at Southport, Mr. Henry B. MacQuarrie and Mr. William H. Russell. The Post Office Department, in accordance with its right of choice, selected Mr. Russell for appointment, and he was appointed February 15, 1934. Upon his death on November 11, 1936, Miss Katherine Russell was appointed acting postmaster at Southport, Conn., effective November 26, 1936.

An act of March 1, 1921, provides the circumstances under which acting postmasters may be appointed and places the authority for the appointment in the Postmaster General exclusively. The act provides specifically: "Whenever the office of a postmaster becomes vacant through death, resignation, or removal, the Postmaster General shall designate some person to act as postmaster until a regular appointment can be made by the President * * *." (39 U. S. C. 39.)

The Post Office Department, following the appointment of Miss Russell as acting postmaster, requested the holding of an open competitive examination for filling the vacancy in the position of postmaster at Southport, Conn., under the provisions of the Executive order of July 20, 1936, which superseded the 1933 order referred to above. An examination was held on February 9, 1937, for the position of postmaster at Southport under the terms of the later Executive order, which provided that only the person receiving the highest eligible rating could be considered for appointment. Mr. Henry B. MacQuarrie was rated the most highly qualified candidate in the examination, and his name was certified to the Post Office Department on April 19, 1937, for consideration for appointment.

Mr. President, would not one think that at that stage of the case, on the record thus established, and under the law as it then existed, and under the Executive orders to which I have referred, and to which the Commission referred, Mr. MacQuarrie would have received the appointment? Knowing how interested we are in the civil service and in the maintenance of competent, qualified persons in office, in order that they may render better and more efficient service to our people, sadly I remark, Mr. MacQuarrie was not appointed. The letter continues:

Under the Executive orders referred to above, the positions of Presidential postmasters were not in the classified civil service, and the Commission's only duties in connection with appointments were to hold examinations at the request of the Postmaster General and transmit to the Post Office Department a list of persons found to be qualified. If the Department had used the list certified on April 19, 1937, for filling the postmaster vacancy at Southport, Conn., Mr. MacQuarrie would, of course, have been the one nominated for appointment. However, there is nothing in the regulations which required that the Department discontinue the services of the acting postmaster and make appointment from the list submitted, and the Department chose to continue the acting postmaster at Southport in office.

Let me interpolate at that point that if the acting postmaster had been qualified, if the acting postmaster could have gotten on the list, there might have been some justification for the action, but the acting postmaster could not pass the examination; so let us follow along with the letter, and see what happened next:

No action was taken on the certificate submitted as a result of the 1937 examination for the position of postmaster at Southport, Conn., prior to the enactment of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1938, which placed Presidential postmaster positions within the classified civil service and which became effective the date of its approval. Of course, the passage of that act had the effect of completely nullifying any lists of eligibles that had been established as the result of the examinations held under the Executive orders, from which appointments had not been made. Therefore, in those cases where no person was nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate prior to the effective date of this new postmaster law, it became necessary to fill the vacancy in the position of Presidential postmaster through one of the methods provided for in the law.

The Post Office Department elected to fill the vacancy in the position of postmaster at Southport, Conn., through open competitive examination, under the provisions of the new postmaster legislation. The examination was duly announced and held on November 19, 1938. Of the seven applications filed in this examination, three were canceled for failure to meet the residence requirements, and four persons were admitted to the examination, including Mr. MacQuarrie and Miss Russell. Two of these four failed to comply with the minimum requirements for eligibility as to business experience and general qualifications. Mr. MacQuarrie and Miss Russell were given eligible ratings on the second subject of the examination—education, and business (or professional) experience, qualifications, and suitability. Mr. MacQuarrie attained an eligible general average on his entire examination, but Miss Russell failed to attain eligibility because of the relatively low marks attained on the first subject of her examination, written tests. Mr. MacQuarrie's name was certified to the Post Office Department on June 9, 1939, as the only eligible in this examination.

Mr. President, we have gotten down to 1939, and still Mr. MacQuarrie heads the list, in fact, is the only one who passed the examination. But is Mr. MacQuarrie the postmaster at Southport? Oh, no. The letter continues:

Under the provisions of the act previously referred to, appointments to the positions of Presidential postmasters are made in the same manner as appointments to all other positions subject to the civil-service law and rules with the exception that the appointee must be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Under civil-service rules, the names of the highest three eligibles on a register are certified for filling a vacancy, and the appointing power may select any one of the three for appointment. In the event less than three eligibles are obtained in an examination for first-, second-, or third-class postmaster, the Post Office Department may appoint any one of the eligibles certified, or it may request another examination for the purpose of obtaining a full list of eligibles, or it may fill the vacancy through one of the other methods provided for in the act of Congress approved June 25, 1938, governing the appointment of Presidential postmasters.

On August 1, 1939, the Post Office Department returned the certificate submitted on June 9 for the position of postmaster at Southport, Conn., and requested that a full list of three names be submitted for selection for appointment to that position. It has not as yet been possible to announce a new examination, in compliance with the Department's request.

By direction of the Commission.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM C. HULL,
Executive Assistant.

Mr. President, let me point out that Mr. Hull informed me that the Post Office Department had requested that a full list of three names be submitted. Notwithstanding that request, a list of three names was not submitted. There were only two applicants who passed. But by this time, 6 years and a half later, the Democrat had finally passed the examination. The net result is that Mr. MacQuarrie, with his grade of 82.78, notwithstanding Mr. Russell had finally passed and had a grade of 76.25 on the list of February 1940, we find that Mr. MacQuarrie again has been passed by, and Mr. Measom's name is on the list of those to be appointed.

Mr. President, it seemed to me that perhaps the President of the United States had no idea what Mr. Farley, the Postmaster General, might be doing as Mr. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee. It seemed to me no more than right that we should ascertain exactly where this situation was taking us. So, under date of August 23, 1939, I wrote to the President, at the White House, in Washington. I thought it would be proper to acquaint him with the facts in my possession, but, above all, to give him the sources to which he could turn in order to ascertain the truth. Therefore I wrote him this letter:

AUGUST 23, 1939.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have received a letter from Attorney Ned E. Ostmark, of Fairfield, Conn., who reports a series of facts which, I believe, should be called to your attention. I feel that the course which has been followed is ideally adapted to create misunderstanding and even suspicion of the operations of the civil service, and that you will share with me a feeling that an explanation might properly be requested by you.

The facts reported to me follow: From 1929 to 1933 one Henry B. MacQuarrie was postmaster of the Southport post office in Fairfield. In or about July 1933, he was replaced by William Russell, who became acting postmaster.

In January 1934, a competitive examination was held. Mr. MacQuarrie received the highest rating. Despite that fact Mr. Russell was appointed as postmaster.

Mr. Russell remained as postmaster until his death in the fall of 1936, at which time his sister, Katherine Russell, was appointed acting postmaster. Miss Russell has remained acting postmaster ever since.

In April 1937, after a competitive examination given by the United States Civil Service Commission, Mr. MacQuarrie was again certified as the one who had the highest rating. That examination was held under the Presidential order of July 20, 1936, which provided that the eligible person who received the highest rating in a competitive examination should be certified to the Postmaster General, who thereupon should submit the name to the President for appointment. Mr. MacQuarrie was not appointed. Miss Russell continued to serve as acting postmaster.

On November 19, 1938, a new competitive examination was held. Five persons competed in the examination. Again Mr. MacQuarrie received the highest rating, but he was not appointed, and Miss Russell continued to serve as acting postmaster, despite the fact that she was unable to pass the civil-service test. Thus, three competitive examinations have been held, and in all of the examinations Mr. MacQuarrie received the highest rating.

I will be glad of your advices as to whether or not steps are open to you to cause a review and possible correction of the situation thus revealed.

I have the honor to remain, Sir,

Faithfully yours,

JOHN A. DANAHER.

Mr. President, as might reasonably be expected, I received a reply to that letter under date of September 16, 1939, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 16, 1939.

MY DEAR SENATOR DANAHER: This will acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 23, in reference to the postmastership at Southport, Conn.

I have taken the matter up with the Postmaster General and am sending you, for your information, copy of his report to me.

Very sincerely yours,

EDWIN M. WATSON,
Secretary to the President.

Mr. President, the letter from the Postmaster General to the President of the United States, bearing date September 13, 1939, is appended to General Watson's reply to me, and some of its phraseology is of special interest. I think, in the light of the record and in the light of the facts, that Senators will be able to place their own construction upon the happy choice of language one finds. But I emphasize it in advance so that none of those fine points may be missed by those who otherwise may be wondering what the effect of the Ramspeck bill would be. Many people today are interested generally in the civil service, and in maintaining a merit list of persons properly qualified for office. I am one of them. But, Mr. President, many of us have been led to think that the civil service actually meant civil service, and that one was entitled to advancement and reward on the basis of experience and ability.

Here is the letter addressed to the President by the Postmaster General of the United States:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 13, 1939.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is returned herewith the letter to you from Senator DANAHER dated August 23, 1939, and concerning the postmastership at Southport, Conn.

Miss Katherine Russell is the acting postmaster at Southport. She was appointed as such on November 24, 1936.

Nearly 3 years earlier this lady, who had always failed to pass the examination, had been appointed acting postmaster, and was still in that place in 1939.

Mr. Henry B. MacQuarrie was postmaster at the Southport post office from June 19, 1929, to July 17, 1933. An examination was conducted under the Executive order of 1933 which provided that one of the three highest eligibles should be selected for appointment as postmaster and while Mr. MacQuarrie received the highest rating in that examination, which was held in January of 1934, he was not appointed. William Russell, who was one of the three highest eligibles, was appointed, and following his death, in the fall of 1936, Miss Katherine Russell was appointed acting postmaster to hold office until the regular appointment could be made.

A competitive examination was conducted by the Civil Service Commission in 1937 and the former postmaster, Henry B. MacQuarrie, was certified as the highest eligible. Before an appointment was made from this register, Congress passed the law commonly known as the act of June 25, 1938, which places postmasters of Presidential offices, who are appointed subsequent to that date, in the classified service.

Notice that, Mr. President; that is the type of act that we soon are going to be asked to consider.

This act provides that an incumbent postmaster may be reappointed or a classified employee in the vacancy office may be promoted, provided they pass a noncompetitive examination or that an open competitive examination may be held, in which event one of the three highest eligibles must be selected for appointment.

Let me interpolate that no one should be deceived into believing that in these noncompetitive examinations of persons who are being covered into the classified service, those who are highest on the list, and the most competent, are specially rewarded. Not a bit of it.

The letter continues:

As a result of an examination held under the provisions of the act of June 25, 1938, Mr. MacQuarrie was certified as the only eligible, and since the Department is not required to make a selection unless there is a full eligible register of three, the Civil Service Commission has been requested to conduct another examination and the closing date for receipt of applications was September 12, 1939.

Let me interpolate again, that there was no register of three; that the appointment has been made from a register of two.

The letter continues:

Senator DANAHER has protested—

Notice the word—

our action in not appointing Mr. MacQuarrie after he qualified in three examinations. He made a similar protest to the Department and we replied to same under date of August 24, 1939, a copy of which is attached.

Mr. President, it will be remembered that the letter which I introduced into the RECORD as my letter to the Department, was a request for an explanation. I asked for the facts. I asked if the facts as established by me in my letter to the Department were found to be true, how it could be under the law that such a situation was the result? The Department construes that to be a protest.

The letter continues:

The appointment of Mr. Russell was regular and in accordance with the Executive order in effect at that time, and had an appointment been made in 1937 under the provisions of your Executive order of July 20, 1936, Mr. MacQuarrie's name would have been included on the nomination list inasmuch as he was certified as the one attaining the highest rating. However, at that time, many Members of Congress insisted that nominations be delayed in view of the fact that Congress was considering some legislation affecting the appointment of postmasters at Presidential offices. This legislation was finally enacted and is known as the act of June 25, 1938. As before stated, under the provisions of this act, the Department is not required to make an appointment unless a full eligible register of three names has been furnished by the Civil Service Commission.

The Civil Service Commission is now making an effort to supply the Department with a full eligible register, and, when that is done, a prompt selection will be made therefrom.

I wish to assure you that this matter has been handled in a regular manner and an appointment would have been made during this last session of Congress had the Civil Service Commission been able to furnish a full register of eligibles.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES A. FARLEY,
Postmaster General.

Let me point out again that that letter concluded that the appointment would be made when a full list of eligibles had been certified. I thereupon replied under date of September 20, 1939, to General Watson as follows:

MY DEAR GENERAL WATSON: I have your letter of September 16 enclosing a copy of letter from the Postmaster General with reference to the postmastership at Southport, Conn. It was interesting to perceive that an assistant writing for the Postmaster General—

It will be perceived that I did not even think that the Postmaster General wrote that letter, and consequently I was willing to do him the grace of excluding him, and therefore placing the burden on some anonymous assistant.

It was interesting to perceive that an assistant writing for the Postmaster General interpreted my letter to you as one which "protested our action." He continues that I "made a similar protest to the Department and we replied to same under date of August 24, 1939."

You, of course, will know that I wished above everything to ascertain the facts directly from the source and wrote to the Postmaster General making inquiry concerning them. Their construction of such a letter as a "protest" would seem to indicate a state of mind concerning this situation which I had hoped did not exist. Of course it now becomes perfectly apparent that the Department is not seeking merely a "qualified" candidate, for the qualifications of Mr. MacQuarrie have been demonstrated in repeated examinations. Meanwhile the Department has on one ground or another persisted in retaining as postmaster a person who has failed in each instance to qualify. No wonder my letters are now construed to be "protests", and in the light of developments, what do you think should be done?

It may be so "that this matter has been handled in a regular manner," but can we say that the Government is getting the services of the person best qualified to serve as postmaster?

I shall not go further into the subject in this fashion for I have no desire to add to your burdens, but, General Watson, as a matter of interest you should also read, perhaps, the report of the Civil Service Commission on this same postmastership. I believe you will then find that Mr. MacQuarrie outranked all applicants, has at times been the only one to pass, and that the incumbent since 1936 can't pass the examination. I take it that this is "the regular manner" referred to in the Post Office Department's letter and a further examination is being held to try to find out what has been established over and over again. Although I made no "protest" before, it is apparent that the time has come for someone to do so in the interests of civil service and of the public.

Please believe me with respect,

Faithfully yours,

JOHN A. DANAHER.

General Watson replied to my letter under date of September 23, 1939, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 23, 1939.

DEAR SENATOR DANAHER: I have received and noted carefully your letter of September 20 regarding the postmastership at Southport, Conn. I shall send it on to the Postmaster General personally for his information.

Very sincerely yours,

EDWIN M. WATSON,
Secretary to the President.

Mr. President, in the light of that record, and notwithstanding the circumstances and facts adduced—every one of them from responsible sources and Government agencies—the answer came when, on the list of April 15, 1940, we found as postmaster for the town of Southport, in Fairfield, Conn., Mr. E. Allan Measom, who after 6½ years passed the examination, and who stood second when he finally did pass, notwithstanding the record of Mr. MacQuarrie.

I submit that if the pending amendment offers to the committee in charge of the bill an opportunity to open up the civil service and to make it a merit system, and to place applicants on a competitive basis, as a result of which, when they establish their competency, they will be appointed, the amendment should be supported. Whatever appropriation is necessary to accomplish that highly desirable result should be voted.

Mr. President, that concludes my remarks on the pending amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will vote against the amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a few moments. I wish to make it clear, at this point in the RECORD, that there is no disagreement between my colleague the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] and myself concerning the man who has been nominated for the postmastership at Southport. I share the interest in the civil service expressed by my colleague. During my period of service as a Member of the House and since I came to the United States Senate I have never voted against a civil-service reform proposal, and in every instance when given the opportunity have voted to strengthen the civil service.

I am not as well informed on the postmastership at Southport as my colleague appears to be. It is a matter which I seem to have inherited from a Member of the House of Representatives who was defeated in a recent election. I knew of no interest in this postmastership on the part of my colleague until the name of Mr. Measom, whom I do not know, came to the Senate a few days ago. At that time my colleague advised me that he was vitally interested in the matter and that he would offer an objection to the confirmation of Mr. Measom. I then advised him that if he found the man objectionable I should be pleased to ask that the name be withdrawn; but I had his assurance that he had no personal objection, but rather that his concern was with the matter of civil service, to which he has so clearly referred this afternoon.

Mr. President, I presume that this situation differs not at all from situations which have existed under all administrations relating to postal appointments. I do not know any of the persons involved, except by name. I rise at this time only to make it clear to the readers of the RECORD and to Senators and others who may be interested that, so far as I am aware, there is no disagreement or difference of opinion concerning the particular man under consideration, and to insist that there has been no violation of the postal regulations or the civil-service routine. So far as I know, everything is quite in order. The postmastership at Southport—as has been the long-time custom—has been pretty much in the hands of the postal authorities, the Civil Service Commission, and, to the extent to which I believe they are rightfully entitled to it, the people of the community.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What is the question now pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] to strike out certain words in paragraph numbered 14, on page 48 of the bill.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$282,100" and insert "$353,980", and on page 21, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$26,500" and insert "$71,880."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this amendment is based upon a Budget estimate in a consolidated sum of $106,400. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered as an entity, and passed upon as such.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the amendment being considered in that way. Of course, I am opposed to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered in the manner requested.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this amendment, as I have said, is based upon a definite Budget estimate, which is found on page 131 of the Budget document. I ask unanimous consent that the wording of the Budget estimate be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the estimate was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Salaries and expenses, film service, Office of Education—

Film service: For all necessary administrative expenses to enable the Commissioner of Education, under the direction and supervision of the Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, to continue to exercise the functions of the United States Film Service transferred to the Office of Education, Federal Security Agency, on July 1, 1939, such administrative expenses to include personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; expenses of attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the educational aspects of the motion-picture industry; exchange, as part payment for, office labor-saving devices, purchase of lawbooks, books of reference and periodicals; repair, maintenance, and operation of passenger and other motor vehicles, $106,400 (53 Stat. 561–565).

Estimate 1941, $106,400.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Budget estimate is in certain language, followed by a break-down of the amount. I ask unanimous consent that the break-down following the estimate also be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the break-down was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this amendment has to do with the United States Film Service. Some 25 or 26 years ago the Government began to become interested in making films officially; and during these 25 or 26 years the Government, acting through its various agencies, has made a great number of films. A few years ago this particular work was transferred from the National Emergency Council to the Federal Security Agency. I shall read an excerpt from the order of the President.

I propose to transfer to the Federal Security Agency for administration in the Office of Education, the film and radio functions of the National Emergency Council. These are clearly a part of the educational activities already carried on in the Office of Education.

This particular branch was first placed under the National Emergency Council, and, then, in the consolidation program, was transferred from that organization to the Office of Education, where it now is. Previous appropriations have carried funds for the United States Film Service. I am wondering why this particular item has been selected for annihilation.

This Congress has appropriated, or will appropriate, funds for carrying on 25 or 26 other national film services. The Government, in its various agencies, now has more than 25 different services making films; yet no question has been raised against any of them, for the very best of reasons. The sums carried for those purposes have been covered up. They have not shown up in the appropriation bills. In this year's Budget the Bureau of the Budget set forth this item separately and distinctly. When the Budget reached the House of Representatives, and the House committee saw an item carrying $106,000 for the United States Film Service as a specific item, apparently for an independent agency, the committee said, "There is no authority of law for the existence of the United States Film Service." In that particular I think the committee is correct. There is no law creating the United States Film Service; and, inasmuch as this agency appeared to be a special branch of the Government, independently set up, the House, not passing on the merits of the proposal, said, "There is no authority of law for this independent agency. Therefore, we will not allow the appropriation." The House refused to allow the appropriation, not on its merits, but because there was no specific law authorizing the appropriation of $106,000 for carrying on the work.

Mr. President, at this point I desire to place in the RECORD the authority for this particular item in the Office of Education. I shall place in the RECORD, if I may have permission to do so, a paragraph from the basic law of the United States Office of Education.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There shall be in the Department of the Interior a bureau called the Office of Education, the purpose and duties of which shall be to collect statistics and facts showing the condition and progress of education in the several States and Territories, and to diffuse such information respecting the organization and management of schools and school systems, and methods of teaching, as shall aid the people of the United States in the establishment and maintenance of efficient school systems, and otherwise promote the cause of education throughout the country—

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I place it all in the RECORD, and I call attention to the last line, which I claim covers this authorization. After reciting other duties that the Office of Education is authorized to perform, the last line is as follows:

and otherwise promote the cause of education throughout the country.

I contend that that language is sufficiently broad to authorize the Office of Education to have this sum appropriated and to use the sum for the distribution of films.

Mr. President, this particular branch of the Government is a clearing house for the other twenty-five-odd film agencies. If funds are not appropriated for this agency, the work will not be carried on; and, if that happens, the other agencies which are now making films will have no means through which to distribute the films.

I ask the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. McKELLAR] why this particular item was singled out, and why none of the other 27 or 28 film services has been singled out for annihilation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall be very happy to tell the Senator. I think the House is entirely correct. There is no law providing for a United States Film Service. None has ever been passed. I do not think it was ever the intention of the Congress to set up a film industry as a part of our Federal Government.

The Senator asks me why this particular item was singled out.

I have been on the Appropriations Committee now for more than 20 years, and this is the first time that an appropriation for film service has ever come to light. Governmental agencies have obtained such appropriations in a clandestine kind of way. I do not mean wrongfully, and perhaps "clandestine" is too strong a word; but, as a matter of fact, money which has been appropriated for work relief has been used for film service and for building up a United States Film Service. Remarkable to tell, we find it in a number of departments. I did not know it was so.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have yielded to the Senator in charge of the bill to answer a question which I myself propounded. In a moment I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am willing that the Senator yield now to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether it is not true that the relief money which has been used to make films has not resulted in the employment of relief labor in making the films?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely true according to the testimony submitted to the committee. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I was absolutely astounded to find that in the Office of Education there had been built up a $409,000 business in the making of films.

I call the attention of the Senator to page 251, of the hearings, from which I read the following:

Senator McKELLAR. Wait 1 minute, and let him explain where he got the rest of the money. What other money did you get?
Mr. MERCEY. There were two other sources of funds which came to us for the purpose of financing pictures to be made by two other different agencies.
Senator McKELLAR. Yes.
Mr. MERCEY. The Rural Electrification Administration.

I am a strong supporter of the administration, but I do not want it to spend its money to build up a film industry.

Senator McKELLAR. How much?
Mr. MERCEY. And the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.
Senator McKELLAR. How much from each?
Mr. MERCEY. From the Rural Electrification Administration $28,000, and from the Agricultural Adjustment Administration $50,000.
Senator McKELLAR. Is that all you had?
Mr. MERCEY. That totals——
Senator McKELLAR. What is the total?
Mr. MERCEY. Four hundred and nine thousand dollars.

It struck me as monstrous to be transferring appropriations from one agency to another when there is a prohibition in the W. P. A. law against using the money except for work relief. Admittedly this money is not used for work relief, and yet under the work-relief law they set up a film industry. That is why I say to my distinguished friend from Oklahoma, whom I admire so greatly, that was the first I knew of the establishment of a film industry by the United States, though I have long suspected it, because I am a great moving-picture goer; I am very fond of the moving pictures; I spend a good deal of time, very profitably and certainly very delightfully, at the moving-picture shows. But I am not in favor of the United States Government building up a moving-picture industry.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee another question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be glad to answer if I can.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Would the Senator from Tennessee, as a Senator, favor a proposal denying funds to any agency for the purpose of making films?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be perfectly frank with the Senator. I would have to pass on that when it came up. I would want a bill for that purpose brought before the Senate and enacted into law. After there had been passed a law setting up a Federal industry or a Federal operation of this sort, if the Congress should pass such a law, and the matter were brought before the Appropriations Committee, I should certainly vote for appropriations in accordance with the law; but many of these agencies have certainly taken not one short cut but many short cuts engaging in this line of work and keeping it under cover, so to speak, for a number of years. It has been going on, I think, for perhaps 15 or 20 years.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Since 1912, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Since 1912. That is quite a long time. Insidiously, apparently secretly, not asking for funds for film service, but asking for funds under other pretexts, various agencies have been using appropriations for film purposes to the extent perhaps of half a million dollars a year, and I imagine a great deal more than a half a million dollars, for film services. I think we ought to have a law authorizing it before we appropriate any more money for film services in any department.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, answering the argument just made, only a few years ago the Office of Education requested legislation authorizing it to employ a specialist in motion pictures and radio. That was done 9 years ago, or in 1931. At that time this question came before the Appropriations Committee, and I am advised that the chairman of the subcommittee advised the proponents of that legislation that the language of the basic law was ample to justify appropriating money for a special radio and film artist.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; the Senator is entirely mistaken. The specific question then up was the one affecting library service in one of the departments. I think I was wrong about the opinion I gave at the time; further investigation has rather led me to believe that I was mistaken at that time about it; the question involved was not about film service, because, so far as I can recall, we have not had the question of film service before the Appropriations Committee at all in a number of years—and if there are any members of the Appropriations Committee present, they will confirm what I say—and we have not provided appropriations for film service specifically, but always under other heads.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The record is clear that we have been making appropriations since 1912, not only to build up but to expand the film service among the several agencies of the Government. The record is clear, because I have a list of these services, and I shall place them in the RECORD very shortly. I shall place in the RECORD now, Mr. President, the language under which some of these agencies claim that they have the right to produce, buy, and distribute films. For example, the United States Housing Authority has a film service. The language of the law creating the United States Housing Authority contains specific language authorizing the use of films. I quote from that law:

> The Authority may publish and disseminate information pertinent to the various aspects of housing.

Under that broad authorization the Housing Authority has requested funds, not only for the establishment but for carrying on film service, and funds are now being provided for a film service by that agency.

Take, for example, the Bureau of Mines. The organic act of the Bureau of Mines, which is taken as authority to make motion pictures, says:

> And to disseminate information concerning these subjects in such manner as will best carry out the purposes of this act.

Under that broad authority the Congress makes appropriations to carry on a film service in the Bureau of Mines.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to place in the RECORD at this point the several film agencies which the United States sponsors and for which since 1912 the Committee on Appropriations has been making appropriations in an ever-increasing amount, not only to build up these services but to maintain and carry them on. In the Department of Agriculture we find the Farm Credit Administration maintaining a film service.

In the Department of Commerce we find the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce carrying on a film service.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator state the appropriations that are being expended for these purposes as he proceeds through the departments?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I regret that I cannot do so. The departments are wide and some of the appropriations are concealed. It would take some one from the budget office of the Department of Agriculture to ferret out the exact sums which they desire to use for film service. An expert could take the budget and go through the Agricultural Department items and ascertain what positions and what expenses are to be paid from other appropriations for the maintenance and expansion and carrying on of film service in that Department. I do not have the figures.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Has the Senator any general estimate of the total the Government is spending on the silver screen?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; each one of the several agencies has the same amount as requested by this amendment, for which the Budget Bureau estimates $106,000. The total may be ascertained by multiplying that figure by about 27. It would be somewhat less than $3,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Oklahoma and to others who are interested in the matter that the other day, when this very remarkable situation arose in the committee, and it developed that we were appropriating for this purpose, and had been in the habit of doing so for some years, large sums which evidently were concealed by the various departments, the committee adopted a resolution directing the chairman to write a letter to each department asking them to inform the committee what sums were being spent, so that when the next appropriation bill comes around we may treat all exactly alike, and whatever is being done may either be done hereafter in the open or not done at all. I think there was no disagreement upon the part of any member of the committee that there ought to be the fullest publicity as to the expenditure of these funds.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to make an inquiry of my friend the chairman of the subcommittee. In view of the revelations which he has brought to the attention of the Senate, and his contention that these appropriations—to use his expression—were clandestinely used, I ask the Senator whether he does not think the situation could be best met by offering an amendment to this effect:

> Provided, That none of the appropriations herein contained shall be used for the manufacture or disposition or utilization of films.

In that way we could reach all the 20 or 30 agencies which have been diverting money for film purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; they are not all in this bill, and if we tried to reach those outside this bill the amendment would be legislation, and subject to a point of order. Whether or not it would be subject to a point of order, I should not object to such an amendment; but, if the Senator will permit me a moment, the House committee has made this statement, which seems to me to be very proper:

> Two estimates, one in the amount of $40,000 and one in the amount of $106,400, were before the committee, involving the establishment, on a permanent basis, of a radio service and a film service, respectively.

By the way, they are building up a radio service in the same way.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is for the $40,000 item. My amendment does not cover that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that.

> The committee, after consultation with parliamentary authorities, has concluded that there is at the present time no existing law that would authorize the carrying on of these services. The sums named have, therefore, been eliminated from the bill. The committee reserves judgment on the merit of the two activities and in the event enabling legislation is passed, will review the estimate of need for funds to carry on any work under these heads in the light of then existing conditions.

I do not remember the exact vote in the committee on this matter; but by a majority vote the committee thought the House was right, and we left out these items. That is all we can do at this session, unless the Military Establishment subcommittee or the District of Columbia subcommittee have similar appropriations concealed in those two bills. Certainly they were concealed in the earlier bills. I do not think they ought to be adopted, and I hope the Senate will not adopt them.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there is no illusion about this matter. It is nothing new. It is at least 25 years old. Each bill carries funds available for the dissemination of information. The Congress does not give the departments specific instructions as to how information may be disseminated. The Congress does not say that information shall be disseminated by postal card or by letter, or by handbills, or by any other particular method. That is left to the discretion of the Department.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I can understand how the Department of Agriculture might send out films showing how to control insects, or something of that sort.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall come to that in a moment.

Mr. TAFT. But what possible function has the Office of Education in sending out films? These films have no relation to education.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The answer is plain. This is the central distributing agency for all governmental film services. It is a clearinghouse, so to speak. This is the agency which has cataloged all the films made by all the several agencies, and this is the department which receives applications, sends out the films under instructions, keeps control of them, keeps track of them, gets them back, and sends them out to some other point.

Mr. TAFT. Then, why has it a director of distribution, and why has it spent $150,000 in producing its last film? What has that to do with the distribution of films through other departments of the Government?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall come to that matter in just a moment. It is true that this Department did make the film called The River, and I understand that that film has been shown in all the States of the Nation. It has been seen by multiplied millions; and if it cost only the amount of money stated by the Senator from Ohio, it is one of the cheapest films to have that much circulation that has ever been produced in America.

It is now estimated that to produce a modern film it costs $1,000,000, $2,000,000, $3,000,000, or multiplied millions. The film which shows the destruction of property by floods, called The River, of especial interest along the Mississippi and other rivers where there are floods, did not cost any such sum as that; and it is this particular agency, this clearinghouse called the United States Film Service in the Office of Education, which not only distributes those films but distributes all the other films produced which are worth distribution.

Mr. President, at this point I desire to make the record complete by placing in the RECORD the names of the other agencies which maintain film services.

The Department of the Interior has, first, a Division of Information, with a film service.

It has a Bureau of Mines, with a film service.

The Department of Justice, acting through the Bureau of Prisons, has a film service.

The Department of Labor, first, has a film service in the Children's Bureau; second, it has a film service in the Division of Labor Standards; and, third, a film service in the Women's Bureau.

The Department of the Navy has a film service.

The Department of the Treasury has a film service in connection with Coast Guard activities.

The Federal Loan Agency has a film service in the Federal Housing Administration, to which I alluded just a moment ago.

The Federal Security Agency has numerous film services. First, the National Youth Administration has a film service. The Social Security Board maintains a film service. The United States Film Service is the one I am talking about. It is the central agency which serves all the other agencies in distributing and making available these films to schools and clubs and groups and organizations throughout the United States.

The United States Public Health Service maintains a film service.

The Federal Works Agency has two services—one the United States Housing Authority, to which I have alluded, and the other the Work Projects Administration.

The Pan American Union has a film service.

The Post Office Department has a film service.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has a film service.

The United States Marine Corps, the United States Maritime Commission, the Veterans' Administration, and the War Department have film services.

Then, several of the departments have film strips and lantern slides; making, I think, a total of about 27 separate and distinct film services among the various Federal institutions for which we make appropriations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the purpose of these films and their distribution? Is it to popularize the work of the various bureaus, so that they in turn may build up a popular appeal to expand their functions, and get more money with which to operate?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me place in the RECORD the titles of some of the films prepared by the Department of the Interior. As I put them in the RECORD I shall make probably a line of comment, as I shall be reading from the report prepared by the particular organization—the United States Film Service—for which I am now offering my amendment.

The Department of the Interior has made a film called Alabama Highlands, showing the development of the State park system in the mountainous section of Alabama.

They have made a film called Alaska Fur Seals, illustrating the life history and habits of the fur seals.

They have a film called Beaver Farming, showing the method of handling beavers, both in pens and in fenced preserves.

They have another film called Beavers at Home, showing beavers at work repairing dams and felling trees, also showing beaver houses, and studies of baby beavers.

Another film produced by this Department is called Big Bend National Park Project. It shows a trip through the Big Bend region of Texas, recently made a national-park project, featuring the mountainous area bordering on the Rio Grande, with sequences on Texas natural resources.

The Interior Department has another film entitled "Boulder Dam." It shows the construction of the world's highest dam from start to finish, spectacular work shots, desert and water scenics, and significance of the project.

They have another film known as Carlsbad Caverns (New Mexico). This film shows the geological story of the caverns in animation, with interior scenes of the caverns showing natural formations, and exterior views of the surrounding national-park area.

They have another film entitled "C. C. C. Accomplishments in Pennsylvania." It shows the C. C. C. boys at work in the State parks of Pennsylvania, with sequences on historic, topographic, and civic features of the State.

They have another film known as C. C. C. in a Crisis. It shows the C. C. C. boys building levees and assisting in rescue and flood-control work at various points on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers during the 1937 flood.

They have another film, put out by this one agency, known as C. C. C. in Great Smoky National Park. It shows the C. C. C. boys working in the national park in the Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee, with scenes of the highest peaks east of the Mississippi, mountain streams and wild flowers, and life of the southern mountain people.

Mr. President, the Interior Department have published something like 50 of these films. They are available through this agency to the schools of the United States. They are available to clubs of the United States and groups of the United States.

By means of these moving pictures the people of the United States living away from the cities, in the rural districts, have the opportunity of witnessing scenes in other sections of the Nation. I understand that seeing the film to which I have just referred is really like taking a trip through the Big Bend section of Texas.

I will read the titles of a number of these films, so that the members of the Senate may see the wide scope of the films made by the Department of the Interior.

First there is the film Cooperative Wool, From Fleece to Fabric. That shows how wool is handled by cooperative wool-marketing associations, and shows also wool-production activities on range and farm.

There is a film called The Cougar Hunt, showing the methods followed by Government hunters in predatory animal-control work, with special reference to mountain lions.

There is a film called Cradle of the Father of Waters. That shows the C. C. C. boys in north central Minnesota, with sequences of historic, topographic, and civic features of the State.

There is a film called Day in Virginia Camps.

There is another called Death Valley National Monument.

Another is Down Mobile Way, which shows the C. C. C. development of the State park system in the coastal sections of Alabama.

Another film issued by the same Department is entitled "Duck Sickness—a Menace to Western Waterfowl." That film shows how workers of the Biological Survey discovered the true cause of the disease that has killed millions of waterfowl and shore birds and shows the means of controlling the disease.

Another film is called Evangeline's Haven of Peace, which is a Louisiana production.

There is another film entitled "Fairy Fantasies in Stone," which pictures a trip through the Bryce National Park of Utah, showing examples of erosion by sand, wind, and rain on rock formations.

There is a film entitled "Fish, From Hatchery to Creel." This film shows work in connection with the hatching of fish, stocking rivers, lakes, and streams.

I shall now read for the benefit of the Senate the names of other films, and Senators can draw their own conclusions:

Flyways of Migratory Waterfowl.

For a Changing Empire. That relates to the great State of Georgia.

Another film is entitled "For the People." It relates to the national parks, and the benefits they afford that part of the general public which has the advantage of visiting the national parks.

There is another film entitled "Forest Playground."

Another is entitled "Four Little Mice." This film illustrates the habits and control of meadow, pine, deer, and house mice.

Another is entitled "Glimpses of the National Parks"; another "Grand Coulee"; another "Heart of the Confederacy," the latter taken in Alabama.

Another film is entitled "Home Rule of the Range." It shows the protective measures and the restoration of stock ranges in the West as provided for in the Taylor Grazing Act.

Another film is entitled "How and Why of Bird Banding."

Another is How to Get Rid of Rats. That must be an important film. It is certainly desirable to exterminate rats. The wording following this film is:

> This film shows how we perform the practice of extinction of rats. It gives some unusual views of wild rats in their local habitats and how they are dealt with, how they are eradicated, how they are exterminated.

I should think that film would be of value to some sections of the United States.

Another film is entitled "How to Handle Foxes." This film shows the improved methods of catching and holding as practiced on fox farms. It is of special interest to veterinarians.

There is a film entitled "Human Crop." This is a film which shows the development of organized camping and general recreational facilities on lands unsuited for agricultural or industrial purposes; featuring the 15,000-acre Chopawamsic area between Washington and Richmond.

Another film is entitled "Indian Villages of Antiquity."

Another is entitled "In the Wake of the Buccaneers." It is a travelog.

Another film is entitled "Know Your Coal." It is the story of bituminous coal, from mine to consumer, showing the scientific methods of testing for efficiency.

Another film is entitled "Land of Ten Thousand Lakes." I seem to have heard of that before somewhere. It relates to a very beautiful and entrancing place in Minnesota, and I am certain that the State of Minnesota has had great benefit conferred upon it through the showing of this film throughout the United States.

Another film is entitled "Land of the Giants." It relates to California. It was produced to show the C. C. C. State park developments in California and the areas covered. It shows the California Redwood, Humboldt Redwood, Calaveras, Mount Tamalpais, the San Jacinto Mountains, Rubicon, Prairie Creek, Big Sur, Cuyamaca, Moro Bay, and Russian Gulch State Parks.

Another film is entitled "Looking Back Through the Ages." It is a detailed presentation of the archeological story of the cliff dwellers who formerly inhabited the Mesa Verde region in the great Southwest.

We have the Morristown National Park shown in films. We have the National Conservation reels, which illustrate the work of the Department of the Interior in the conservation of natural resources. Then there are the following reels: Nation-wide System of Parks, Natives of Glacier, Natives of Yosemite.

Old Danish Sugar Bowl is a reel showing the revival of the cane-sugar industry on the island of St. Croix, in the Virgin Islands, one of our Caribbean possessions.

There is a reel entitled "Old Lands—New Uses," taken in South Carolina. It shows the C. C. C. work in the State parks of South Carolina, with sequences on historic, topographic, and scenic features of the State.

I could proceed and read the remainder of the pages of names of reels issued by one agency, an agency in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. President, if it is the desire of the Congress to eliminate and stop the production and distribution of these films that can be accomplished perfectly by refusal to adopt the amendment now pending before the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there any film available showing the Treasury Department, and the legerdemain by which money comes out with none going in?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. An inquiry of the Treasury Department will no doubt bring an answer to that question. The Coast Guard is the only Department of the Treasury which has a film service, and I doubt whether there is any film service which depicts and portrays the nonexistent fact of which the Senator from Michigan speaks.

I may state that at this time the Treasury is carrying a balance in excess of a billion dollars. When this administration came into power some 7 years ago there was no money in the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. In connection with the question asked by the Senator from Michigan, let me suggest to the Senator that such a film as that to which he refers would have to be taken here, under the dome of the Capitol, instead of in front of the Treasury.

I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question with reference to the appropriation. He seems to have investigated the subject most thoroughly. On page 261 of the record of the hearings before the Senate committee, this statement was made by a representative of the Office of Education:

> I would like to suggest to the Senator that there are about 400 films listed here by the Government, and one of the purposes of the Film Service is to see that films are made better; that fewer are made and less total money is spent for motion pictures. I think that the expenditures for the Film Service would be only a fraction of what might be saved during the next fiscal year for Government motion pictures.

Am I to understand from that, and from what the Senator has stated, that already we have appropriated funds to the various departments, which are available for their use in the preparation of and the distribution of films, and that money is sought now by the Office of Education for the purpose solely of trying to bring order into the preparation and distribution of films by the various agencies, so as to perform in a better way the educational purposes they have in mind? Is that the object?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the films which are being made by the various agencies may have value, scenic value, educational value, or value along any other line, they are of no value whatever unless someone sees them. The finest film in the world would be of no benefit whatever unless some agency were provided to distribute it, some central agency to which a school or a club or a group or organization could write suggesting a film they want, or suggesting that they want a film covering a certain subject.

Unless there is some place from which they can get such a film, all the money we are spending for agencies is entirely wasted. It may serve a purpose in providing employment, but, so far as the result is concerned, it is a wasted work. So this particular agency for which the committee failed to provide is the one agency which makes available the work of all the other agencies, and if this money is denied, then the other services, some 25 of them, will continue to make films, but will have no way to release them, and no way of getting them before the country, unless they are appealed to directly, in which event they would make the films available.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not recall having seen any of the films, but I notice in the RECORD that the New York Herald Tribune of March 7, 1940, and the New York Herald Tribune of March 10, 1940, were very enthusiastic in their praise of the films which have been issued recently, and similar enthusiastic praise appears in the New York Times. Can the Senator tell us when the Office of Education began the work of supervising the distribution of films by the various agencies? I desire to know whether these films which have attracted such favorable comment have been issued under the auspices of the Office of Education, or whether they have been issued by various other agencies.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me lead up to the answer. The Government started making films in 1912, some 28 years ago. From time to time different agencies have used funds appropriated to them to start a film service; no doubt, in order to help accomplish the work of the agency. In 1938 the President established the Film Service as a division of the National Emergency Council for the purpose of furnishing to Government agencies such facilities as planning, production, distribution, and so forth. I have already read the President's statement that this function should be under the Office of Education. He transferred this agency to the Office of Education.

Mr. BYRNES. This has nothing to do with the radio service?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I am not pleading for a continuation of the Radio Service.

Mr. BYRNES. It relates only to the Film Service.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. The money is spent for Federal agencies in any event?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Some 27 of them are spending money, first to make films, and then if they have any outlet for them of course they distribute them.

Mr. President, if the amendment is not agreed to, if the Film Service is discontinued, there will still be 26 other agencies engaged in this work, but there will be no central office to distribute the films. This is the central agency. This is the one agency that makes available to the people the films of the other agencies.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that each department distributed its own films up to 1938?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They can do that.

Mr. TAFT. Did they not actually do it?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They can do that, but they do not stress that work, as I understand. This particular agency has published a little booklet, containing over 30 pages, and on each page from 20 to 30 films are briefly described. This publication was issued, March 1940, by the Federal Security Agency, United States Office of Education, Film Service, so the publication is available. It is the instrument used for advertising the films of the various services. Of course, it was paid for with money from this appropriation. A portion of the proposed $106,000 appropriation would be used for personnel expenses, and a portion for the production of films, printing material, and supplies.

So the $106,000 which the committee eliminated from the bill would cover the personnel, as I stated, as well as supplies. If it is not restored to the bill the personnel now engaged in this work will, of course, be dismissed and the money appropriated for supplies will be discontinued. Then we will have some 26 or 27 agencies making films with no perceptible outlet.

Mr. President, this matter has never been brought up in the Senate to my knowledge, but the people know about this service. I read from a statement which has been placed in my hands:

> The United States Film Service was established in part as a production agency for the various Federal agencies which wish to employ the motion picture for educational purposes. The superb record made by the first two films, The Plow That Broke the Plains and The River, indicated the need for a production unit which could produce films on a service basis.
>
> The Film Service has just completed a feature-length film on child welfare and maternal health, showing some of the incidents of health and living conditions in the tenement areas of a great city. This film is called The Fight for Life and is based on the maternal-welfare chapters of the book of the same name by Paul de Kruif, famous writer on science and author of such works as Microbe Hunters, Men Against Death, Hunger Fighters, and several others.
>
> The Fight for Life has drawn almost unparalleled praise from newspapers and magazines for its excellent exposition of the problem of maternal health and child welfare. Some of the comments which indicate the quality of the production are:
> The New York Times (March 7, 1940):
> "We wish there were some form of Pulitzer award for the kind of cinema journalism Mr. Lorentz has been doing."
>
> New York Herald Tribune (March 7, 1940):
> "* * * a stirring and eloquent drama, as well as a document of profound significance. Here is a memorable tribute to the medical profession, accented by challenging social overtones * * * it is a film like no other you have ever seen. It is one you are not likely to forget soon."

On the same date the New York Post had the following to say about the film entitled "The Fight for Life." This film was made by the particular agency which the committee, in reporting the bill, attempted to kill.

The New York Post said:

> The Fight for Life is a film which in certain respects goes beyond anything this reviewer has seen on the screen. It is a tremendous fight, the most thrilling one in the world.
> There will be no better motion picture made in 1940.

If that be the case, this particular agency which is now dangling here almost lifeless, will not be able to produce other films of a similar character. They have produced this film, which has received favorable comment from the great newspapers of New York City.

Time magazine of March 25, 1940, has the following to say:

> In its realism it sustains the suspense luckily caught a few minutes each year on epic news reels.

The Nation, in its issue of March 16, 1940, has this to say:

> The Fight for Life is for many reasons the most exciting picture I have seen since I began conducting this column. * * * Again, as with The River, the United States Film Service and Pare Lorentz have made film history.

The publication known as the National Board of Review magazine of March 1924, commented on this particular picture. I am not advertising the picture. I am simply telling what the newspapers have said about one picture that has just been produced by this Service. The National Board of Review magazine has the following to say:

> Pare Lorentz' The Fight for Life is the first feature-length documentary film to be released to the American public, and it is therefore of great importance not only to the career of this talented director but also in the development of the documentary film in this country.

The statement from which I have read continues:

The Film Service has in production a short subject on the use of electric power on the farm. This picture is being made for the Rural Electrification Administration, and indicates some of the problems of farms without electricity. The work of the agency in cooperation with public and private agencies to bring more electricity to the American farm will be shown.

A feature length film of America's No. 1 problem—unemployment—is in production. This film is designed to show some of the problems which society faces in its effort to find jobs for employable wage earners.

Mr. President, unless the Government maintains some agency or agencies to disseminate information about what the Government is doing, the people will soon be placed in darkness, where they will remain until some future Congress provides the funds to continue this educational program. It may be that some of the activities of the Government should remain in the dark; I will not discuss that proposition; but the good things that are being done should be made public.

Every appropriation bill carries funds for the dissemination of information, and the several agencies have decided that the film is perhaps the best means of getting their activities, their problems, and their remedies before the public. This particular agency is the one agency which makes this service available to the public.

Personally, I think perhaps we have two many agencies in the film business, but the action taken by the committee is not the way to attack this problem. If it is not desired by the Congress to have all these agencies, then a bill should be passed providing for the establishment of one or more Federal film agencies. Such agencies should be highly developed, so that any Federal bureau desiring the service of a film agency can make application to it, and have the film made by the best machinery available, by the most competent operators available, and have the production turned out in the best possible manner.

If I had handled the matter I certainly would have curtailed the activities of a number of agencies, and would have provided one or more high class, efficient, highly developed agencies, to which the bureaus of the Government might appeal for this service. Then, of course, if they showed the authorities that the particular thing wanted to be filmed was of public interest, the film might be made and distributed.

Mr. President, I submit the amendment is not subject to a point of order, because it merely increases an appropriation already carried in the bill. In the event the appropriation is made in the sum of $106,000 it will be spent exactly in accordance with the break-down in the Budget. Every dollar of the $106,000 will go exactly where the Budget specifies that it may go. I have placed the break-down in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is evident where the money will be spent. The Budget, as I stated, carries the item. Not only does the Budget carry the item, but the President—we do not quote the President very much on the floor—but the President, in a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, requested the inclusion of this item in the bill.

After the House rejected the appropriation and the bill came to the Senate, it was considered to be of sufficient importance, in the opinion of the President, to cause him to address the chairman of the committee and make a request that items covering this specific service be placed in the bill as an amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma advise me what agencies, or how many other agencies of government, are using film service?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. About 27; but this agency is the central agency which keeps in touch with all the other agencies, and gathers together their films, and makes them available to the public.

Mr. LUCAS. Have appropriations heretofore been made by the Congress for the continuation of the other 27 agencies?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. This is the first one which has been attacked.

Mr. LUCAS. Why is there a distinction between this particular agency and the others, when appropriations have been made for all the others?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I can tell the Senator the reason. In the other appropriation bills the appropriations have been concealed. Appropriations have been made for the distribution of material and the dissemination of information; and under that broad authority Departments other than this one have produced and distributed films. Unfortunately, the appropriation for this agency came before the Congress in a separate estimate.

It raised its head above the surrounding crowd; and the moment this agency raised its head where it could be seen the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and others saw fit to take a shot at it. Otherwise, had this item been buried and concealed, I presume no one would have known that there was such an agency. No question would have been raised, the appropriation would have gone through, and we should all have been happy. But when the Budget Bureau submitted a special estimate for the United States Film Service, the House proceeded to consider it as a special department of the Government and held that it was not authorized to act as a special Federal agency.

In that opinion I concur. However, as a part of the Office of Education I construe the language of the basic act creating the Office of Education to be sufficiently broad to authorize the appropriation of funds to disseminate information by means of films.

Mr. LUCAS. Is this item provided for in the Budget?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Definitely so. It is on page 131 of the Budget. The language is clear, and the break-down is complete. Of the $106,000, approximately $71,000 is for personnel throughout the country, and the remaining $34,000 is for equipment and material—very largely, I presume, for printing.

Mr. LUCAS. How long has this agency been using films, and how long has the Government been appropriating money for that purpose?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Government started in the film business in 1912. That was about the beginning of the film industry. As the film industry became more proficient and more popular, more agencies began to make films; and in 1938 the President organized the United States Film Service to make available to the public the films of the other 25 or 26 agencies. This agency is a clearing house. As I have said, it has produced two films, both of which have been very popular, but that is not its main function. Its main function is to act as a clearing house for the products of the other 25, 26, or 27 film agencies. This is the one which is sought to be denied.

Mr. LUCAS. How long has this particular agency been in existence?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It was organized under the National Emergency Council. I think it was placed under that Council in 1938. Later, under the Reorganization Act, the President transferred it from the National Emergency Council to the Office of Education, under the Federal Security Administration.

Mr. LUCAS. And each year appropriations have been made for its continuation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct, until this year, when it came out in the open, and Members of Congress began to shoot at it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What are the various agencies which produce films?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have already put that information in the RECORD. Practically every Federal agency maintains a film service. I have already read into the RECORD a list of them.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Can the Senator tell us how much they spend for films?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not know, because the items are covered by the phrase "dissemination of information." One hundred and six thousand dollars is asked for this particular agency. If each of the other agencies is as expensive as this one the total is 27 times $106,000, or approximately $3,000,000. However, the items are covered up. We do not know where they are. It would require a Philadelphia lawyer, probably supplemented by some other lawyers, to go through the Budget and the appropriation bills and find out where the money is. The several departments would know, but the information is concealed.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does not the Senator think the Congress should know?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. A while ago I stated that if I had this matter under my jurisdiction I should advocate legislation providing for the creation of a central film department or agency. I should have one agency, equipped with the best machinery, the best operators—producers, so to speak—the best material, and the best workmen to put the films in shape for public use. Then if the Interior Department, the Federal Housing Administration, or any other department, desired a picture made, it would make application to the central agency, in which event the central agency could send out an efficient machine and a competent operator with proper equipment, and turn out a good job.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Can the Senator tell us of other funds which are hidden in this way, so that Congress does not know where they go?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, earlier in this discussion I said that the Congress appropriates multiplied billions with respect to which the Congress has no knowledge of where the money goes, or what use is made of it. The items are concealed. Perhaps some Member of the Congress knows about one particular item, but the Congress as a whole does not know, because the items are not analyzed so that the Congress can know where they are. Even the members of the Committee on Appropriations, which recommends appropriations amounting to many billion dollars, and the committee itself, have no conception of where the money is to go. The items are concealed; they are covered up; and we do not know for what we are spending the money.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator think it would be unreasonable for an analysis of such expenditures to be given to the Congress by the various departments, for the information of Congress?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If some Member of Congress should see fit to prepare and introduce a bill on the subject, proposing to consolidate all film agencies in one Federal agency, hearings could be held, and all agencies having film services could be brought in to testify. The hearing would disclose the necessity for film agencies, and the kind of agencies needed; and from that hearing the Congress could develop the facts upon which it could act. However, in this instance we are presuming this afternoon to deny a distributing system for all such agencies, but the agencies themselves are to be continued.

No distribution system is provided. I am objecting to that procedure until we can understand the whole matter and the need for the whole thing. It occurs to me that so long as we are making appropriations to maintain the other 26 or 27 agencies, we should maintain this agency to make possible the distribution of the products of the other agencies to the people of the United States. The films are exhibited free of charge. The only cost is the expense of producing the film.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It seems to me the Committee on Appropriations should know where the funds go.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think I can answer that suggestion. The mind of man is not of sufficient caliber to fathom and analyze the expenditure of $8,000,000,000. It simply cannot be done. In the short time the Committee on Appropriations has to give to the matter, it is impossible for the committee to know where all the money goes. We have to depend upon someone to ask for the money and to see that it is wisely expended.

The best the committee can do is to go into the matter as fully as possible. When an item such as this shows up, of course, it should be given consideration. Had this item not appeared as a special item, no time would have been taken this afternoon on this issue, but when the Budget Bureau submitted it as a special item, for what appeared to be a special agency, that agency reared its head above the others, and it is getting the ax.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not want to reflect on the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, but I wish to say that this confession is an astounding and pathetic one. I hope the Appropriations Committee will come forward with some suggestions so that when funds are voted by the millions of dollars for unknown purposes they may be analyzed, and Congress may at least have some little understanding of where the money goes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me make another statement, answering an implied question from the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If I may complete my statement, we have been accused of issuing blank checks. The Senator's statement is the best evidence of the truth of that charge. I say again that I think it is a very pathetic state of affairs.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, each year the Treasury pays out many hundreds of millions of dollars in interest on the public debt and other payments. That sum is not carried in an appropriation bill, yet the Treasury Department pays interest items on the public debt and other indebtedness which the Congress has created.

I think such items amount to a billion dollars, or perhaps more than a billion dollars. They are not carried in an appropriation bill, but we must raise the money by taxation. The matter never comes before the Congress, yet the money appears in the general expenses of the Government. Those items of interest never come before the Congress, which includes, of course, the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator advised as to the kind of organizations to which the films are distributed?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They are distributed to any one who applies for them—mainly to and through high schools, colleges, public schools, lodges, churches, and various other groups.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that they are also distributed to motion-picture theaters?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I cannot answer that question definitely. I think some of the pictures are distributed to motion-picture theaters.

Mr. TAFT. I suppose the Agricultural Department distributes films to granges and other farm organizations of various kinds.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is true.

I will say, Mr. President, that if this appropriation is denied, in my judgment there will be complaints from various organizations which have heretofore received films, but which hereafter will not receive them.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this amendment is in the form of an increase in existing appropriations. Of course, it is in that form, for if it were presented in the form in which it was presented in the House of Representatives, it would be subject to a point of order, for no legislative authority can be found for the function being performed by the United States Film Service. The Film Service started originally in the Resettlement Administration, which produced the picture called The Plow That Broke the Plains, in June 1935.

The Farm Security Administration produced a film called The River, and the last production by the United States Film Service is called The Fight for Life, to which the Senator from Oklahoma referred, a film which cost $150,000, the money coming largely out of relief funds but partly out of this appropriation.

This has not been a distribution agency only; that has been one of its functions; but I am advised that many of the Government departments still distribute their own films to those who are particularly interested in certain subject matter.

The question here is whether or not we want to continue this agency. The employees are set out in the House hearings on page 288, and they include an Assistant Director, a chief of distribution, and various other officers, some connected with distribution and some connected with production. For instance, last year, one man, the Director, received $10,000; then there was a production consultant at the rate of $25 a day, who got altogether $9,000; a technical consultant also at $25 a day, who likewise actually received $9,000. So far as I can see, the Department has been much more interested in the question of production of these large films than it has been in the distribution of films. I think it is perfectly clear that there is no legislative authority for that particular function.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Something has been said about how far back this has gone on. I read from a letter of the President of the United States dated July 1, 1939. He says:

On August 13, 1938, I directed the executive director of the National Emergency Council—

Which is a temporary organization—

to coordinate the production, distribution, and exhibition of motion picture dramatizing certain aspects of the work-relief program, in order that these functions might most effectively and economically serve the purposes for which the films were instituted. Under the authority of that letter, and of my letter dated September 20, 1938, the United States Film Service was established as a division of the National Emergency Council for the purpose of coordinating the motion-picture activities of the Federal Government.

I read that for the purpose of showing that this was all temporary and not authorized by law. It was merely for the purpose of that temporary emergency council and was a function directed by the President to be performed by that temporary activity. So it has not been established for a long time—that is, insofar as the Members of Congress knew about it—and it is only recently that we found out about it at all.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the section to which the Senator from Oklahoma referred as authority for the Department of Education doing this character of work provides that that Department's functions are:

To collect statistics and facts showing the condition and progress of education in the several States and Territories, and to diffuse such information respecting the organization and management of schools and school systems, the methods of teaching as shall aid the people of the United States in the establishment and maintenance of efficient school systems, and otherwise promote the cause of education throughout the country.

The Office of Education, in other words, only has to do with the study of methods of education. To promote the cause of education is a general term. If it is broad enough to cover the production of a film such as this, and the distribution of motion pictures, it is broad enough to authorize the Department to establish schools in every county and every city in the United States. Those words obviously are simply intended as a general catch-all clause to carry out the specific functions of the Office of Education in studying the problems of education and assisting the general educational systems of the United States. I do not see that there is any possible authority in law for this proposal, and I somewhat doubt whether, even if the amendment should be adopted, the Comptroller General would permit the money to be used by the Office of Education for any such purpose.

Mr. President, I do not know about the use of films in many of the departments. I cannot say that they are not useful. I should think it might be somewhat questionable whether a film showing the general method of getting rid of rats, referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma, is the best way to teach people to get rid of rats. I should think there might be much more effective methods and that, perhaps, it would be a waste of money to send films of that kind around the country.

I doubt somewhat the value of a film put out by the Department of Agriculture called Better Days for Dixie, an animated cartoon illustrating the function of the A. A. A. program in the Cotton Belt.

I believe the whole business has been greatly expanded beyond any real value in relation to the functions of the Federal Government. There may be cases in which the use of films is the proper method. I think particularly that farm organizations can use films on particular technical subjects. Perhaps a farmer can be taught things about his farm by pictures better than by instruction by books and direct literature, but I somewhat doubt it. Insofar as films are used simply for general education to provide moving pictures for everybody, I think it is far beyond the functions of the Federal Government, and it is particularly dangerous when films are produced which only in a general way illustrate functions of the Federal Government.

I do not care who is controlling the Government, if it is to produce films and put them out, they are bound to become propaganda for the particular department and the particular work of the department that happens to be covered by the film. There are many instances in literature actually disseminated to show that when such power is given it is used for propaganda purposes, and it is bound to be so used. If the Republicans were given power, it would be used to advance particular measures in which they might be interested. It is true, certainly, also of the present administration.

The pamphlet Study Guide, "The River," United States Documentary Film, describes what a United States documentary film is. That is the kind of film that the Film Service puts out. The River is really in behalf of the cause of conservation, which is a worthy purpose. It is said to be "a persuasive indictment of our practices of the past, together with a dramatic presentation of what we should do in the future" if we are to avoid the disasters of soil and lumber loss and the effects of floods. I notice in a booklet issued by the Federal Security Agency that—

The Russians found this new film form admirable for use in the U. S. S. R. Such epics as October, Potemkin, and Turksib represent some of the best work of the Russians.

In other words, a United States documentary film is a United States propaganda film. I do not care how good the purpose of that kind of a film may be, I do not believe it is an undertaking in which the Federal Government should engage. It may encourage private citizens to do it. There certainly is no objection to some kinds of propaganda by private organizations, but the Federal Government itself ought to stay out of it. For instance, if we offer a service such as the national parks to the people, I do not see why the Federal Government should be engaged in advertising to everybody in the country where all those parks are located. We ought not to have to spend money sending out films to do so. If the parks are not worthy of the attention of the people, and if they do not get attention on their own merits, I do not believe that additional propaganda advertising by the Federal Government is going to make them any more attractive.

The Fight for Life is a picture showing the experiences of a young interne in delivering babies in the slums. It is probably good from an artistic point of view, and probably teaches correctly a great social lesson. However, all it does and all it is intended to do is to convince audiences that slums should be removed, and by a particular program, I might say, or that there should be better medical care for the poor, and by a particular program. The Fight for Life cost over $150,000 of relief money, and no relief workers were employed to produce it. One scene in the picture shows a person getting food from a garbage can. It occurs to me that $150,000 spent in seeing that the man got proper food instead of illustrating a picture of a man getting food from a garbage can would be a more effective use of the particular $150,000.

The Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor has a film called Prenatal Care. It is a picture that is related directly to the subject of the proper method of taking care of babies and the proper method of delivery. It probably cost about $1,000, instead of $150,000 for the other technical picture, and is probably of at least as much educational value. The other kind of film is a propaganda film. I do not care how good the subject is, or how good the purpose for which that particular film is being used. That is the whole issue here.

We find the same kind of thing in a number of books. Here is a book called Let Freedom Ring, with radio script. When one reads it through, it is found to be propaganda for particular things. In some cases it is entirely shameless.

I notice in one case a character called Prindle, the next Republican Congressman, and then there is a note in the book which says that Prindle should be portrayed as the typical politican, hand-shaking, backslapping, and so forth. It is propaganda to show that every party—the Communist Party and every other kind of party—should be allowed to go on the ballot with a very small percentage of the total vote. Correct perhaps, but why should the Federal Government take a position on a Florida statute.

There are other scripts. There is one relating to the conviction of Mooney and the pardoning of Mooney, in which, of course, the person who believes that Mooney should have been released on a writ of habeas corpus is given by far the best of the argument.

Those are only examples. This whole business of film service and radio service for the Government not only has been used for purposes of propaganda, but it is bound to be so used. I believe that when we have a chance to vote on it—and this is the first chance we have had to vote on this kind of thing—we ought to say to the bureaus of the Government that the time has come when they should attend to their particular business, and they should not be out spreading propaganda. We should not provide money to stir up our constituents to come and lobby with us to do the things which we ought to do without any lobbying and without any propaganda.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am very anxious to have a vote on this amendment; and I shall take only a moment or two to state to the Senate what the proposal is.

Fortunately, we put in the record the functions of this central organization, which was apparently set up in a temporary agency in 1938.

1. To study Government motion-picture activities with a view to making recommendations for improvement of quality of product and methods of distribution.

I doubt the efficacy of that, and I cannot see any reason for it.

2. To compile, from the best Government products, a film library under topical organization which would be of great value to educational institutions.

I imagine they already have that. Why set up this establishment for that purpose?

3. To continue distribution of the documentary films, The Plow That Broke the Plains, and The River.

Those two films have been seen by the entire country, and I doubt whether there is any reason for continuing their distribution.

4. To operate a relay system of servicing schools with all films through the National Emergency Council as central clearinghouse.

I see no reason for that.

5. To provide a central information office on all Government film activities.

This is the first time films were ever known to be made of governmental activities. No money was appropriated for that purpose. Such moneys as have been used for it were secretly used under appropriations made for other purposes. The money appropriated for those purposes was transferred to the film industry.

6. To provide publications and study aids to schools and colleges, which would improve the usefulness of Government films.

"Of Government films!"

7. To act as a service agency for the production of high quality documentary films comparable to The Plow That Broke the Plains and The River.

8. To act as consultant to all Federal agencies on matters of production and distribution for purposes of improving movie activities.

9. To act as a liaison between the Federal Government and the theatrical motion-picture industry.

Mr. President, I very much doubt whether there is constitutional authority for those things. It will be remembered that Mr. Jefferson advocated an amendment to the Constitution to give the Federal Government jurisdiction of education. At present there is no such provision in the Constitution. If we are going into the moving-picture business, as outlined by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], a bill for the purpose should be introduced and passed. Let us see exactly what we are doing. When we appropriate money, let us not appropriate it without knowledge on our part of the purposes for which it is to be used. Let there be no dissimulation in the matter of appropriation.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who is one of the outstanding candidates for the nomination for President on the Republican ticket, running every day, expressed some concern about this movie activity on the part of somebody, perhaps the Government, propaganda movies. I wonder if he is concerned because he fears competition with the G. O. P. movies that we read about in last week's News Reel.

I see that last week's News Reel features G. O. P. movies that depict boys out in the barnyard who are very much puzzled about the New Deal administration. They cannot quite figure it out. I wonder whether or not the Senator from Ohio has any concern about the competition that might come to the Government from the G. O. P. movies that are being shown, or will be shown, out through the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope this question will not be settled on any political basis. I think this is an appropriation which ought not to be made.

First, the House committee refused to appropriate for this purpose. Then the House itself refused to appropriate for this purpose. Then the Senate committee refused to appropriate for this purpose. We found all these concealments of the use of appropriations for this purpose, apparently of the most studied kind. I have been able to find only one department—and I have made a somewhat careful examination—which has ever come out in the open in regard to this matter, and that is the Department of Agriculture.

That Department did ask for some $46,000 for use in making films of certain things within its jurisdiction. Every other one of the 27 Government agencies has concealed the use of money for this purpose. It has been consistently concealed through all these years, if it has been done through all these years. It has now for the first time come out in the open; and it comes out for the purpose of consolidating all the other agencies that have grown up secretly, without specific appropriations.

If it is right that we should have moving pictures in the Government service, then, for heaven's sake, let someone who believes it is right introduce a bill directing what organization there shall be, what it shall do, how it shall be done, and the amount of money to be appropriated for doing it. Whenever that is done, I am quite sure the Appropriations Committee of the Senate will be willing to appropriate the money. Certainly I hope, however, this amendment will not be adopted; and when we receive information as to the activities along this line in the other departments we will look after them when the bills providing for them are before us.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the one attitude I desire not to occupy would be one that might be construed as other than friendly to motion or sound pictures. I am of the opinion that the drama is the dearest to the people of all the arts save music.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not want to be put in that attitude, either, because the Senator knows that I am one of the most consistent and regular attendants on the moving pictures of this city and of my home city. I know the Senator from Arizona feels the same way about the matter, because I frequently meet him at moving-picture theaters.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Tennessee is, as usual, correct.

As I was about to say, the drama is coextensive with the people; and of all the arts save music, it is probably the dearest to the human race. The stage is akin to poetry in that it is a great expression of human emotion. The stage is a vision of the romance inseparable from every human life; it is a magical place, breathing the inspiration of color and sound; a place for high thoughts, splendid truths, and beautiful words, for objects vividly observed and gorgeously imagined. The Senator from Tennessee and I are probably the Senate's greatest movie "fans." I will say in passing that it requires courage to take the position which is taken by the Senator from Tennessee on measures looking toward reducing appropriations; but I arose to talk about the subject as presented in another phase.

No one will overtly assail the Bill of Rights. No one will make a direct attempt to overthrow our system of government; such attempts, if made, will be by indirection. The small foxes will gnaw the vines. It will be done by silent, secret, almost unobserved attrition.

I do not recall who said this, but whoever did uttered a truism, to wit, that the time to resist the aggressor is when you locate him, and the time to resist aggression is when aggression is made.

The honorable Secretary of the Interior—and I mention his name with respect—on April 20 issued order No. 1472, reading as follows:

Before any motion or sound picture may be filmed, except by amateurs and bona fide news-reel photographers, on any area under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior (except on areas administered by the Office of Indian Affairs, where the taking of sound and motion pictures shall be governed by the special provisions set forth below), authority must first be obtained, in writing, from the official in charge of the particular area involved. Application for such authority should be submitted substantially in accordance with the attached form.

More bureaucracy. Silently, quietly, sedately, and quite successfully taking away from Congress the authority and the power which constitutionally belongs to Congress—

Charges shall be made only for the taking of feature motion or sound pictures involving sets, professional casts, and technical crews.

The amount of the fee to be paid or of the donation to be made shall be determined in each case by the proper official in accordance with the following formulas:

I. On areas administered by the General Land Office, the Bureau of Biological Survey, the Bureau of Reclamation, and the Grazing Service:

A fee of $100 for each motion or sound picture, where the cast comprises more than 25 persons, without regard to the equipment used or the time or extent to which the area is to be utilized.

II. On areas administered by the Office of Indian Affairs:

In all cases throughout the Indian country any maker of pictures, including Government employees on tribal lands, must consult the superintendents beforehand. Limitations which they may impose must scrupulously be regarded.

The photographing, for whatever purpose, professional or amateur, commercial or otherwise, of (1) ceremonial performances, dances, etc., and (2) places or persons within any of the pueblos of New Mexico and Arizona is subject to the consent of the governing officers of such pueblo.

In the case of the pueblos of New Mexico, where consent, in writing, by the governing officers of a pueblo has been obtained and has been registered with the superintendent in charge of the jurisdiction, a permit from any other source is not requisite.

Any charges made by the Indians and any schedules of wages or salaries to be paid to any Indians who may be employed by the permittee must be approved by the superintendent or other official in charge of the area or areas involved.

III. On areas administered by the National Park Service:

Fifty dollars per day for a cast of less than five persons, and when domestic animals, equipment, or sets are or are not used.

Two hundred and fifty dollars per day for a cast of 5 to 25 persons, and when domestic animals, equipment, or sets are or are not used.

Five hundred dollars per day for a cast of over 25 persons, and when domestic animals, equipment, or sets are or are not used.

There is other matter in the order which I need not now read.

Mr. President, if a bill giving the Secretary authority to issue such an order as this should come before Congress, I should vote against it. Does Congress desire to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior such power?

Do the Members of Congress wish to sit here as staid statues while the Secretary of the Interior usurps power? Under what law does the honorable Secretary presume to claim authority to make such charges. The honorable Secretary presumes, and probably correctly presumes, that we have for so long, under the guise of some sort of an emergency, been silent and acquiescent as to these aggressions, these assumptions of power.

Mr. President, the policy of a free government should always be, yield nothing to aggressors. The time to resist aggression is when aggression is made.

I recently offered a resolution asking the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys to make an inquiry to ascertain under what law the Department of the Interior may charge fees, be they large or small, to make motion or sound pictures on lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. President, to permit the Secretary of the Interior to charge such fees without authority from Congress, is what might be called short-circuiting the appropriating power of Congress or the power to levy and collect taxes. If the Secretary of the Interior possesses the power to levy a fee of $5 a day or $100 a day, we do not need a Congress to make appropriations for carrying on the functions of the Federal Government. Nothing is said in the order as to the likelihood of the continuance of this order, or a possible increase in the fees, as the Secretary may desire.

Mr. President, I measure my words when I say, examine the record of bloody Joe Stalin and you cannot find such an arbitrary, unnecessary, irritating order as to lands.

Under what provision of the Constitution does the Secretary claim the power to levy a charge for making sound or motion pictures on the lands of the United States? There are some good lawyers in the United States Senate. True it is, that after useful men are gone their fame increases. Lord Bacon well said that worthy men receive their abuse during life and their praise and fame after death. But I believe that in the Senate today there are lawyers just as able as the lawyers who served here in bygone days, and there is not a lawyer here who will give it as his opinion that the Constitution gives the Secretary of the Interior the power to enforce such an order as this one. It is wholly ultra vires and void, it is offensive, and in my judgment Congress will sink to a low estate if such orders are allowed to be promulgated and enforced without authority from Congress.

It may be that I exhibit a little heat in this matter, because the moving picture is so dear to my heart, but if this order were directed at an object or an energy in which I had no interest or sympathy I should still feel it my duty to protest.

Mr. President, for more than 50 years unnumbered thousands of persons have been charmed by the melodious airs and the clever rhymes of the Gilbert and Sullivan light operas, and within the past 4 or 5 years millions of persons throughout the West have been charmed by the friendly rivalry going on between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture as to which should have this or that jurisdiction, and which department should be entitled to have a courtesy title placed on a sound or motion picture taken on lands belonging to the United States.

Those who sing melodious airs or write clever rhymes relieve the tedium of life, and next to Gilbert and Sullivan's light operas, the opera bouffe conducted by and between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture as to who shall have credit for this or that, and who shall administer this or that function, rivals Gilbert and Sullivan's light operas. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am informed—I am informed by gentlemen upon whose sagacity and judgment I have been accustomed to rely—that the honorable Secretary of Interior saw a picture that had been filmed on lands under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, but the courtesy line of which gave credit to the Secretary of Agriculture. Forthwith the Secretary of Interior set to work to see what he could do toward having the proper courtesy titles placed on such pictures as are taken on lands under his jurisdiction. Indeed, the order contains, among other things, the following language:

And, on condition that the permittee shall give credit to the Department of the Interior in an appropriate courtesy title if any of the scenes photographed are used in travelogs or motion pictures taken for educational purposes.

Mr. President, I am not going to try to belittle the efforts of the Secretary of the Interior, I am not in any sense muckraking, such a performance does not appeal to me. The honorable Secretary was a success in the Republican Party; he was a success in the Progressive Party; he is a success in the Democratic Party. [Laughter.] So far from feeling any resentment toward the Secretary, I respect his ability. He is a clean man. I do not believe that an unclean penny has ever clung to his hand or will ever cling to his hand. But, it is not sufficient to say that a man is honest. He must also be willing to be guided by reason and law.

When I say that a Senator is honest, that is taken for granted—or ought to be. [Laughter.] I may say that a public man is honest, but that is certainly taken for granted. That, however, is not the whole question. The question also embraces: Is he coherent? Is he fair? Does he obey the Constitution? Is he seeking unauthorized power? I have said here, and I say again, that with the possible exception of alcohol, power enlarges the ego more than any other thing. Power is the headiest wine known. You may select a modest man; temperate, well raised, cultured man; select if you will one who is excessively modest; given power enough he will develop and create an appetite for more and more power. The more power you grant, the more power will be demanded, and the reason I inveigh today against this order issued by the honorable Secretary of the Interior, who is presuming to say by his ipse dixit what shall be done with the lands of the United States, is because the power to say what shall be done with lands of the United States is by the Constitution lodged with Congress.

If the Congress desires to charge $500 a day for the privilege of taking pictures on the public lands, so be it.

If the Congress desires to charge $50 a day for the privilege of filming the ground upon which the Capitol Building is located, that would be execrably bad taste, but it would be lawful. There exists no man in the Government whose ipse dixit can require the charging of a fee for taking pictures of the Capitol Building or of the Supreme Court Building, and so forth.

I shall appear possibly at unwelcome times before the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to urge an appropriation of a small sum to investigate the legality and propriety of this order of the Secretary of the Interior.

This question may seem small, Mr. President. Senators may say, Why, in these closing hours of Friday afternoon, vex and harass the Senate with such questions? Mr. President, great questions arise from small ones.

Mr. President, throughout our lifetime we hear of the fall of the Roman Empire, and we are told that the barbarians came down from northern forests and eastern plains and overwhelmed the Roman Empire. We hear that until it becomes trite. No such thing happened. The barbarians of the north or the east did not come down and by prowess, strength, and valor overwhelm the glittering culture of the Roman Empire. The Roman Empire grew so internally weak and corrupt, the Roman rulers grew to be so grasping for power, the Empire grew so devastating in its raids upon the individual citizens of the Empire that when the men from the north and the east came to invade the Empire the Roman soldier did not fight. He did not flee. He simply said to the invaders, "Come and take us. We would be happier under the barbarians of the forests of the north and the plains of the east than we are under the tax gatherers here in Rome."

Mr. President, I am not predicting the fall of any government. But I am saying that we have a solemn responsibility here to see to it that these small things that insinuate themselves into a government, that destroy a little liberty here, that add a little more arbitrary power to a bureau there, shall be stopped in their tracks.

Mr. President, in order that my remarks today, which are rather disjointed, shall not be merely a brutum fulmen—a harmless thunderbolt—I shall offer an amendment to this bill. Doubtless it is subject to a point of order, and I am frank enough to say so; and if a Senator sees fit to make the point of order, he will be secure from my prejudice; but it is my duty to offer it. It is as follows:

Provided, That no fee, rental, commission, or charge shall be levied or collected for taking and filming of sound or motion pictures on lands belonging to the United States within the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior and administered by the General Land Office, the Bureau of Biological Survey, the Bureau of Reclamation, and the Grazing Service.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was going to suggest that that will not be in order until after the pending amendment is acted upon.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Tennessee is correct.

Mr. President, to use the phrase of a celebrated phrase maker, Theodore Roosevelt, I wish not to occupy the attitude of muckraking anybody. I have already testified to the personal respect I bear to the Secretary of the Interior. I think when many of us are forgotten he will be remembered as an able, courageous official. But neither ability nor courage is an apology for an attempt to usurp authority.

There is no attribute of a man that is an excuse or an alibi for the usurpation of power. We are the guardians of power. If we were the treasurers of our respective counties it would be our duty to guard the county funds. We are here in charge of something surely as precious as the funds of any county. We are here as the guardians of the rights of the people of the United States and we must begin to resist these aggressions by departments.

The fact that some aggression upon the rights of citizens is made, is not dignified or strengthened forsooth because it may be made by an able, prominent Cabinet member, a President, or a court.

Therefore, Mr. President, I say again that at the appropriate time I will offer this amendment. I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point a copy of the order of the honorable Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The order is as follows:

ORDER NO. 1472

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 20, 1940.

Order No. 1445 of February 7, 1940, is hereby amended to read as follows:

Before any motion or sound picture may be filmed, except by amateurs and bona fide news-reel photographers, on any area under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior (except on areas administered by the Office of Indian Affairs, where the taking of sound and motion pictures shall be governed by the special provisions set forth below), authority must first be obtained, in writing, from the official in charge of the particular area involved. Application for such authority should be submitted substantially in accordance with the attached form.

Charges shall be made only for the taking of feature motion or sound pictures involving sets, professional casts, and technical crews.

The amount of the fee to be paid or of the donation to be made shall be determined in each case by the proper official in accordance with the following formulae:

1. On areas administered by the General Land Office, the Bureau of Biological Survey, the Bureau of Reclamation, and the Grazing Service:

A fee of $100 for each motion or sound picture, where the cast comprises more than 25 persons, without regard to the equipment used or the time or extent to which the area is to be utilized.

II. On areas administered by the Office of Indian Affairs:

In all cases throughout the Indian country any maker of pictures, including Government employees, on tribal lands must consult the superintendents beforehand. Limitations which they may impose must scrupulously be regarded.

The photographing, for whatever purpose, professional or amateur, commercial or otherwise, of (1) ceremonial performances, dances, etc., and (2) places or persons, within any of the pueblos of New Mexico and Arizona, is subject to the consent of the governing officers of such pueblo.

In the case of the pueblos of New Mexico, where consent, in writing, by the governing officers of a pueblo has been obtained and has been registered with the superintendent in charge of the jurisdiction, a permit from any other source is not requisite.

Any charges made by the Indians and any schedules of wages or salaries to be paid to any Indians who may be employed by the permittee must be approved by the superintendent or other official in charge of the area or areas involved.

III. On areas administered by the National Park Service:

Fifty dollars per day for a cast of less than 5 persons, and when domestic animals, equipment or sets are, or are not, used.

Two hundred and fifty dollars per day for a cast of 5 to 25 persons, and when domestic animals, equipment, or sets are, or are not, used.

Five hundred dollars per day for a cast of over 25 persons, and when domestic animals, equipment, or sets are, or are not, used.

Where an area administered by the National Park Service is involved, the charge shall be paid in the form of a donation to the national park trust fund.

GENERAL

Permission to take a motion or sound picture will be granted by the proper field official in his discretion and on condition that the permittee shall furnish a bond, or make a deposit in cash or by certified check, in an amount to be set by that official, to insure against damage to the area involved and to assure a clean-up after filming has been completed; on condition that the permittee shall refrain, in accordance with the act of the Congress approved on March 3, 1917 (39 Stat. 1106), from offering any gratuity of whatsoever nature to any employee of the Government in connection with the exercise of the privilege granted; and on condition that the permittee shall give credit to the Department of the Interior in an appropriate courtesy title if any of the scenes photographed are used in travelogs or motion pictures taken for educational purposes.

Motion or sound pictures of wildlife on any area administered by a bureau or division of the Department of the Interior shall be permitted only when such wildlife is shown in its natural state.

When a feature motion or sound picture is to be filmed, the official in charge of the area concerned shall report to Washington immediately, through channels, that a permit authorizing it to be taken has been issued and its terms and conditions.

Upon completion of the filming by the permittee, it shall be the duty of the official in charge of the area to submit a full report to Washington, through channels, specifying the number of days the filming required, and giving, in general, the scope of the picture and the manner in which it was taken.

A copy of the approved application, accompanied by a copy of the required bond or by a statement that a deposit has been made, shall accompany the report.

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

Application for permission to take a motion or a motion and sound picture under Department order No. ------, dated ------, ------

Date ------.

To the ------ (title) ------, ------ (area) ------:

According to the authorization of the Secretary of the Interior contained in the above-mentioned order, it is proposed, with your approval, to film a motion or a motion and sound picture in the above-named area under the conditions stated in order No. ------, the scope of filming and manner and extent thereof to be as follows (an additional sheet should be used if necessary):

1. We will commence filming on or about ------, and estimate it will take approximately ------ days, weather conditions permitting.

2. If any of the scenes filmed are used in travelogs or for use in motion pictures for educational purposes, credit will be given to the Department of the Interior in an appropriate courtesy title.

3. The filming will be strictly in accordance with the applicable regulations of the Department of the Interior, and we will abide with any special instructions given to us by the official in charge of the above-named area. In addition, we will exercise the utmost care to see that no natural features are injured and that the area is left in a condition satisfactory to the official in charge of it.

4. We will refrain, in accordance with the provisions of the act of the Congress approved on March 3, 1917 (39 Stat. 1106), from offering any gratuity of whatsoever nature to any employee of the Government in connection with the exercise of the privilege herein authorized and will furnish to the official in charge of the above-named area, upon request, any additional information relating to the taking of the motion or motion and sound picture covered by this application.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as a member of the subcommittee which considered this appropriation it may be incumbent upon me to say a brief word giving the reasons why I support the position of the Senator from Tennessee in opposing an increase in this appropriation for the film and radio service of the Office of Education. I am impressed that the authority for it is doubtful. I was struck during the hearing by the following statement made by the Senator from Tennessee on page 238:

Mr. Jefferson very early and actively supported an amendment, tried to get an amendment through, putting the education of the people within the Constitution, so that the National Government could take a part therein; but it was voted down. The country has never agreed to that.

I also am impressed by the fact that there is very little of this work which could not be done just as well, if not better, by the existing private industry. Dr. Studebaker, responding to a question of mine on page 150 of the hearings, in which I asked him to describe the nature of these radio programs, stated as follows:

Dr. STUDEBAKER. We have had for the past 4 years now educational programs. The first was Education in the News, in which we attempted each week to give to the people of the country news about organized education.

Another one was a program called Have You Heard? It was on the scientific developments as revealed in the functions of various governmental agencies.

Another one, which might be regarded as a forerunner of Professor Quiz and Information Please, was a little program in which we experimented with a new technique. It was called Answer Me This. It was a question-and-answer technique in educational radio.

Mr. President, referring to that illustration, I think anyone who has listened to Information Please on the radio, or who has listened to Professor Quiz, or to any similar programs, knows that that is a field of activity in which participation by the Government is simply superfluous. In my judgment the reasons for radio programs and film programs fall into two categories. Either they are under the heading of entertainment or they are under the heading of education. I do not believe any Senator will support the contention that it is the business of the Government to go into the field of entertainment. So far as education is concerned, I heartily agree with the Senator from Tennessee that that is a matter which ought to be done directly. If the Government of the United States is going to put out a propaganda film endeavoring to show that the Republicans are good and the Democrats are bad, or vice versa, it ought to be done subject to a considered and deliberated and matured policy.

In my judgment a bill on the subject should be introduced, and we ought to approach this question in a direct way, and not in a furtive way.

I personally have great doubt of the wisdom of placing the Government in the educational field at all, but certainly if we do place it in that field we ought to do so with our eyes open.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, my amendment seeks to increase the item for the Office of Education in the sum of $106,000. The money is to be spent to maintain the United States Film Exchange for the distribution of the films made by the several Federal agencies. The item is budgeted. The Budget is broken down into specific items; so, if the amount is increased, the money will be spent in accordance with the outline or break-down of the Budget Bureau.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There has been considerable discussion of a general nature about the film business, but it seems to me that some information is still lacking as to the details of this work.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] spoke of charging a fee, about which I know nothing, and upon which I shall make no comment. However, it has always been my understanding that these films have been used to advise the people of the activities of agencies of the Government. As I understand, the activities to which the Senator has referred and to which his amendment applies are not commercial activities. There is no question of any rivalry or competition with private films. With two exceptions I believe no plays have been made. I recall the picture which I believe was called The River. There is one other, which I suppose hundreds of thousands of people saw and enjoyed, and which enlightened them with respect to a certain activity of our Government.

Am I correct in assuming that the $106,000 carried in the Senator's amendment is for an exchange or clearing house for all film activities of the various departments, and that its expenditure would be limited to the dissemination of information to the people as to the activities of Government, as displayed in pictures? Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the Senator has correctly analyzed the amendment. I am sure the motive behind the amendment is as stated by the Senator from Kentucky.

The picture entitled "The River" showed the devastation of property and human life by floods. No doubt that picture was devised by someone as an excuse for building levees or showing the necessity for building levees and other flood-control works so as to prevent the exact condition which is shown in the picture. It may be a justification for the enormous expenditures which we incur in building levees, dikes, ditches, and dams for the control and prevention of floods. As explained by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the picture entitled "The Fight for Life" is certainly a matter of general interest to many people in the country.

I do not agree with the Senator from Tennessee that the Government should not carry on any sort of service through films. It is my opinion that we can reach more people more effectively through a display of certain scenes or activities by films than in any other way. The people can sit in places where they are comfortable, and see something which is interesting. At the same time they can learn a lesson from the film. I entirely disagree with the statement that the Government should cease such activities.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are the films which are produced by Government agencies, portraying Government activities of various kinds, shown in public theaters throughout the country as a part of the program?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Or are they shown only in auditoriums where the Government is in control, as in Washington?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am advised that they are often shown in connection with commercial films; but they are labeled, and the public understands that they are Federal or national products.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am almost as devoted a motion-picture fan as are the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I enjoy motion pictures. They are now almost our only form of theatrical entertainment. In order to see a real play we must go to New York, unless a play comes to Washington to be tried out on us, later to go to New York and elsewhere if it is successful. However, the motion picture is now about the only form of entertainment we have from the theatrical viewpoint. I recall on numerous occasions having seen some of the educational pictures which have been thrown on the screen as a sort of prelude to a picture produced by a commercial motion-picture company. I have always derived considerable information and inspiration from such pictures. As a rule, I think no American citizen can observe one of these pictures without feeling somewhat proud of the activities of the Government. It may be more enlightening and more entertaining than merely reading about it in a book, pamphlet, or newspaper.

I think there is much to be said for the suggestion that the Congress ought to know more about what is being done with the money it appropriates. It may be our fault, and probably is our fault, that that matter has not been inquired into heretofore; but it is a little difficult for me to make up my mind to hit at this one agency, which, so far, is the only one that has come out into the open by asking for an appropriation. The appropriation is recommended by the Budget Bureau, and is requested by the President, who has approved the Budget and sent it to Congress. If we could overhaul all the film agencies at one time in one bill, so as to know what is going on, it might be a good thing to do; but I hesitate to do it with respect to this particular agency, especially when it is designed to coordinate all the activities of all the film-producing agencies of the Government.

For that reason I feel very much inclined to support the Senator's amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has used the word "coordinate." I desire to read one paragraph from a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and signed by the President. The letter is dated April 18, just a few days ago. This is the reason the President gives for requesting that the Senate place this item in the bill:

> The continuance of such services in the Office of Education is of particular importance in order to provide for the proper coordination of these activities. The continuance of the film service is of importance to the State Department at this time as indicated in the attached letter of the Under Secretary, dated April 10, 1940.
> I, therefore, urgently request that these items which were eliminated by the House be restored.

I rise at this time merely to advise Senators who came into the Chamber after the amendment was offered what the amendment is.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Danaher	Lucas	Sheppard
Austin	Davis	McKellar	Shipstead
Bankhead	Ellender	McNary	Smathers
Barbour	Frazier	Mead	Smith
Barkley	George	Miller	Stewart
Bilbo	Gerry	Minton	Taft
Bone	Gillette	Murray	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Gurney	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Hale	Overton	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hayden	Pittman	Truman
Capper	Hughes	Reed	Wagner
Caraway	Johnson, Calif.	Reynolds	Wheeler
Chandler	Johnson, Colo.	Russell	White
Clark, Idaho	King	Schwartz	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote, so I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I am advised that if present he would vote "nay." As I desire to vote in the same way, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). I find that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. I transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] who, I am advised, if present and voting, would vote "yea," and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senators from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT and Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are detained from the Senate on public business.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING] are attending committee meetings and are unable to be present.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained in Government Departments.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote on this question.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—24

Barkley	Clark, Idaho	Mead	Sheppard
Bilbo	Connally	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Gillette	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Truman
Caraway	Hughes	Schwartz	Wagner

Downey	Holman	Nye	Walsh

So the amendment of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to which I adverted a while ago, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. —. No fee, rental, commission, or charge shall be levied or collected for taking and filming of sound or motion pictures on lands belonging to the United States within the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior and administered by the General Land Office, the Bureau of Biological Survey, the Bureau of Reclamation, and the Grazing Service.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as to national parks and Indian reservations, in a sense Congress has surrendered to the Secretary of the Interior its jurisdiction over national parks. Bear in mind that a national park may not be created except by act of Congress. Therefore, inferentially, if not actually, Congress has more or less surrendered its jurisdiction over the national parks. That is one of the reasons why I have not included national parks in the prohibition. There are other reasons which might be argued, but I shall not press them at this time.

As to the Indian reservations, Congress, in many instances, has surrendered its jurisdiction, not its sovereignty, over many of the Indian reservations, sometimes by treaty, sometimes by act of Congress, thereby at least inferentially, if not actually, giving to the Secretary of the Interior authority over Indian reservations. These are some of the reasons, among others, why I did not include in the prohibition national parks and Indian reservations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am seeking information only. I do not know anything about this matter, and until the Senator made his remarks today, I had no information at all as to these charges. While probably the amendment is subject to a point of order, I understand the committee is not making the point, and I certainly shall not, because it will go to conference anyway.

If the amendment should be enacted into law anyone in this country for his own pleasure, or for commercial purposes, could go on public land and take motion pictures without having to make any contribution whatever toward the public land or the activities of the agency involved. In other words, would it be possible for anyone, without the consent of anybody else, to go on these lands and take pictures and then commercialize them throughout the country on the screen? Or what would be the effect of the amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. First, let me say that I am proud to serve under the able Senator from Kentucky as leader. I do not see how any one man could grasp so many different points. He has demonstrated his leadership on a hundred different occasions. I desire to compliment him not only because of his ability but because of his toleration.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for his very generous remarks.

Mr. ASHURST. My opinion is that the Secretary of the Interior has heretofore been granted the authority to make rules and regulations, and even to charge fees—fees such as he might see fit to charge for using the national parks. In fact, in many national parks an entrance fee of $10 for an automobile is charged.

We gave up our jurisdiction over the Indian reservations years ago, and I can well understand that the Secretary of the Interior has the authority and power to administer those lands. He is trustee for the Indians. We have made him such. He may charge fees. Indeed, even so eminent a citizen as the Senator from Kentucky could not cross some of the reservations without a permit. Although the Senator is a sovereign, a great citizen of a great country, he could not cross or enter upon the vast domain of some of the reservations, a domain larger than the great State of Rhode Island, without a permit to do so.

The amendment refers to what we call the public lands; and that is a technical term. Public land is land which has not been reserved for some other purpose, but we sometimes employ the term "public land" indiscriminately, and sometimes incorrectly.

I opposed the Taylor grazing law, but I am not rehearsing that old fight. I am not bringing up old ghosts. The grazing lands are tremendous in area. Some of their areas are larger than the areas of entire States.

To answer the Senator, I do not perceive why the honorable Secretary of the Interior should be granted the power to charge fees and commissions to enter upon such lands as I have described; that is, lands under the jurisdiction of the honorable Secretary, but administered by the General Land Office, the Bureau of Biological Survey, the Bureau of Reclamation, and the Grazing Service.

I should like to extend my amendment, and have the prohibitions go further, but it would not be good strategy, and I do not want to overdo my task. There will be plenty of time in the future after further study.

Mr. BARKLEY. This matter came up wholly unexpectedly, and I do not know what reason the Department of the Interior has for making these charges, but it was running through my mind that, of course, while the public lands have been reserved or withdrawn from the public domain, as the Senator defined them, for some specific purpose, nevertheless, they are a charge on the Government, and the Government supervises them, of course. I suppose it employs numerous people to look after them.

Mr. ASHURST. Not particularly the public lands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do any of these public lands contain forests, which the Government has to protect from fires and other hazards?

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator will observe that I have not included the forests, because the national forests are under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Still, the public lands under the Department of the Interior contain some forests, I believe.

Mr. ASHURST. I say to the able Senator, and I beg other Senators from the West to assist me in this, if I stumble, almost all of the forest lands, the real forest lands of the United States, are now in national forests, and are administered by the Department of Agriculture. I am quite within the bounds of conservatism, when I say that nearly all the true forest lands, to wit, those containing any so-called saw timber, are already set apart as national forests, and are administered by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, if I may interrupt, is it not also true that in addition to forest lands, vast acres have been reserved containing no timber whatever?

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the able Senator from Wyoming. I wish to err on the side of conservatism, if I err at all. Not only have almost all the forests been included in forest reserves—that is, national forests—but many thousands of acres of land, indeed, many scores of thousands, have been included in national forests even though they have no timber at all, and still more thousands of acres have been included into forest reserves where there are only scraggly and infrequent trees.

Mr. BARKLEY. Scrub trees.

Mr. ASHURST. Scrub trees. In other words, under authority granted under the law, they have taken pains to include all the forest lands and much that is not forest land, and are like the man who said, "I am not selfish. All I want is my own land and that which adjoins mine."

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will permit me, and I wish to conclude——

Mr. ASHURST. I do not want the Senator to conclude. His questions are searching and proper, and I feel that he is doing a public service. My zeal might lead me——

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand; the Senator's zeal is very admirable and commendable, and I always enjoy it. Frequently I feel inspired by it.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have not heard the Department's side of this matter. They must have some reason for making these charges. I do not know what it is, but I assume there is a reason why they make this charge, and it occurs to me that the Department ought to be given an opportunity to be heard with respect to it.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator's amendment goes into the bill, and it goes to conference, while they do not have hearings in the conference on the differences between the two Houses, I certainly feel that the conferees ought to give the Department of the Interior the opportunity to show why this charge is assessed.

Mr. ASHURST. That is but an additional proof of the Senator's fairness, and I myself, if this amendment goes to conference, so far as I have any power or authority, shall suggest to the conferees that they ask the representatives of the Department of the Interior to make statements to the conferees. I wish no quick-trigger action.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I know of nothing which is more shorn of all possible harm than the taking of pictures. Here are vast domains owned by the Government. The idea of charging a man for the privilege of taking a picture on public lands, no matter what kind of picture it is, is obnoxious to the spirit of a free people.

When the Secretary read the figures as to what the Secretary of the Interior was charging—I take it for granted that the amount was as the Senator stated, but be that as it may—I was shocked at the idea that a citizen with his camera, taking pictures for his own pleasure, or going out and taking pictures for commercial purposes, should be charged a fee from the Government. Why should not we state that so far as moving pictures are concerned, or any kind of pictures, that anyone who wants to take them on the public lands is at liberty to do so?

Mr. President, we are coming to the point when I do not know whether I am at liberty to go out of here and walk down the street unless I get a license to do it. We are just sitting here and allowing bureaus and Government agents to gerrymander us to a point where an American citizen does not know whether he is free or not.

When the Senator was reading the figures earlier in the afternoon I started to ask him a question with respect to those who are boring from within and destroying the Constitution of the United States. Of course, the Constitution is temporarily submerged. We do not pay any attention to it. I want to say, Mr. President, that the bill is almost entirely unconstitutional. There is not a Senator present who would vary our written Constitution, but Senators know that the bill is absolutely unconstitutional. Mr. President, it provides for taking care of children, providing for social security, and a thousand other things that we a few years ago would absolutely have scorned doing. Yet we have got so in the habit of hoping that by adopting certain amendments and passing certain bills we will get some votes, that we are willing to damn the Constitution and be governed by men and not by law.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I welcome the interruption of the able Senator from South Carolina, and I do not use the word "able" merely as a parliamentary gesture. He is an able Senator. I do not wish, however, to be drawn away from the main question. I wish to confine myself as nearly as possible to the present situation.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Wyoming, who I believe knows more about public land than I do, and probably as much if not more than any other Senator in this body.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I thank the Senator, but I will have to confess my ignorance, because I want to ask the Senator a question. I want to ask him what effect his amendment will have on wildlife refuges; whether the adoption of his amendment will permit moving in on wildlife refuges or not.

Mr. ASHURST. No; it will not.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. As I understand, wherever the Secretary does have the power to act at all the Senator's amendment would not prevent him from exercising the power to keep anyone off wildlife refuges?

Mr. ASHURST. That is the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. President, no Senator would be forgiven at this hour of the day for speaking at length, but in conclusion let me say that Arizona has an area of 113,956 square miles. It is nearly a hundred times the size of Rhode Island.

Senators, remember that of that vast area, according to the figures of 1931, 72 percent of the lands of that State are under the Federal Government. The State holdings are about 14 percent of the total area of that State, and the private holdings only 14 percent.

Some years ago a healthy event took place. As a rule we have a Senator from the West to be chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, but by the evolution the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], one of the keenest thinkers and one of the most authentic scholars of the Senate, became, by dice of destiny, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. He did the proper thing. Not being a western man, he visited the West. He went to the national parks, and other reserved lands, as was his duty. We are grateful to him. I am sure he must have been amazed to find various things, such as the fact that the State of Arizona has 72 percent of its area administered from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments, and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H. R. 9007) was passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) amending Public Resolution No. 112 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and Public Resolution No. 48 of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

PROTECTION OF CERTAIN FOREIGN PROPERTY WITHIN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 252, Calendar No. 1550.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, is there any intention on the part of the Senator to proceed with the joint resolution tonight?

Mr. WAGNER. I shall not ask for its consideration until Monday morning.

Mr. McNARY. That is the understanding.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 252) to amend section 5 (b) of the act of October 6, 1917, as amended, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency without amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] yesterday discussed Senate joint resolution 252. I think the Senator from New York and all other Senators interested should properly have before them the—shall I call it the concentration of wisdom on the part of many with whom I have spoken? I intend to send to the desk certain proposed amendments, that they may lie on the table and be printed.

One amendment would limit the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the pending joint resolution in such fashion as that they would not apply to American citizens.

Another amendment would transpose language appearing on page 2 of the pending joint resolution in this way: On page 1, line 11, it is proposed to insert the following:

> The acts under which any foreign state or a national or political subdivision thereof, as defined by the President, has any interest, following, to wit:

Therefore it would require that there be stricken from page 2, lines 6, 7, and 8 the words:

> In which any foreign state or a national or political subdivision thereof, as defined by the President, has any interest.

The third proposed amendment would limit all power conferred by Senate Joint Resolution 252 in amending existing law, in such fashion that the measure, as amended, would terminate on May 1, 1941.

Mr. President, I send the three amendments to the desk and ask that they be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be printed, and will lie on the table.

AMENDMENT TO PATENT STATUTES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] has a matter which will require only a minute or two. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Washington may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, let me explain that on August 1 of last year Senate bill 2688 was before the Senate. It was one of a group of bills which came to the Senate as a result of the findings and activities of the Temporary National Economic Committee. All those bills save two were passed. To be more correct, five of them were passed without any question. The sixth was passed by the Senate on August 1 of last year, but question was raised by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who suggested some change in language, which was adopted on the floor, and the bill passed without any discussion and without any opposition.

The following day the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] having some question in his mind about certain language in the bill, asked that it be reconsidered, and so it is now on the Senate Calendar under motion for reconsideration. It is my desire at this time to bring up the bill. It will require only a moment to dispose of it. I shall make certain motions for the purpose of the RECORD, Mr. President.

I wish to explain that I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Montana, who has suggested certain language which I submitted to the Commissioner of Patents. That language is almost identical with that which was selected last year, and which met the approval of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. So, apparently there is now no objection to the bill. It is the so-called 20-year-patent bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, is there a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. BONE. I am about to make certain motions. The first is that we reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not understand the nature of the request.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, on the 1st of last August the Senate passed one of a group of bills which had been reported from the Committee on Patents. All of them received the approval of the Senate. On August 1 the last of these bills, which had met the approval and obtained the blessing of the Temporary National Economic Committee, was passed. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] was in doubt about some of the language, and an amendment which embodied his ideas was offered on the floor and agreed to, and the bill was passed without objection.

The next day the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], having some doubt in his own mind due to a letter which he had received from a lawyer in Chicago, asked that the vote by which the bill had been passed be reconsidered; and so the bill is now on the motion calendar for reconsideration.

It had been my purpose to talk to the Senator from Montana about the bill, but because of my injury I was unable to do so until I returned to the Senate. Language has now been drafted which is substantially that of the amendment which I offered on the floor and which was adopted by the Senate. It meets the approval of the Senator from Montana, who was the only one who raised any objection. Apparently there is no objection to the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that pending the motion to reconsider, which was entered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], all parties have got together and agreed on the language.

Mr. BONE. Yes. There is now no disagreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator wants the vote by which the bill was passed reconsidered?

Mr. BONE. I wish to go through the necessary parliamentary procedure to dispose of the bill at this time. It will take only a moment.

I now move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 2688 was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BONE. I now move to reconsider the vote ordering the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BONE. I now move to reconsider the vote agreeing to the amendment offered by me on the 1st of last August.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BONE. In lieu of the matter in the amendment adopted on August 1, 1939, I send to the desk the language of another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the amendment agreed to on August 1, 1939, it is proposed to insert the following on page 2, line 5, after the word "patent":

Provided, however, That the Commissioner of Patents may, in his discretion before the patent issues, extend such 20-year period to compensate for unavoidable delays during the pendency of the application shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner not to be chargeable to the applicant; and in the case of any application which has become the property of the Government of the United States or any office or agency thereof, and which has been certified as important to the armament or defense of the United States as provided by Revised Statutes 4894 (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 37), such 20-year period shall be extended by adding thereto any period or periods of delay authorized by said Revised Statutes 4894.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment as general officers in the Regular Army.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

JUDGE OF POLICE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. KING. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary I report favorably the nomination of George D. Neilson, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the police court for the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there is some congestion in the police court, and it is important to relieve the congestion, I ask that the President be notified, so that Mr. Neilson may take his position as soon as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL—ARKANSAS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary I report favorably the nomination of Henry C. Armstrong to be United States marshal for the western district of Arkansas, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. MILLER. Because of the situation existing in the western district of Arkansas, on behalf of my colleague [Mrs. CARAWAY], I ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I mave that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, April 29, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 26, 1940

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God. Thou art able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think; therefore do Thou work within us the purpose and the pleasure of Thy holy will. We rejoice that the zone of Thy Fatherhood in its sympathies, provisions, and invitations is as wide as the races of men. All glory, honor, and majesty be unto Thee, O Lord most high. Spare us from life's sorest loss, a loving and a believing heart. Almighty God, as human life is so manifold and so inglorious today, making its cries heard around the world, have mercy, have mercy. The cross, with its meaning and purpose, is but faintly gleaming in the minds of men. O stay Thou the flood of terror generated by the insanity of war. Draw near to all who are contesting their way in this burdened world, overtaken by fear, disaster, and death. Be with us, O Good Shepherd, make plain the pathway of duty, and Thine shall be the praise. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6264. An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BAILEY, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. MCNARY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered that Mr. FRAZIER be appointed as an additional conferee on the part of the Senate to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3800) entitled "An act to amend section 8 (e) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended."

BOARD OF VISITORS, UNITED STATES COAST GUARD ACADEMY

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

APRIL 25, 1940.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN, Member of Congress from North Carolina, an appointee of the Board of Visitors of the United States Coast Guard Academy for the calendar year 1940, will be unable to attend the meeting of the Board at New London, Conn., on May 4. Therefore, by authority of Public, No. 183, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, amending section 7, of Public, No. 38, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, I have appointed Hon. JAMES A. O'LEARY, Member of Congress from the State of New York, as a member of the Board of Visitors in the place and stead of Mr. WARREN.

Yours very sincerely,

S. O. BLAND,
Chairman, Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS, 1941

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees, Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. GAVAGAN, Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. SEGER, and Mr. CARTER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, rendered by Chief Justice Hughes the other day, concerning the respective water rights of the States of Colorado and Wyoming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, though I shall not do so, but I rise to express the gratification of the House upon having the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations back with us, sound and well. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado.

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial from a New York newspaper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

VETO OF TRAVEL PAY BILL

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the remarks of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH], on pages 5030, 5031, and 5032 of yesterday's RECORD, in which he discusses the issues involved in the overriding of President Roosevelt's veto of the travel-pay bill for certain soldiers who took part in the Philippine Insurrection. Included in his remarks is the report of the Committee on War Claims. This will amply justify the vote of the House of 274 to 82 to override the President's third veto of this just bill, which was intended to right an ancient wrong, for there was never a more just claim against the Government. It is more than a just claim; it is a sacred obligation incurred by the responsible heads of the Government in a very serious crisis.

I ask the Members of the House to look over that extension of remarks, so that they may justify their vote of yesterday.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include letters which I have in my possession and a quotation from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include editorials on aviation from the Washington News.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AREA OF PRODUCTION

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was done once here yesterday, but I cannot agree to have that done any more. I made a statement upon the floor of the House 2 months ago in which I said that objection would be made to an extension of remarks before the legislative program of the day was taken up, and I shall have to object to the gentleman's request.

Mr. JOHNS. Very well, Mr. Speaker; I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I do this to call attention to a telegram which I have received from Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, and a letter received from Charles W. Holman, secretary of the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation. They are in favor of the Barden amendments to the Wage and Hour Act, because they feel that is the only way they can come out whole on the cost of their products, where their markets have been taken away from them, they claim, by the trade treaties, and the amount of trouble they have during the rush season in many processing industries.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the telegram and letter referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in two particulars; in one to print a letter having to do with the rights of seamen, and the other having to do with the wage and hour law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, following the legislative program of the day and any other special orders, I may be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two extensions of my remarks: One to extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 289, and the other to extend my remarks and include a letter from the Air Line Pilots' Association.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

WHAT THE COMMON PEOPLE THINK

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a little piece of paper about 2 inches wide and 3 inches long. It is a letter that was sent to me by one of my constituents who is one of the common people and a coal miner and small farmer. I want the Congress to know what the common people think and what they say. On this paper is written a great speech. On it is written a most profound sermon; and if I can read it within the time, I will do so. It is as follows:

MR. JENKINS: There are a lot of people that can and would make their own way if the Government would just let them alone. Too much dictatorship in the Government now. A man can't dig and sell a ton of coal on his own farm without having vendor license and make out reports and have them notarized and make yearly reports, and get bushels of Government paper telling him what to do. We don't want the Government to discourage all small and large business. Let the American flag mean to us what it did 60 years ago, a free country. Let's vote it straight Republican; and if that don't make it better, I will give up. I may be wrong, but don't think I am. Do all you can for the poor that can't help themselves.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to bring this bit of safe statesmanship and correct economy and sound theology to your attention. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include two letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 87]

Alexander	Disney	Lea	Shafer, Mich.
Allen, Ill.	Douglas	McMillan, Clara	Sheppard
Boren	Durham	Martin, Ill.	Sheridan
Buckley, N. Y.	Fitzpatrick	Merritt	Short
Burgin	Gilchrist	Miller	Smith, Ill.
Caldwell	Goodwin	Moser	Smith, Va.
Casey, Mass.	Hancock	Murdock, Utah	Starnes, Ala.
Chapman	Hendricks	Oliver	Steagall
Claypool	Hennings	Osmers	Sweeney
Connery	Hill	Plumley	Voorhis, Calif.
Crowther	Jarman	Reece, Tenn.	Wheat
Culkin	Johnson, Ind.	Rogers, Okla.	Whelchel
Darrow	Keller	Schulte	White, Idaho
Dies	Kirwan	Seccombe	White, Ohio

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and seventy-four Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I rise to a question of the privilege of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privilege of the House and will offer a resolution which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, April 25, while the House was in session and had under consideration House Resolution 289, the gentleman from the Second Congressional District of Georgia, under the rules of the House, had the floor.

The official transcript shows that, at that time and while speaking to said resolution, certain proceedings occurred in the House during which certain remarks were made by the gentleman from the Second District of Georgia, which had reference to the gentleman from the Twelfth District of Michigan.

That, thereafter, the gentleman from the Twelfth District of Michigan demanded that the words of the gentleman from the Second District of Georgia be taken down; that the words which had been used were taken down; that they were reported by the Clerk of the House to the House; that the Speaker of the House thereupon made a ruling with reference thereto, and that, thereafter, a motion was made by the gentleman from the Twelfth District of Massachusetts; that said motion was put by the Speaker; that a vote was taken thereon and that the Speaker announced that said motion was adopted and that, thereafter, proceedings of the House were taken in accordance with said motion; and that all of the proceedings hereinbefore referred to are a part of the official records of the House, except such parts thereof as were properly withdrawn under a unanimous-consent request made by the gentleman from the Second District of Georgia—RECORD, p. 5052—when the following occurred:

> Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in view of the ruling of the Speaker pro tempore, I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw certain remarks I made this afternoon to which objection was raised.
>
> The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX]?
> There was no objection.

It further appears from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 5046 to 5647, that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is the official record of the House, does not contain the demand of the gentleman from the Twelfth District of Michigan that the words uttered by the gentleman from the Second District of Georgia be taken down. It does not contain the report of the Clerk of the House. It does not contain the ruling of the Speaker thereon.

It does not contain the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts. It does not contain the record of the vote on said motion. It does not contain the announcement of the Speaker of the result of said motion nor the action of the House thereon.

That the omission of said matters to which reference has just been made results in an inaccurate record of the proceedings of the House on yesterday, April 25; that the omission reflects upon the integrity of the records of the House and that the record, as printed, is not a true, accurate record of the proceedings of the House as of yesterday and, if permitted to stand as the record of the House, will, in view of the fact that the public is aware that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not now a true and an accurate statement of the proceedings of the House as of yesterday, tend to bring the House into disrepute.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had examples——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. When a Member rises to a question of the privilege of the House he must first offer a resolution before addressing the Chair. I make the point of order that this has not been done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That, of course, is correct.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Georgia or not?

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will yield to me we can probably clear up the situation to his satisfaction—if he will yield to me for a brief statement.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield for a statement.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, a copy of the remarks I made in the House on yesterday came to my office late in the afternoon, about the time I was going out with friends for dinner. I did not undertake to correct them until later in the evening. I hurriedly went over them and when I came to this part of the address I noticed that the proceedings to which the gentleman refers had been stricken out. I did not strike them out. As a matter of fact, I did not go over that part of the RECORD. I simply accepted what somebody else had done and passed on over the remainder of my remarks.

In view of what the gentleman says, I wish he would yield to me to ask unanimous consent to reinsert in the RECORD the entire proceedings with the exception of my remarks which were held to be out of order—and, I am willing to admit, properly so—to withdraw which I obtained unanimous consent later in the afternoon.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the statements of the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Michigan, I believe the House should find out who did strike the remarks in question before we ask that they be reinserted.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further at this point.

Mr. COX. I made a perfectly honest statement about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state——

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would like a ruling on my question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A ruling cannot be made yet, for no resolution has been offered.

The Chair remembers very definitely that the gentleman from Georgia asked unanimous consent after we got back in the House yesterday to strike from the RECORD his remarks concerning the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. COX. I felt that the House should grant that request on my part particularly because of the ruling of the Chair. But the gentleman is unquestionably right in the position he takes this morning. There are certain parts of the RECORD that should not have been deleted, and I am asking unanimous consent that the entire proceedings be put back in the RECORD, other than the deletion of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia submits a unanimous-consent request. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I object, Mr. Speaker. I ask a ruling on the question of the privilege of the House I have raised.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has not offered any resolution yet.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Must I offer a resolution in order to have the question of the privilege of the House passed upon?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In order to raise that question a resolution must be offered. The gentleman from Mississippi has made the point of order that no resolution has been offered.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Very well, I offer such a resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Whereas the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 25, 1940, is not, on pages 5046 to 5051, inclusive, a true and accurate record of the proceedings that took place on the floor of the House on yesterday, in that there is omitted therefrom a demand which was made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from the Twelfth Congressional District of Michigan that certain words uttered on the floor of the House by the gentleman from the Second District of Georgia be taken down, and, there is omitted therefrom, the ruling of the Speaker upon such demand, and there is omitted therefrom a motion which was made by the gentleman from the Twelfth District of Massachusetts, and there is omitted therefrom the vote taken on said motion, and there is omitted therefrom the result of said vote and the subsequent direction of the Speaker to the gentleman from Georgia to continue: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the RECORD of the House be corrected and that the proceedings above referred to be printed therein.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand recognition on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. HOFFMAN. For how long?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For 1 hour if the gentleman desires.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is a strange procedure where after for more than 3 or 4 or almost 6 years, during which this House has been asked to delegate its power to the administration or the executive branch of the Government, where after the executive branch had made an assault upon the courts and endeavored to influence the judicial procedure of the courts——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] should confine his remarks to the resolution.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi is seeking to make a point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan has no right to go out of his way and attack the administration. He must confine his remarks to his resolution.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I recognize that fact, but since when in this country is a Member of the House denied the right on the floor of the House to attack the opposition? Such a denial of the right of criticism is the correct procedure in Russia and in Germany, but I am not aware that that is the proper procedure here in this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not now. I am calling the attention of the House to the seriousness of this question of procedure. Where in a country which is supposed to be free, where in a country after 7 years it is almost impossible for a man to carry on his business, where the Supreme Court of the United States has said that the remedy, if there is a remedy, when a man's business is destroyed, rests with Congress.

Note the language from the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in Fur Workers Union, Local No. 72, et al., v. Fur Workers Union, No. 21238, and H. Zirkin & Sons, Inc. (decided March 27, 1939, and reported in 105 Fed. (2d) 1, and afterward affirmed by the United States Supreme Court on December 11, 1939). This is the language of the circuit court of appeals:

> The argument is that unless injunction can issue in such a situation, the employer may well, for lack of other remedy, see his business destroyed. * * *
>
> It is clear further that in such a situation there is no remedy for the employer under the National Labor Relations Act. * * *
>
> The result is an inequality before the law as between an employer and employees in this particular, namely, that while the employer has a substantive right to carry on his business, he lacks a legal remedy for protecting the same against injury through the struggle of competing unions.

And the court then said:

> Such argument of hardship must be addressed to Congress.

The circuit court of appeals, in a decision affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, having told us that a man's business might be destroyed; that the Court could not, or at least would not, protect him; and that his remedy was with Congress, is it not incumbent upon us to protect the record of our proceedings? To insist that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows what happens here in Congress day by day? That it be a truthful account of the doings of the representatives of the people?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I regret very much that the gentleman, who comes from that very, very small district in the city of Chicago, and who represents so very, very few people in Illinois, should object to a statement of the reasons why it is important that the RECORD of the House should truthfully set forth the proceedings of the House. When interrupted, what I was trying to say was this: When, after the Supreme Court in two decisions has stated that under the legislation passed by this body the business of a man—and they stated it in a case which involved a Washington resident—might be ruined and taken from him, and that the courts had no authority or no power to extend aid and that the remedy rests with Congress——

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to make a point of order, but the House has certain rules, and the gentleman who is trying to enforce the rules of the House should be governed by the rules of the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I agree, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] was not proceeding in order when the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] made the point of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You mean in laying the foundation, in attempting to show the necessity of the RECORD of the House being a true and an accurate account of the proceedings of the House, I am not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled and does not desire to argue with the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I beg the Chair's pardon. I do not want to argue, I only want to state the reasons for the introduction of the resolution, the purpose which it seeks to accomplish, the necessity for the House taking action on the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman was not proceeding in order and the Chair now asks for the third time that the gentleman proceed in order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. In just a minute. All I am attempting to do, and I hope I may have intelligence enough to proceed in order——

Mr. BULWINKLE. I hope so, too.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is to show—I object to the gentleman interrupting me, when he violates the rules of the House by speaking without recognition from the Chair and at a time when I had not yielded to him.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order. The Gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] will proceed in order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The question raised by the gentleman is a highly important one, particularly from the viewpoint of those who believe in our American constitutional system of Government. Of course, the New Deal bureaucrats who want to regulate everything used or done by man from the cradle to the grave, with or without constitutional sanction, might not think so. In view of its importance and in view of the fact that our colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], has indicated that he had nothing to do with striking out vital parts of yesterday's daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, do you not think it would be well for the gentleman from Michigan to yield now to ascertain whether any other Member of this House had anything to do with striking out those vital parts? The RECORD today reveals that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] had nothing to do with it. He is an honorable gentleman and we do not want these proceedings to directly or indirectly indicate he did, because we know that he believes in our American constitutional system of government, even though John L. Lewis, who has some people in his vest pocket, apparently does not.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I decline to yield.

In reply to the observation of the gentleman from Wisconsin, there is no intimation on my part, none whatever, that the gentleman from the Second District of Georgia left these remarks out of the RECORD. I made no such charge because I know that the gentleman from Georgia, who is always speaking in favor of constitutional government, the integrity of the courts and the records of the courts, would not think of such a procedure. I have not the slightest doubt he would be the first, had he noticed it, to raise the question, showing that the RECORD of the House as printed this morning is not a true record of what happened. The point which I wish to call to the attention of the House is this, that in this day and age when we have so much information as to what is happening in this Government of ours, and when we have so many of what to many of us seem to be strange rulings of the departments, of administrators; and when we have the governmental agencies making rulings which have the force of law——

Mr. RANKIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Which are in fact legislation, that it is highly important, it is of supreme importance, and I hope the gentleman from Mississippi understands what I am trying to say—which is that the RECORD of the House should be a true statement of motions made and votes taken in the House—which the printed RECORD this morning is not.

Mr. RANKIN. No; I never have understood what the gentleman is trying to do, I am sorry to say.

Mr. HOFFMAN. He would be the first to insist that the daily RECORD——

Mr. RANKIN. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order. The gentleman has a resolution. He has the right to speak to that resolution only, and not to go outside and attack the administration and to make a political speech. I make the point of order that he is out of order and has violated the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair once more desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that he must proceed in order and speak to the matter at hand. The Chair trusts that under the rules that is all that will be necessary for the Chair to say. The gentleman will proceed in order and discuss his resolution.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman yield to me at this moment?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am trying to proceed in order and discuss the resolution. If the only way that a resolution can be discussed is to repeat the words of the resolution, then that is a new method of debate to me. I had always supposed that, when a resolution was offered, you could go back and show the facts on which it was based, the reasons for the resolution, and the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin for a brief question.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the Members of the House and to the gentleman that I think it is the general consensus of opinion of every Member of the House that the point of order and the question of privilege raised by the gentleman from Michigan is very sound, and that the question involved is highly important, in order that the integrity of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD may be maintained. Now, it seems to me that the gentleman from Michigan has very clearly presented the issue, and I do not believe that more can be accomplished than to have the opinion of the House clearly manifested by restoring the RECORD so that it will show clearly and exactly what transpired yesterday in the proceedings of this House. I trust that the House will speedily adopt this resolution so that the RECORD may clearly demonstrate the proceedings which took place.

Mr. GAVAGAN. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin for a point of order, but instead of——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. KEEFE. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understood it, the gentleman from Michigan yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin for a statement.

Mr. HOFFMAN. A question.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin to ask the gentleman to yield for a question. Instead, he is making a speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time is under the control of the gentleman from Michigan, and he can yield to whom he pleases.

Mr. KEEFE. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan at this time whether or not the purpose of his question of privilege will not be served by having the House speedily adopt this resolution and restore the RECORD to its position as it took place on the floor of the House yesterday, or by adopting the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me? Will my friend from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not just now.

Mr. COX. I think you ought to yield at this time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know you and I sometimes disagree. I regret I cannot yield now.

Mr. COX. Not always.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; just once in awhile we disagree.

Mr. COX. And we are not in disagreement on the point which you raise.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am sure of that.

Mr. MICHENER rose.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I have not read the resolution; I heard it read. It seems clear that there is nothing in the resolution but what is proper, and there is nothing in the resolution but what the Speaker will find is correct. That being true, will not the gentleman yield to me or to someone to ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected according to what transpired?

Mr. HOFFMAN. In answer to the gentleman, I recall that not so long ago we had another question before us involving the integrity of the House, and that after that question had been referred to a committee certain proceedings were taken and the objectionable matter was withdrawn, but later the same matter was referred to again on the floor of the House, and later part of it found its way into the newspapers. It seems to me that if the House really wants the RECORD to show what actually happened, action by the House should be taken. I hope there is no misunderstanding now, and I, too, think that the best interests of everyone will be served if we get to a speedy determination. I am going to contribute something toward that idea.

Let me here restate the matter which was omitted from the RECORD. From yesterday's proceedings on the floor was omitted, first, a demand which was made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from the Twelfth Congressional District of Michigan that certain words uttered on the floor of the House by the gentleman from the Second District of Georgia be taken down; second, the ruling of the Speaker upon such demand; third, a motion which was made by the gentleman from the Twelfth District of Massachusetts; fourth, the vote taken on said motion; and, fifth, the result of said vote and the subsequent direction of the Speaker to the gentleman from Georgia to continue.

Does the House realize that out of the RECORD was left the vote on the motion made in the House and adopted? If from the printed RECORD of the proceedings of the House may be omitted a motion made in the House, the vote by which that motion was adopted, then there is no reason why it would not be proper to omit from the proceedings of the House the motion to adopt the resolution which was adopted yesterday, and the roll call on that resolution, or any other motion or resolution or vote thereon.

It does seem to me that the House should express itself on this resolution, and therefore I will ask for a vote, and I move the previous question on the resolution and demand the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me before he yields the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question on his resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOFFMAN) there were—ayes 102, noes 139.

So the previous question was rejected.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, may I have recognition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, blame properly attaches to me for not having examined that part of the RECORD which was stricken when my remarks came to me. If I had gone over it, of course, I would have recognized that there were parts that were stricken out that should have remained. I concede, of course, that the gentleman from Michigan is correct in the position he takes; that is, that there are parts of the RECORD deleted that should have remained in and ought to be in. It was for that reason that I asked unanimous consent that the entire proceedings be restored with the exception of my remarks which were withdrawn, and, as I stated to the House, I asked unanimous consent to withdraw them because of the ruling of the Chair and, therefore, felt that I owed that much to the aggrieved party and to the House, and I do now. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to restore the matter stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. HOOK, Mr. RANKIN, and Mr. MAAS reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the Chair put the question. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the matter referred to be restored to the RECORD. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HOOK and Mr. MAAS reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. RANKIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, and under the rules of the House, without going through all this hullaballoo, could not this have been corrected if the gentleman from Michigan had merely made a point of order that this material should go into the permanent RECORD and should not have been inadvertently stricken out?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would have taken some action by the House and the gentleman from Georgia made a request which would have done it. The gentleman from Georgia has the floor and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] has reserved the right to object.

Mr. HOOK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, it seems as though this controversy here involves a situation that arose concerning myself, and certain remarks by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX]. You are well aware of the action of the speaker with regard thereto. Now, I feel this way about it. I am ready and willing to adopt the Golden Rule and do unto others as I would expect others to do unto me, even though that rule was not applied on a previous occasion in which I was also the center of the storm. I hope that the controversy over this affair will not reach the low level that was reached at that time. It is my honest opinion that this resolution was brought in here for the purpose of bringing about further discussion of the controversy that happened yesterday. I am not a party to this resolution. I think it is an unnecessary interruption of the business of the House. This controversy should be ended right now. I therefore will not object to the request. Hereafter let the rules of the House be adhered to and avoid such affairs as this.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Michigan should confine himself to the facts and not to what he believes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed in order.

Mr. HOOK. I therefore shall not object.

Mr. MAAS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Georgia know who did strike out the pertinent parts of the RECORD?

Mr. COX. I have no more idea than the gentleman himself.

Mr. MAAS. Can the gentleman tell us who it was that initialed the copy prior to the gentleman receiving it?

Mr. COX. I do not recall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Does not the gentleman believe that the House should determine who attempted to sabotage yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. COX. I think that question might properly be brought up under a resolution to investigate.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It is a very important question to determine.

Mr. COX. Probably so. I am sure that nobody intended to do anything wrong.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am very glad that the gentleman had nothing to do with it and I shall not object to his request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan withdraw his resolution?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as unanimous consent is granted and it accomplishes the same purpose, I see no object in pressing the resolution. I withdraw the resolution.

PHOSPHATE RESOURCES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 199, amending Public Resolution Numbered 112 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and Public Resolution Numbered 48 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 199 and consider the same. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the life of the committee provided for by Public Resolution No. 112 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, creating a Joint Congressional Committee to Investigate the Adequacy and Use of the Phosphate Resources of the United States, and Public Resolution No. 48 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and the time for making its final report, is extended to January 15, 1941.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I understand it, this merely continues this investigation.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the committee has not expended the fund?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. No. The original report states that we have expended none of the funds, and we will keep within the amount allowed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, is it not true that the only reason that the committee was prevented from completing its work and making its report was because of the special session last fall?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes; otherwise we would have completed our work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was reported out originally by the gentleman's committee. We have kept within the funds allowed. In fact, we have not spent any of the funds, and we are merely asking that the date be moved up within which to make a report. The Senate passed this Monday last.

Mr. SABATH. What resolution is it?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. It merely extends the time within which we may make our report.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a telegram from Pilot Ted Jonson, of the American Air Lines.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the memorial exercises for Representative CLYDE H. SMITH, of Maine, and to include therein the tributes paid to his service at the exercises in his memory at Skowhegan, Maine; also an address delivered by Representative SMITH as a young man of 21, when a member of the Maine Legislature, at memorial exercises for Hon. Thomas B. Reed, a former Representative from Maine and a former Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in two respects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an article from the magazine American Mercury, by Stanley High.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On April 23, 1940:

H. R. 2041. An act for the relief of Tom Kelly.

On April 25, 1940:

H. R. 6039. An act to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6693. An act to amend provisions of law relating to the use of private vehicles for official travel in order to effect economy and better administration; and

H. J. Res. 289. Joint resolution to amend section 5 of Public Law No. 360, Sixty-sixth Congress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of flood control, soil, and water conservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

OBSERVANCE AND COMMEMORATION OF AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP DAY

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day, for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the Joint Resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and agree to the same.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
SAM HOBBS,
U. S. GUYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALBERT B. CHANDLER,
JNO. E. MILLER,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship, submit the following explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in conference, and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the preamble simply omitted the word "voting" before the word "age", in the first paragraph of the preamble. The House agrees to this amendment.

The Senate amendment to the joint resolution added after the word "citizenship" at the end of the first paragraph, the following: ", and the day shall be designated as 'I Am an American Day.'"

The House conferees were of the opinion that this amendment was not objectionable because the prime purpose of the joint resolution is to emphasize the privileges and responsibilities of being an American citizen. The House agrees to this amendment.

The Senate amendment to the title merely conformed the title of the joint resolution to the designation "I Am an American", and the House agrees to this amendment.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
SAM HOBBS,
U. S. GUYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee if any consideration was given by the committee to the fact of the day that is designated. As I understand it, this calls for the setting aside of a certain day as Citizenship Day. It occurred to me when reading the debate in the RECORD that some consideration should have been given to the setting of some day other than Sunday.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I had assured the Speaker that this matter would not take up any time. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] if he will make a statement for the gentleman.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, as requested by the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], I am happy to make this statement with reference to the date fixed for "I am an American Day."

This matter was given consideration not only by the authors of the bill, but also by the subcommittees, the full committees, by the Senate and by the conferees. So much so, in fact, that the date was changed several times. But the changes of the date were not for the reason which the careful and conscientious legislator from South Dakota has just told me, actuated his interrogation.

He rose because of his doubt of the wisdom and propriety of prescribing Sunday as the day for the observance.

I honor him for raising the question.

The Lord's day is not ours to use for secular purposes. It is a holy day—not a holiday. It must not be desecrated.

Nor should we be unmindful of our traditional and honored American doctrine of separation of church and state.

But none of us who have worked on this bill believes for a moment that there is even the possibility of desecration implicit in the observance here ordained. We hold, rather, that this observance will prove a hallowed and deeply religious exercise. It must, if the ideology back of it governs. It means consecration—not desecration.

Separation of church and state has never meant that the influence of the church was not desired in affairs of state. Nothing is more so. In truth, that uplifting influence working in the hearts and lives of all men is the only hope of the world.

The Constitution inhibits only the establishment of religion by law. It guarantees religious freedom—not that religion shall be aloof from life.

The author of the Virginia statute for religious freedom proved by his hope of divine guidance of our Nation by joining Franklin and Adams in designing our first currency with the pillars of cloud and of fire prominently depicted thereon.

Every nation needs statesmen who are churchmen; churchmen who are statesmen; a citizenship that means what our coinage proclaims, "In God we trust."

So, by all means, let us not secularize Sunday but use its holy power to uplift and consecrate citizenship. There must never be here a state church nor a church state, but let us invite, welcome, and utilize the help of every church in building a better state.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include an address delivered by Senator BRIDGES, of New Hampshire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a telegram from Moss Peterson Southwestern Division Air Congress of America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter addressed to me by Prof. Comfort A. Adams, former dean of the Harvard School of Engineering.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein a resolution passed by the Western Association of Highway Officials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS TO CERTAIN WIDOWS OF VETERANS OF THE CIVIL WAR—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 710)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without approval, H. R. 6901, entitled "An act granting increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War."

The bill provides increased pensions to 362 widows of veterans of the Civil War at rates in excess of those provided for these widows by existing public or private laws.

The Veterans' Administration was not requested to furnish a report to either committee of the Congress having jurisdiction of this bill during its consideration by the committees.

Several of the widows named in the bill have been granted increases by reason of attaining age 70 under the provisions of existing public law since this bill was first reported in 1939. A small number will become eligible in the future for increases under the same conditions. As to the private act cases which would be increased to $30 per month, eligibility under existing service pension laws does not exist because of the delimiting marriage date.

The existing service pension law provides a $50 monthly pension for a Civil War veteran's widow provided she was the wife of the veteran during his Civil War service. The bill would provide increases from $40 to $50 per month for 346 widows who are not eligible for such $50 rate under public law and who are receiving $40 per month because of attainment of age 70.

It is quite evident that the Congress was impressed by the advanced age, economic condition, and physical infirmities of this group. Such considerations incite the greatest sympathy and would be impelling were it not for the fact that this group of 362 widows is only a small part of the total number of 50,017 Civil War widows on the rolls March 31, 1940, many of whom would no doubt be found to be in similar circumstances and merit equal consideration and treatment. To single out this small group for special consideration would cause dissatisfaction and disappointment unless equal treatment were afforded similar meritorious cases.

To advance the 346 widows of veterans to the $50 rate who were not married to the veterans when they served will, at this late date, depreciate the status the Congress has seen fit in the past to grant to a very meritorius group. Further, the rate of $50 per month exceeds the highest rate granted to widows of veterans who have died in combat or otherwise as the result of service-connected disabilities, which, I believe, cannot be justified, no matter how impelling our sympathies may be for those who would benefit by this proposed legislation.

The increased annual cost of this bill is insignificant standing alone but the principle involved and inequalities created are of much importance. Should the bill be approved, to be fair, it would be necessary to grant similar increases to many more on the rolls.

In my opinion, our Government has been fairly generous in providing pensions for the Civil War group through the enactment of public laws providing standards under which all veterans and dependents are treated alike under similar circumstances. I do not feel that individuals should be granted benefits to which they are not entitled under the public laws unless it is clearly shown that the facts and circumstances surrounding the individual case are unique and justify special consideration.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 25, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal, and the message and bill printed as a House document.

The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the committee which recommended this legislation to the House, I believe it is my duty to offer an explanation of the contents of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman insists, the Chair will certainly recognize him.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, in justice to the committee and the Members of the House, I believe that I should make such explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 6901, which was the subject of the veto message, was passed by this House on July 5, 1939. The Senate passed this bill with amendments on April 10, 1940. The House concurred in the Senate amendments on April 15, 1940. This legislation had for its purpose the granting of increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War.

The reason for these increases is that the present law provides that the widow of a Civil War veteran shall receive a pension of $30 and when she attains the age of 70 years the amount is increased to $40 per month. That is the maximum they can receive unless they were married to the veteran during his Civil War service; in such cases they are entitled to $50 per month. I might add that the $30 and $40 rates are paid under the service-pension laws to widows who married the veteran prior to June 27, 1905.

In years past Congress has enacted special acts for such widows who were not capable of caring for themselves and who needed special attention because of mental or physical disabilities. These acts have increased their pensions to $50.

The original House bill carried 341 private bills involving a total cost of $41,148. Already deaths of widows who would be beneficiaries have reduced the cost to $40,428, even before it was considered by the Senate. The Senate amendments added 31 additional pensioners. This brought the cost for the first year of operation to $44,148.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman has referred to the cost of this bill. The President specifically stated in his message that the cost was insignificant. The President lays stress upon the principle involved. The bill takes care of 362 widows out of a total of 50,017. That seems to be the present objection, not the cost.

Mr. LESINSKI. Answering the gentleman from Missouri, I may say that I called on the President last year before any type of bill was considered by the committee. At that time the President very specifically stated that he did not favor general legislation and that meritorious cases could be taken care of by private bills and would be less expensive. That is the reason this bill was presented to the House. As a matter of fact it contained only 341 private bills when it was reported by the committee.

Let us see what increases in pension this bill makes in the case of the widows benefited. One is increased from $15 to $30, 2 increased from $20 to $30, 1 from $26 to $30, 13 from $30 to $40, 2 from $30 to $50, and 322 from $40 to $50.

The majority of these beneficiaries are of advanced age. Of the 341 individuals named in the original bill as reported to the House 264 have attained the age of 80 years or more. Of this group 196 are between the ages of 80 and 89; 66 are between the ages of 90 and 99; and 2 of them are aged 100 years.

The committee in its wisdom felt that people who had reached the age of these widows and who needed special care and attention were entitled to a little higher pension than the existing law provided.

This type of bill has received the approval of the Congress from time to time for the past 40 years and establishes no precedent. I ask that the House do not sustain the President's veto of this very meritorious legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As I understand this bill does not add any names to the list of those now receiving pensions but merely increases the mere pittance they now receive to take care of themselves in their old age.

Mr. LESINSKI. That is correct.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield.

Mr. BOLLES. Is it not a fact that whatever amount is appropriated by this bill will be constantly diminished in size?

Mr. LESINSKI. That is correct.

Mr. BOLLES. For instance we cannot expect these 100-year-old widows to live very long.

Mr. LESINSKI. That is correct.

Mr. BOLLES. The same applies to those between 80 and 99.

Mr. LESINSKI. Certainly.

Mr. BOLLES. This action taken by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was taken for the sole purpose of correcting those cases which had been overlooked heretofore.

Mr. LESINSKI. That is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. As I understand the chairman of the committee, all of these persons are now on the pension rolls.

Mr. LESINSKI. That is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What is the age of the youngest person included in the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. I am sorry that I cannot give you that information, but the average age of these proposed beneficiaries is 84 years.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And what is the age of the oldest person?

Mr. LESINSKI. Exactly 100.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. So this applies to a class of people now on the rolls between the ages of 80 and 100 years of age?

Mr. LESINSKI. Correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Are they all needy persons?

Mr. LESINSKI. The committee has a set rule that unless a person is needy we do not recommend an increase in the rate of pension they are receiving.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Your committee was convinced that every one of these persons between the ages of 80 and 100 are in needy circumstances.

Mr. LESINSKI. That is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I want to say one word to commend the chairman of this committee and his committee for the fine attitude they take toward the Civil War veterans and other veterans and their dependents. I think his attitude is splendid. I am very much in favor of this bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I will add my commendation to that of the gentleman from Kentucky. I want to ask the gentleman one question. The President seems to think that this bill will open the door to the granting of similar increases to many more widows. Is there anything to that?

Mr. LESINSKI. That is not true because this bill does not set a precedent. The precedent was established 40 years ago.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. As a minority member of the committee I want to congratulate the gentleman for bringing to the attention of the House the facts with regard to this meritorious bill. This bill was reported out by a unanimous vote of the committee after thorough and extensive consideration, was it not?

Mr. LESINSKI. That is true.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The President states in the last line of his veto message:

> I do not feel that individuals should be granted benefits to which they are not entitled under the public laws unless it is clearly shown that the facts and circumstances surrounding the individual case are unique and justify special consideration.

Mr. LESINSKI. We believe these cases are justified by the facts set forth in the individual reports which accompanied the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Has not the committee carefully studied all of the bills contained in this omnibus bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. It has.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And the committee has found that these are cases which are unique and justify special consideration?

Mr. LESINSKI. That is correct.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Therefore, following the last line of the President's veto message, this bill should be passed over the President's veto by unanimous vote?

Mr. LESINSKI. I am of the same opinion.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Under nature's mortality tables, in all probability quite a number of these aged people will pass away before long?

Mr. LESINSKI. The average now is about 13 percent a year and it increases quite rapidly when you get to the widows in the higher-age brackets. I doubt whether many of those named in this bill will live over 2 or 3 years longer.

Mr. LUDLOW. Assuming they all do live, what would be the total charge on the Treasury?

Mr. LESINSKI. It would be $44,148 the first year, and as they die off, of course, it will decrease.

Mr. COSTELLO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is it not a fact that this pension, as the President states, is going to be far in excess of what any widow of a World War veteran who was killed in the war is receiving at the present time? Do not such widows receive only $30 a month?

Mr. LESINSKI. The widows of World War veterans receive $45 a month if they are past 50 years of age. That was increased not long ago. The widows of World War veterans are not 80, 90, or 100 years old and they do not, as a general rule, need special care.

Mr. COSTELLO. But widows of World War veterans may have far greater expenses than a person who is 80 or 90 years old. While the gentleman states there are only a few affected by this legislation, is it not a fact that there are going to be forty thousand or fifty thousand of these widows who will also come in for the same treatment and the ultimate cost will be very high?

Mr. LESINSKI. I do not agree with the gentleman, because these widows die off in the low-age brackets just as fast and sometimes faster than those in the higher brackets. The record shows that 823 widows of Civil War veterans died this past month.

Mr. COSTELLO. But there is still a large group of them.

Mr. LESINSKI. There is, but the list keeps going down and down.

Mr. BOLLES. There is a constant attrition.

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes.

Mr. BOLLES. And 10 years from now under the mortality tables there will be but one-third of those on the roll left?

Mr. LESINSKI. I personally do not believe there will be one-third.

Mr. BOLLES. We checked that out and found that is the fact.

Mr. IZAC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. IZAC. Will the gentleman explain to the House how it happens that so many of these widows receive as low as $15 a month?

Mr. LESINSKI. There is only one widow receiving $15 per month in this bill and that rate was granted her by a special act of Congress approved in 1926.

Mr. IZAC. It is obvious these widows have been underpaid all these years?

Mr. LESINSKI. That is true, some of them have.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. By "private establishment" the gentleman means the Regular Army, Navy, and Marine Corps in times of peace?

Mr. LESINSKI. That is right.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The President in vetoing H. R. 6901, granting an increase of pension to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War, again in my opinion showed his lack of sympathy for the defenders of our country and their widows and orphans.

The President stated in his veto message that he did not feel that individuals should be granted benefits to which they are not entitled under the public laws unless it is clearly shown that the facts and circumstances surrounding the individual case are unique and justify special consideration.

None of these widows of Union Civil War veterans are receiving more than $40 per month. Some of them are receiving as low as $30 per month. The minimum age of these widows is 80 years, and two of them that would be included in this bill are 100 years old—that is to say, not one of them is less than 80 years of age and two of them are as much as 100 years old. They are all persons in needy circumstances, according to the evidence produced before the Invalid Pensions Committee. They are in need of the aid and attendance of another person. It would be difficult to find a group of aged people more deserving than these aged Civil War widows.

This bill provides a pension of $50 per month for each of them. That will mean very little expense to the Government. Perhaps half of them will be dead within a year, and more than likely none of them will be living in 4 or 5 years from now. It certainly is clearly shown that the facts and circumstances surrounding these individual cases are unique and justify special consideration, and if we follow the language of the President, these widows certainly are entitled to this consideration and the veto of the President should be overruled and the bill passed notwithstanding his veto. It is my pleasure to so express myself and vote to override the President's veto.

This administration has created a very large number of bureaus and commissions and has added approximately 400,000 Federal officeholders. As much as a million dollars has been paid to a single corporation not to produce sugar and cotton. More than $200,000 has been paid to each of a large number of corporations and big landowners not to produce hogs, wheat, corn, cotton, and so forth. It seems to me the small amount carried in this bill to care for the helpless and dependent widows of those who gave their lives or offered their lives to preserve this great Nation should have received the approval of the President instead of his veto. This administration has wasted and squandered billions, and then denies a few thousands of dollars to the widows and orphans of veterans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 218, nays 142, not voting 70, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The message and the bill, together with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered printed. The Clerk will notify the Senate of the action of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—ALASKAN INTERNATIONAL HIGHWAY COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 711)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed with accompanying illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress "to create a commission to be known as the Alaskan International Highway Commission" approved May 31, 1938, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress, the report of the Commission.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 25, 1940.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend in the RECORD the remarks I expect to make today on the amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and include therein certain extracts from letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, on the last roll call I had a pair with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. KELLER. I do not know how he would have voted. I inadvertently omitted withdrawing my vote. I wish to make this statement to the House.

AMENDMENTS TO FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT OF 1938

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5435) to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended to run throughout the day, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, then we can take it that there will be no effort made to read the bill or have any voting on amendments today?

Mrs. NORTON. Absolutely not.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LESINSKI. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would the gentlewoman agree to extend the 3 hours of debate provided under the rule to 5 hours, so everybody may have a chance to speak on this bill?

Mrs. NORTON. I am perfectly willing to stay here as long as the Members care to speak. I would say we ought to be able to finish about 5:30. The time originally set was 3 hours of debate, which would bring us up to 4 o'clock, or 10 minutes past 4, and an hour and a half longer, I believe, will probably be sufficient.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate may be extended from 3 hours to 5 hours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, in his individual capacity, must object to that request.

The Chair may state that the rule provides for 3 hours of general debate. If, under the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey, the House should sit until 5:30, that would be an extension of an hour and a half, and if the House sits until 6 o'clock, that would practically be an extension of 2 hours.

Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5435, with Mr. PARSONS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I know that there probably is nothing much more tiresome to Members who are not interested in a bill than to listen to its explanation; nevertheless it is absolutely important that the chairman of the committee at least try to explain the bill before the Committee of the Whole. I may say that if there are any in the Chamber who are really not interested in hearing an explanation of the bill, we might proceed much more rapidly if they would just leave the Chamber.

Some of the remarks in debate yesterday seemed to indicate that I am a particularly arbitrary sort of person. The truth really is that my position is a very difficult one. Nobody would like more than I to help all of my colleagues who come to me and ask that amendments be considered that would help them in their respective districts. I know exactly what that means, and I should like to be able to grant their requests, but you know that is quite impossible for the reason that I have a duty to discharge to myself, to my conscience, and also to the Committee on Labor, of which I am the chairman.

You Members all know that the Committee on Labor was especially designed to protect labor. Therefore, if at times I appear to be arbitrary, let me say to you that it is only because I am trying to do for the working people of the country what is very necessary for their protection.

Now that we have voted for this unusual rule, and therefore for consideration of amendments, I trust you will follow the debate attentively, as we who are trying to protect the cause of labor hope to show clearly and definitely the untold hardships and the many injustices which would be worked by the adoption of the amendments and, particularly, those relating to agriculture contained in H. R. 7133, the so-called Barden bill.

During this long struggle to secure consideration of the necessary amendments to the Wage and Hour Act I have come to the inescapable conclusion that my job to protect the working men and women in this country only began with the passage of the Fair Labor Standards Act. It is far more difficult to defend the law against attack than to secure its enactment, I have found.

For those of you who are not familiar with the history of the fight to enact the Fair Labor Standards Act into law I would like to refresh your minds a little and go back a bit into the history of that legislation. Let me take you back more than 2 years, when the wage and hour bill was introduced in the House of Representatives.

I particularly address my remarks to the Members who have come into the Seventy-sixth Congress and are not familiar with exactly what we tried to do when we first attempted to enact this legislation for the benefit of labor.

For the first time in the history of America, those workers of the country who had been paid starvation wages and were worked fantastically long hours by chiseling employers were by law given a small part of what they justly deserved in the form of minimum wages and maximum hours to be worked.

After months of hearings a wage and hour bill was reported to the House by the Committee on Labor in the summer of 1937 and a rule was sought to bring the bill before the House for its consideration.

May I say right here that in this morning's New York Times, I think it was, attention was called to the fact that this wage and hour bill would have been so much better if industry committees had been appointed for the different sections of the country, as is now contemplated for Puerto Rico. I now want to say to you that that is exactly what was in the first bill, which was recommitted to the Labor Committee by the House. When that bill was recommitted to the committee, I recall my friend from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] on the floor of the House telling those who opposed it that they would live to regret having voted it down. I think his prediction has been well justified since that time.

The Rules Committee refused to grant a rule. The result was a petition, signed by 218 Members of the House—the necessary number to override the Rules Committee and requiring consideration of the bill by the House. Due to strenuous opposition on the part of those opposed to all wage and hour legislation, the bill was recommitted to the committee by a vote of the House. Then ensued a long period of further consideration by the Labor Committee and finally another bill emerged and again the Rules Committee refused to grant a rule that would bring the bill to the floor of the House for consideration. For the second time a petition was resorted to and history was made, for within 2 hours and 21 minutes, 218 names were attached to it by the membership. Therefore, it is evident that the majority of the membership of the House demanded consideration and action on this legislation. The bill was then passed by a large majority, although considerable opposition was offered even at that time.

When Congress assembled in January 1939, Mr. Andrews, then administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, brought to the attention of the Committee on Labor, various inequalities in the law and certain difficulties that had been encountered in the administration of it. After due consideration by the committee, the bill, carrying the number H. R. 5435, was reported favorably to the House by the committee vote of 16 for and 2 against. It should be understood that this bill contained only those amendments necessary for the proper administration of the act and the alleviation of certain unnecessary hardships imposed by the original law.

May I say to you that at that time, and I am sure the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] will recall the conversation, I felt that we were in very great danger if we opened up the subject at all, of having amendments introduced that would probably tend to emasculate the act. I told him of my difficulty and said that I knew I could count on the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and asked "Do you think if I ask the Rules Committee for a closed rule so we can bring before the House only such amendments to the Wage and Hour Act as would help strengthen it—that we could secure such a rule?" I had this conversation with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] because even then I was fearful of bringing this bill to the House.

I felt that the act had not been tested sufficiently. It had been in operation only about 6 months, and we were fearful of amending it at that stage; however, at the same time we thought it was necessary, because real hardship cases had come to our attention. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] said to me then, "I am sure we will be able to do that for you." We thereupon immediately started consideration of amendments. What happened is history, and I am not going into it. But at the time the committee reported H. R. 5435 to the House it did so, as I said, with a certain amount of trepidation. I present this brief history of the act to show the long and hard struggle of the proponents of this legislation against a small but very well-organized opposition, whose aim was and always will be to defeat all labor legislation, and here I think it might be wise to refresh your memories as to the details of the struggle to secure consideration of the amendments by the House. Even before H. R. 5435 was actually reported to the House, I was instructed by the committee to consult the leaders of the House and determine the best course of action for consideration of the bill by the House. It was agreed at that time that the only way we could be sure of preserving the act from destruction was to bring the bill up under suspension of the rules, since under that parliamentary procedure no amendment could be offered to it.

This was done, and on June 5, 1939, I called the bill up under suspension of the rules. A second was demanded, and that was objected to. Tellers were demanded, and the House refused by a vote of 110 to 167 to order a second, thereby refusing consideration of the bill. That was a rather unusual proceeding, you will have to admit. Even then forces alien to the interests of labor were exerting their influence in the House. Following the report of the bill by the Labor Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN], an able member of the committee, and one who was partly responsible for some of the truly valuable contributions to the original act, introduced another bill to amend the wage-hour law. This bill contains such broad so-called agricultural exemptions as to actually defeat the purposes of the act, and it was immediately championed by the opposition groups, who, unfortunately for the laboring men and women in this country, have several strong friends on the Rules Committee. Such was the influence of the foes of the act that the Rules Committee met and voted a rule for the consideration of the Barden bill, although that bill, H. R. 7133—and I repeat it again—was never considered by the Labor Committee. I appeared before the Rules Committee, as did several others, in opposition to granting a rule for H. R. 7133, but to no avail; and thus we find ourselves in the midst of the present confused situation.

In passing, may I say this about my friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN]: I believe that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] is perfectly sincere in what he is trying to do, just as I am sincere in what I am trying to do. The difference between us is not very great. The difference between his agricultural exemptions and mine is that he wants to exempt industrial workers who should not be exempted. Many of the people exempted in his bill are exempted in my bill from the hours, but not from the wage provisions of the bill. I contend that $12.60 a week is a pittance for any family to live on. You Members know perfectly well that it is a disgrace to expect any man or woman to live on $12.60 a week.

That is really the basis of our present conflict, whether or not the Congress of the United States wants to go on record as believing that $12.60 is sufficient for the ordinary American worker. I do not feel that the membership of this House will support so disgraceful a proposal. I have the greatest faith in my colleagues, and I do not believe when our checks come in every month for $833 we would be able to face our own conscience if we voted for a bill that would deny to the workers of America a miserable $12.60 for a workweek.

I refuse to believe that when such a bill comes up for a vote you are going to support it.

Now I shall proceed with an analysis of some of these amendments..

In the administration of the law, the Administrator has found that its rigid application to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands has created hardship. It is factually true that working conditions in those territories are vastly different, are governed by climatic conditions, living conditions, and general economic factors at distinct variance with those in continental United States. It is impossible to prescribe rigid standards for working conditions in the territories such as are suitable for continental United States. This problem has been one of the most distressing to the Administrator. The Labor Committee, has, therefore, brought before you an amendment to relieve this situation. We are advocating the appointment of industry committees for each industry in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands to determine the minimum wages to be paid. This minimum may be—and in practical effect no doubt will be in many instances—less than that prescribed in section 6 of the act. However, such wage rate cannot be prescribed without taking into consideration certain standards set forth in the amendment. We could not, and do not suggest, the offering to the territories of any competitive advantage, but rather hope to equalize, by this amendment, any now existing inequalities.

One of the hardest problems to beset the Administrator was that of defining "area of production." As you all know, I am sure, we used that phrase as a basis for the exemption of workers engaged in the production of agricultural products. It defies fair definition and has created many unfair as well as ridiculous situations. The Labor Committee has decided, therefore, to eliminate entirely the use of the phrase "area of production" and instead lists specifically the branches of agriculture and the work to be performed therein which will be subject to the exemptions from the hours provisions, the wage provision, or both. By so stating the exemptions we feel that no employer or employee can be uncertain of his participation or nonparticipation under the act. By referring to section 3 of H. R. 5435, you will find the operations which we have totally exempted from the hours provisions of the act for 14 weeks in the year and have exempted from the hours provisions up to 60 hours a week for all other weeks. Surely this exemption must eliminate any hardship created by the act in taking care of seasonal or perishable agricultural products. The committee feels it has granted exemptions where and when they are necessary and we are satisfied that justice is being done to both the employer and employee. To insure the practicality of our proposed legislation we have extended to employees engaged in the handling, tying, drying, stripping, grading, redrying, fermenting, stemming, or packing of leaf tobacco and the storing of it from both the wage and hour provisions of the act. This we have done at the insistence of the industry and its employees. We, of course, do not wish to deny the benefits of the act to anyone, but in some cases it has seemed only practical and just to do so. We have also extended this exemption to employees employed in the preparing, packing, cleaning, or grading of fresh fruits and fresh vegetables in their raw or natural state when such operations are performed immediately off the farm. The farmer, as you know, is exempt now under the provisions of the act. This extends the exemption to employees who are still purely agricultural but whose work is performed just off the farm. The committee in this provision intends to exempt from both wages and hours only such employees as were employed in the cleaning, packing, grading, or preparing of fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw or natural state when such operations are performed in the immediate locality of the farm where produced. It was only intended to take care of the small fresh fruit and vegetable packing operation often carried on by a few farmers for the purpose of packing their own products. We have also extended this exemption to all employees engaged in the ginning of cotton.

Another factor which has caused considerable confusion among both employers and employees is the fact that the Administrator lacks the power to make valid rules and regulations. I believe it is a tribute to the conscientiousness and willingness to cooperate of the American employer to realize that almost 90 percent of the employers of this country are living up to the provisions of the law. These honest employers should not be penalized by competing with cutthroat competition. There are, as you know, many cases in which employees and employers are not sure of their coverage by the act. All the Administrator can do when questioned by interested parties is issue an interpretive bulletin. This is not binding under the law nor does compliance with it protect an individual legally. In order to correct this situation we are proposing in section 4 of H. R. 5435 to authorize the Administrator to make rules and regulations to carry out any of the provisions of the act. This section will also give him the right to define terms used in the act and make special provisions with respect to industrial home work.

As the act is now written it is extremely doubtful whether the wage and hour standards which it establishes can be enforced as to industrial home workers. Under present practice in industrial home work industries, the Administrator is unable to secure proper records on wages and hours of home workers. Business concerns relying on home work for their labor do not ordinarily deal directly with the home workers but turn over the goods or articles on which the work is to be done to contractors who employ the home workers. If time permitted, I could give you concrete examples of cruelty in this field. Section 4 of the amendments would give the Administrator the necessary authority to cope with this situation.

We believe that this section on the whole will quiet much of the unrest which has grown up as the result of the lack of definiteness of the act when applied to an individual business. This change has been approved by the Administrator as most necessary for effective administration of the law.

In section 5 (a) of the proposed amendments your committee contemplates the exemption of employees employed at a guaranteed monthly salary of $200 a month or more. The necessity for this exemption has arisen because under the present act only employees engaged in executive or administrative or professional capacities are exempt by virtue of their positions. It has been found that there are many persons whose work is not clearly administrative or executive but who are high-salaried workers with necessarily flexible hours. Their inclusion has created some hard problems for the Administrator and caused real hardship in many cases. Of course you realize there is nothing in this act which limits the application of this exemption to clerical or so-called "white collar" workers. If a ditch digger received $200 a month he would be similarly exempt under this provision.

In section 5 (b) your committee has taken care of the employees in small telephone exchanges. This has, however, already been enacted into law by Congress in the last session and will be stricken from this bill at the proper time.

In section 6 we have exempted employees employed under the jurisdiction of part 1 of the Railway Labor Act. This affords a similar exemption to employees of refrigerating cars, and so forth, as is now extended to all other branches of the railroad industry under the present act.

In section 7 the committee deals with two very difficult problems—messenger boys and home work in rural areas.

Your committee does not wish to deny the benefits of the act to messengers. However, anyone at all familiar with the telegraph companies knows that they will not be able to pay the highest minimum—40 cents—without great hardship and perhaps even financial ruin. We are therefore offering an amendment which would give the Administrator the power to prescribe wages lower than those set forth in section 6 of the act if certain standards can be met. However, in no case has the Administrator the power to lower the wage below 25 cents an hour.

The difficulty of compliance with the law by home workers in rural areas is, I believe, familiar to most of you. This work bears no resemblance to industrial home work in cities, and its elimination often means the difference between butter on his bread or plain bread to many a farmer. We propose to give the Administrator the power to prescribe wages lower than the minimum set forth in the act.

Section 8 is intended to protect the innocent purchaser of so-called "hot" goods if he can show that at the time he purchased the goods he had no knowledge or reason to believe that they had been produced in violation of wage and hour provisions. This amendment would avoid hardship to innocent purchasers and promote the free movement of goods.

Section 9 of the committee amendments, which amends section 15 (a) (2) of the act, is a technical amendment which is necessary if section 4 is adopted, so that the violation of appropriate regulations will be prohibited. In addition, there is a prohibition against violations of the provisions of any wage order issued by the Administrator pursuant to section 8. This latter prohibition clarifies the act as now written.

Section 10 proposed to give to learners, apprentices, handicapped workers, messengers, and home workers the same right to sue for unpaid minimum wages and unpaid overtime compensation which the act now accords all other employees covered by the act.

Section 11 of the committee amendment would amend section 17 of the act to provide that civil actions to restrain violations of the act may be brought in any district where the defendant is found, or is inhabited, or transacts business. By thus allowing suits against corporations where they are doing business, the amendment will save both defendants and the Government the expense of bringing witnesses many miles from the place of business to the State of incorporation of the business.

Section 12 of the committee amendment prohibits the transportation of prison-made goods in interstate commerce except the transporting of goods from a Federal prison for the use of the Federal Government. This provision is in line with but goes beyond the Ashurst-Sumners Act.

In conclusion, I would like to call your attention to a letter I received yesterday from Mr. Early, secretary to the President, in which he quotes the President as saying:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 25, 1940.

MRS. MARY NORTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MRS. NORTON: It appears that the following statement made by the President in a letter which he wrote recently to a friend very accurately presents his position in the matter of the Barden amendments and the existing Wage and Hour Act. In this letter, the President said:

"The Wage and Hour Act is in an evolutionary stage where we are learning by practical experience in the field as to whether and how it should be amended. It is too early to form definite conclusions except to note that on the whole the principle and objective are excellent and have done much to stabilize wages and hours and to bring wages up for the lowest-paid workers.

"It is being administered with discretion and no substantial groups of employers have been damaged.

"Farm labor is not affected by the act. In view of all the circumstances I think it would be a great mistake to adopt the Barden amendments. By another year we shall know a great deal more about the subject."

I give you the above-quoted statement by the President as a matter of information. You are at liberty to use it on the floor of the House of Representatives or to release it in the form of an announcement to the press, or both.

Very sincerely yours,

STEPHEN EARLY,
Secretary to the President.

I have probably taken up much more time than I should, but I do want the Members to know that the Labor Committee has tried in every way to meet the valid objections of people presenting their cause to us. We have done all that we can to assist them except to adopt amendments that we felt would destroy the effect of the act. That we shall positively and definitely refuse to do. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JOHNS. I am very much interested in just the interpretation that your committee puts on this language in section 1 under the subject of dairy products. The language is "the making of dairy products." Do I understand that that limits that just to the production of milk and putting it in the cans, or does that extend to the delivery of it to delivery stations?

Mrs. NORTON. I believe that it might in some cases extend to the delivery of it to delivery stations.

Mr. JOHNS. Does it include the employees who might be at the receiving station to receive this milk and to transport it?

Mrs. NORTON. No; they are considered to be industrial workers once it reaches the point for which it is destined.

Mr. JOHNS. Does it include the truckmen who happen to be delivering this from the farm to the station?

Mrs. NORTON. It is my understanding that it does.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. KEEFE. In this subsection 1, to which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHNS] has referred, you except the making of dairy products, except ice-cream mix, ice cream, malted milk, and processed cheese. Do I understand it is the intent of the committee to exclude, in those exemptions, those large plants which are engaged in the business of making condensed milk or powdered milk?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; if they are what we call "on the farm" or "adjacent to the farm."

Mr. KEEFE. Well, I am speaking of the plant to which the farmers haul their milk.

Mrs. NORTON. I think the gentleman will probably get some time of his own, and I cannot conscientiously take any more of that allotted to my side as it has all been promised. I would be glad if the gentleman would take that up later.

Mr. KEEFE. I am favorably impressed with this bill. I am simply asking that for information, if I can get the information. I do not get it from the report. I would like to be sure just how far that exemption is presumed to extend.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. As I understand it, such a plant as that could not be exempted.

Mr. KEEFE. Where is there anything in the law that justifies that interpretation?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Because that is a plant that has no relationship to a farm. We are talking as I understand it of a plant that makes powdered milk or condensed milk off of the farm.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include herewith a letter from Mr. Stephen Early, secretary to the President of the United States, concerning amendments to the Wage and Hour Act; also a letter from Mr. Henry Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture; also a letter from Miss Mary Dublin, general secretary to the National Consumers League; and one from Mr. Walter White, secretary to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 25, 1940.

Hon. MARY T. NORTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MRS. NORTON: It appears that the following statement made by the President in a letter which he wrote recently to a friend very accurately presents his position in the matter of the Barden amendments and the existing Wage and Hour Act. In this letter the President states:

Secretary to the President.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, April 24, 1940.

Hon. MARY T. NORTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MRS. NORTON: During our conversation this morning you asked whether this Department had received any complaints from farmers, or groups of farmers, against the operation of the wage-hour law, as modified.

A review of our files discloses a limited number of letters on the general subject, but these are nearly all in the nature of inquiries. Uncertainties as to the method and extent of application naturally arise in the minds of persons concerned with the inauguration of any new program, but, to the best of my knowledge, those persons engaged in agriculture who have written to me with possible objections in mind on this issue have been satisfied upon being furnished proper explanation of the intent and expected effects of the law. I am unable to recall more than a few isolated instances of direct complaint, and certainly I can say positively that protests from farmers have been so negligible as to be of no practical significance in the present controversy.

We have had from some farmers indications of their hearty approval of the efforts of this administration to stabilize labor's income and purchasing power. In my observation, the net reaction of true agriculture throughout the country has been one of sympathetic understanding and cooperation.

In connection with the present controversy you might be interested in the following statement I made in discussing the Wage and Hour Act over station WRC Tuesday, April 22: "If every factory using farm products in any way were exempted, nearly half of all factory workers would be taken out from under the Wage and Hour Act, and farmers would lose, rather than gain, if wages were cut in those industries."

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

NATIONAL CONSUMERS LEAGUE,
New York, N. Y., April 24, 1940.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE NORTON: The undersigned 750 men and women, well known in public life, are convinced that passage of the Barden bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act would emasculate a law which has rescued hundreds of thousands of defenseless wage earners from hunger and want.

The act would be a mere sham were it to be amended to apply only to those workers who already receive more than the wage rates prescribed by the act. Yet that is what the Barden bill proposes to do in exempting over 1,000,000 workers most in need of its coverage. These men and women, in the lowest paid industries in the country, can in no sense be called agricultural workers. It was to protect just such employees as these that the act was passed, and there is no reason in having the law unless it applies to those most in need.

We believe the Barden bill would seriously injure the farmer. By returning over a million workers to starvation wage levels, the farmer would be deprived of an essential market for his products.

In subjecting them to unfair competition, the measure is equally injurious to the interest of all employers who today maintain fair standards. Further, it would discriminate against many employers engaged in businesses similar to those the bill exempts. For example, canning establishments engaged exclusively in canning fresh fruits and vegetables have a complete wage exemption, but canneries which can fresh fruits and vegetables and also can "dry lines," such as pork and beans and soup, receive no wage exemptions.

The Barden bill runs counter to consumer interest. In the food-processing industries even a 25-percent rise in wages above the present level set by the act, would not add 2 cents on the dollar in costs to the consumer. Fair wages will not add to food costs. On the other hand, unfair wages cast immense burdens upon the community. In the words of Supreme Court Justice Hughes, "What these workers lose in wages the taxpayers are called upon to pay. The bare cost of living must be met. * * * The community is not bound to provide what is in effect a subsidy for unconscionable employers. The community may direct its law-making power to correct the abuse which springs from their selfish disregard of the public interest."

In the interest of health, decency, and fair play, we urge you to vote against the Barden bill. Give the Fair Labor Standards Act a chance to prove itself that hundreds of thousands of pitifully underpaid workers may have an opportunity to earn at least the meager living the act assures.

Respectfully yours.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE,
New York, April 24, 1940.

MRS. MARY T. NORTON,
Chairman, Committee on Labor, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MRS. NORTON: H. R. 7133 which comes to the floor of the House on Thursday, April 25, is one of the most serious of several recent efforts to destroy laws protecting labor without actually repealing these laws. The Barden amendments propose to exempt from the benefits of better wages or shorter hours or both more than a million and a quarter of the poorest paid American workers, among whom are hundreds of thousands of Negroes. These amendments strike at employees engaged in canning, packing, and otherwise processing agricultural products, at workers in the lumber industry and at transportation relating to these industries. Negroes in large numbers are employed in these fields and in some areas they constitute a majority of the workers who would be affected.

In addition, Negro workers, along with all others, are seriously threatened by section 10 of the bill which would prevent an employee from suing his employer for failure to pay minimum wages at any time more than 6 months after the right had accrued. Since the employee often does not learn of his rights until many months after violation, this is a particularly hurtful provision. If such a restriction were now in effect it would bar the right of station porters (red caps) to sue for wages denied them prior to October 1939.

The exemptions which the bill would create are particularly hurtful to Negro workers. All industrial operations in the preparation and processing of agricultural products from the time they leave the farm until they reach the retail seller would be excluded from the protection of the wage and hour law. Thus, some 68,000 workers engaged in tying, drying, stripping, stemming, crating, and packing of leaf tobacco, of whom a substantial portion are Negroes, would lose the protection which they now have. Similarly cotton ginning, compressing and storing in which a large part of the 130,000 workers are Negroes, would be excluded from the act. Protection in the matter of hours would be withdrawn from the meat-packing industry where between fifteen and twenty thousand Negroes are engaged in slaughtering, dressing, and packing meat. A substantial number of the more than 50,000 Negroes in other affected food industries would lose rights which they now enjoy.

Census figures indicate that there are some 20,000 Negro lumbermen, raftsmen, woodchoppers, and sawyers. These, too, would lose their protection if the Barden amendments should be enacted. In addition, of the 100,000 Negroes in saw and planing mills, those who work in small establishments employing not more than 15 persons would be denied all protection.

In addition the bill would permit exemptions and differentials for the Virgin Islands of the United States. No economic justification for the discrimination against a community in which the working population is almost entirely composed of Negroes has been shown. But experience with other sectional differentials used to cloak racial discrimination, for example, under the N. R. A., has shown how vicious such differentials would be.

In such circumstances a vote in favor of the Barden amendments must be construed as a vote against labor generally and against the Negro in particular, since he would be so great a loser as a result of any such legislation. Negroes are looking to party leaders to use full force of their leadership in opposition to this hurtful legislation.

Respectfully,

WALTER WHITE,
Secretary, N. A. A. C. P.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has again expired. The gentlewoman from New Jersey has consumed 25 minutes.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday during the consideration, or rather the intended emasculation, of the wage and hour laws this House developed a new leader—a coalition antilabor leader. I refer to the able and forceful gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. This coalition should be known as Cox's army, whose object is to deprive a million and one-half workers of the protection of a law which requires the payment of a meager 30 cents an hour, $12 a week, and reenslave them to a starvation wage of 5 and 10 cents an hour.

This army should not be confused with Coxey's Army, which came to Washington years ago to plead the cause of the underprivileged. The enrollees in the gentleman from Georgia's army will have much more to answer for than the misguided, but well-intended, enrollees in the one-time Coxey's Army.

My colleagues, this issue cannot be confused by the condemnation of organized labor leaders with the unorganized, underpaid industrial workers who are beneficiaries under the wage and hour law.

Mr. Chairman, I was unalterably opposed to the adoption of the hydro-headed rule, which is almost without precedent in the parliamentary procedure of this body, and permitted these three bills to come before the House of Representatives for action.

Only one of these three measures was ever considered and reported to the House by the Committee on Labor, namely, H. R. 5435, known as the Norton bill. Thorough and complete hearings over an extended period of time were held on H. R. 5435, and the Committee on Labor reported to the House a bill which, in my judgment, is more than commensurate with the facts discovered. But under this rule, either the Ramspeck bill, H. R. 7349, or the Barden bill, H. R. 7133, neither of which has been properly considered, can be offered as substitutes for the Norton bill, which is reported as the result of mature and careful consideration by the committee you have appointed to handle such matters.

The issues in this matter are clear-cut. There is no logical manner by which any Member of the House can avoid them. Either he favors the continuation of a legislative policy already established that there shall be a minimum wage of 30 cents an hour—a meager $12 per week—or he favors the return to the despicable conditions of 5 and 10 cents per hour as they prevailed for hundreds of thousands of workers before the enactment of wage and hour legislation. Either we shall go down in history as a humanitarian legislator or "5-and-10-cent" legislator.

It is difficult to believe that men having the best interests of the most humble of our citizens at heart—the lowest-paid wage earners—would resort to such tactics as to bring before Congress ill-advised legislation in an effort to rob the lowest-paid workers in the United States of the small measure of comfort brought to them through the humanitarian wage and hour law, which grants such a meager minimum wage of 30 cents per hour, simply $12 for a week of 40 hours, or $52 for a full month's work.

Selfish and powerful groups representing packing, tobacco, canning, lumber, and other large and greedy interests would, through the so-called Barden bill, return hundreds of thousands of workers to despair. Using the welfare of the farmers of the United States as a camouflage, some of these groups would emasculate or even repeal the law. They make the farmer their Charlie McCarthy, ignoring completely that all farm labor is specifically excluded from the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. They know that Congress will not emasculate and destroy this law unless through farm pressure. These selfish interests make the claim that if they are required to pay 30 cents per hour minimum wage—which is almost invariably the maximum wage for this labor even under the law—it will be reflected by a reduction in the price paid to the farmer for his products. When, let me ask, did these selfish groups become so solicitous of the farmer?

Mr. Chairman, I was born and lived my early youth on a farm and my sympathies have always been with the farmer. My record of 15 years in this body will show that though I represent a large city—San Francisco—my vote on legislation beneficial to the farmers of the country will compare favorably with Members of Congress representing farm districts.

The selfish profit-seeking groups who are the prime movers of the assault on this humanitarian law never have been the real friend of the farmer and would not give him a penny more for his products if the wage and hour law were never heard of; they are simply using the farmer to accomplish their purpose which is to destroy the law and return to the 5-cent and 10-cent starvation wage. This wrecking crew should not be allowed to confuse the issue by using the farmer as a stalking horse. Congress only has one question to determine. Is 30 cents an hour too much for a woman working in a cannery who, in many cases, has a family to support? Is 30 cents an hour too much for a laborer in a packing plant, whose work only lasts during the harvesting season? Is 30 cents an hour too much to pay workers in the sugar, lumber, tobacco, and other industries represented by this group? What would be the reaction of any Member of this body if conditions were different and he received 30 cents an hour for 40 hours' work and then went home to his wife and family with $12 in his pocket, knowing that the Congress of the United States was considering legislation that would even reduce that meager pittance by more than one-half or two-thirds? Yet many good American men and women, as good as you or I, with families to support, sit down at the end of the week to make up the family budget out of $12. Members of Congress, is it possible that you are thinking seriously of reducing this already inadequate compensation by voting for the Barden bill?

If this bill should become law and the protections of the Fair Labor Standards Act are removed from more than a million and a half low-paid workers, their ability to buy the products of the farm would be practically destroyed and the farmer would be the sufferer. The farmers of this country, who, in the final analysis, receive tremendous benefits from the higher standards of living the law now brings, are not seeking the destruction of the humanitarian wage and hour law either directly or indirectly. There are exceptions, of course; some farm areas having processing plants. But it is evident that those representing these exceptions have raised such a loud clamor that a perspective of the great good of this legislation is lost. These same selfish groups have been "sniping" at the Fair Labor Standards Act on every possible occasion. They attempted to destroy the enforcement of the law by reducing its appropriations for enforcement.

At that time I pointed out that farmers, with rare exception, have common cause with wage earners. The fair-minded farmers, who are in the overwhelming majority, are conscious of the fact that there are about 34,000,000 men and women in nonagricultural employment in the United States. They also know that since 1932 Congress has appropriated in excess of $6,000,000,000 for farm relief in one form or another. Every intelligent farmer is appreciative of the proportionate amount the nearly 34,000,000 nonagricultural workers of this country have contributed to this enormous sum without a murmur. The farmers also realize that the nonagricultural workers and their families are by far the largest group of consumers of products of the farm and that the amount of their products consumed is measured entirely by wage earners' purchasing power.

Mr. Chairman, these few adversaries of the humane wage and hour law have been working overtime, resorting to all kinds of propaganda, to poison the minds of unsuspecting people by stressing its inequalities and so-called ambiguities. Had they the genuine interest of the farmers and wage earners at heart they would lend their intelligence to constructively strengthening the law. But they would rather emasculate or repeal the law and throw the underpaid workers back into the pool of despondency; they have been totally blind to the graver inequalities that actually existed for years prior to the enactment of this law. Before its enactment 45,000 women were engaged in the textile and other light industries in a nearby State. They received $5 and $6 a week, and in many cases worked 9 and 10 hours a day. Textile workers in one of the Southern States received from $2.50 to $7.50 a week. Cases of this kind could be multiplied hundreds and hundreds of times, yet there are still those narrow-visioned or selfish individuals who complain of this law.

It is even difficult as the law now stands to give protection to high-minded American employers of labor who believe in paying a wage scale that will raise the standards of living in this country. That they are again subject to cutthroat competition by violators of the law is a proven fact, as court records will show.

I again invite the attention of the House of Representatives to some of the irrefutable facts that definitely show the urgent need for and the value of the Fair Labor Standards Act—facts some of which I stated when the appropriation bill was under consideration, and which speak more eloquently than I can hope to against the enactment of such ill-advised legislation as the Barden bill.

There were 380,000 people engaged in interstate commerce or in the production of goods for commerce earning less than 25 cents an hour when the Fair Labor Standards Act went into effect on October 24, 1938. That means 380,000 working 40 hours per week for less than $10 a week.

This figure does not include an additional 200,000 industrial home workers, the exploitation of whom is one of the blackest spots in the economic life of America. Only a few weeks ago a group of knitwear manufacturers signed a consent decree with the Wage and Hour Division agreeing to make restitution of wages estimated at $250,000 to 10,000 of these home workers, mostly in rural districts of the East and South.

In the Federal court of Brooklyn, N. Y., a manufacturer pleaded guilty to paying his home workers as low as 4 cents an hour. He was fined $1,500 and ordered to make restitution of $4,500 to these employees. The sums that each of these poor workers drew in restitution were more than equivalent to all the pitiable wages paid them for the full first year of the operation of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Following an investigation by the Wage and Hour Division, a Chicago hairpin manufacturing company agreed to pay $110,000 in restitution to more than 300 families whose children had worked long hours mounting hairpins on cards when they should have been at play.

In Georgia a county relief investigator reported to the Wage and Hour Division that there was an employer, a runaway shop from New York, who paid his 100 workers such low wages—from $4 to $8 per week—that every family who was represented on its pay roll was on county relief.

In Baltimore a few weeks ago a Federal judge had before him two brothers who manufacture men's clothes. They had been indicted on charges of paying 175 women coat makers 10 cents an hour and less. There was one woman, a widow with three small children to support, who lived in a basement, who worked long hours, and who still could not earn enough to keep her family from the verge of starvation. These men not only failed to pay them the minimum wage set up in the wage and hour law but pleaded guilty to the charge of falsifying their records in an effort to make it appear that the women were earning 25 cents an hour.

A pecan shelling company in San Antonio, Tex., applied to the Wage and Hour Division to employ between 2,500 and 3,000 learners at a rate of 15 cents an hour. In the hearings held on this application it was shown that this company, which made a net profit of $500,000 in 2 years, paid wages as low as $3 and $4 per week, which was supplemented by the employment of 10-, 12-, and 15-year-old children.

Mr. Chairman, it has been admitted that there are inequalities in this law which should be amended by constructive and not destructive amendments; that this law is approved and popular with a vast majority of people in this country was indicated in a Gallup poll taken January 3, 1939—71 percent in favor of the law.

In conclusion I will state there has been a change in the administration of the wage and hour law, and the new Administrator, Colonel Fleming, is being highly commended by every fair-minded employer of labor for the efficient and impartial manner in which he is conducting the office. Congress should encourage rather than hamper the Administrator in his efforts to further demonstrate what this humanitarian law means to the underprivileged of this country. In due time, no doubt, he will submit to Congress such amendments as will correct any inequalities in the law.

Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, as stated before, the issue is clean-cut—whether any group of workers should be deprived of the protection of a law which requires the payment of 30 cents per hour or be forced back under the provisions of the Barden bill to the starvation wage of 5 cents and 10 cents per hour. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2260, the gentlewoman from New Jersey inserted an analysis of the three bills made in order by this rule. I think it would be very informative to every Member if he or she would study this comparison.

In view of the fact that the rule has now been made a wide-open rule, I wish to advise the House that it is not my intention to offer H. R. 7349, which is the bill that bears my name. The only purpose for introducing that bill last year was because we had reached a stalemate in the controversy between the Norton bill and the Barden bill and I wanted to make an effort to take the noncontroversial items which were identical in both bills out of controversy and pass them at that time. The effort was not successful. In view of the fact that the rule is now an open rule, I see no necessity for presenting the bill which bears my name. I may say to the Committee frankly that there is another reason why I do not desire to present it, and that is that I do not want any bill bearing my name to carry any exemptions from a 30-cent-an-hour wage. [Applause.] I do not expect to vote for any such exemption.

In order to understand this controversy you must understand some things about the original act. In the first place, you will find in the original act a definition of the word "agriculture." "Agriculture" is defined to include farming in all of its branches, and, among other things, includes the cultivation and tillage of the soil, dairying, the production, cultivation, growing, and harvesting of any agricultural or horticultural commodity, including commodities defined as agricultural commodities in section 15 (g) of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, the raising of livestock, bees, fur-bearing animals, or poultry, and any practices, including forestry or lumbering operations, pursued by a farmer or on a farm as an incident to or in conjunction with such farming operations, including preparation for market delivery to storage or to market, or to carriers for transportation to market. So whenever anybody tells you that the wage and hour law brings farmers or persons employed by farmers in farming operations under the law they just do not know what is in the law. They are not included under this law, never have been, and it never was intended that they should be. There are three other very pertinent sections of this law that you ought to understand.

Section 6 of the law is the one which imposes minimum wages.

Section 7 of the law is the section that imposes the maximum-hour limitation.

The exemptions to the act from both wages and hours are contained in section 13.

The difference been the Norton bill and the Barden bill, to put it in simple language and in a short space of time, in the main, is this: The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] proposes to exempt from both wages and hours, that is, from both sections 6 and 7 of the present wage and hour law, many operations which are generally referred to as being the processing of agricultural products, on the theory, as I understand his argument and those who support him, that the increased cost due to the wages prescribed in the hour limitation and involved in the wage and hour law are reflected back in a reduction of the purchase price which the farmer receives for his product. That is the argument for the Barden bill, as I understand it. On the other hand, the Norton bill undertakes to eliminate, as does the Barden bill, the area of production that is contained in section 13 of the present law and to eliminate, not from the wages provided in the law any of these operations but to extend the hours of the workers who process agricultural commodities to 60 hours per week as opposed to the 42 hours now in effect under the present law. In a nutshell, that is the controversy which is raging here today. You can eliminate from your minds the bill I have introduced because everything in it, with the exception of one proposition having to do with the western mining situation, is included in both the Norton and Barden bills.

The question you have to determine here when we get to the amendment stage is whether or not you want to vote to exempt from the 30-cent minimum wage, $12.60 per week under the present law, people who work in canning factories and in processing factories dealing with agricultural commodities throughout this Nation. Insofar as I am concerned, I am not going to vote to exempt those people unless it can be shown to my satisfaction that the entire cost of imposing the 30-cent wage is paid by the farmer himself and to meet that test in very few instances has anybody been able to bring any facts which satisfy my mind that the wages paid in canning plants and in other processing factories that deal in agricultural commodities are reflected back in a reduction of the amount received by the farmers. On the contrary, I want to point out to you that the farmer has no place to sell his product except to the people who work in industrial plants and who work in commercial places in cities and in towns. They do not sell back to the farmers themselves.

I come from what is generally called the deep South. I occupy a position here that is perhaps different from some of my colleagues from my own State and my own section and what I have to say about this bill I do not wish to have construed as a reflection upon the attitude of any other gentleman who is a Member of this House. All of us have our own responsibilities here, and we must meet them in the light of our own consciences and our own understanding of our duty here; but I am one of those from the South, now representing a district in this body, who believes that the time has come when the South can no longer live on a strata of economic life different from that existing in other sections.

I believe the time has come when, as rapidly as we possibly can, without too greatly disturbing the existing conditions, we must undertake to bring our economic levels up to an equality with those of other sections of the United States. I think we have to have parity in everything with the other sections of the country if we are to have prosperity in the South; therefore, as one Member of Congress, I am not willing to take the position in this House that because we are largely an agricultural section, and because it has been the custom in the South since time immemorial to pay people lower wages than they pay in other sections, we must forever continue this policy in our part of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is true that the income of the people of our section of the country is below that of any other section of the United States. That is true of our farmers compared with the farmers of the West, and the East for that matter; it is true of our lawyers; it is true of our doctors; it is true of our business executives; they all get less money for the same service, because the South has been on a lower economic level than the remainder of the country. I am one of those who wants to see that condition corrected, and I believe under this law we will take a step, and have taken a step, in a direction which will be more beneficial to the South perhaps than any other section of the United States. Mr. Chairman, 30 cents an hour is too little for anybody to be paid for his work in this day and generation, but that is what we have in this statute, and I do not believe that any of us can go home to our constituency and justify an exemption from that kind of wage scale on any other theory except that it is paid by a farmer who himself cannot control the prices of his commodities from which he gets his income. That is the test which must be placed in front of me before I will vote for an exemption of any operation under this law from the 30-cents-an-hour wage.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. Is it not a fact that when there is an increase in the price of any farm implement growing out of an increase in wages that that is passed on to the farmer? What is the difference between a canning factory and a cultivator factory, or any other factory?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, an increase in the price of anything the farmer buys is a disadvantage to him. There is no question about that.

Mr. DIES. What is the difference between a cannery on the one hand and a cultivator factory on the other?

Mr. RAMSPECK. There is not any.

Mr. DIES. The whole thing is passed on to the ultimate consumer eventually?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes. The difference would be in favor of the man making farm machinery, because the farmer does buy machinery. He does not buy canned goods. He cans his own if he gets any, and most of them in my section of the country cannot buy any. I would like to see their income raised down there, if there is any way to do it.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WOOD. Is it not a fact that the wages paid by the International Harvester Co. and these other manufacturers of farm machinery have nothing to do with the price of the machinery?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman may be correct. Certainly there is nothing in this bill that would warrant an increase in the prices of the things he mentions because they have always paid more than the minimum prescribed in this act.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the cost of producing a thing has not anything in the world to do with the sales price of that article?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not believe he said that.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what he said.

Mr. WOOD. What I meant to convey is that the wage cost in the production of a thresher or a binder used on a farm is a very small part of the cost of that machine to the farmer. It is not 1 percent, nor one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. MICHENER. I would like to have the gentleman put the figures in the RECORD.

Mr. RAMSPECK. You may discuss that in your own time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Either I misunderstood the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] or I misunderstand this debate. I understood the gentleman to say a while ago that there was evidence before the Committee on Labor that someone in this country was paying as low as 4 cents an hour wages. Is this true or is it not true?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not recall the exact figures. We have had evidence of some very low wages, and I believe perhaps we did have some testimony about some home-work operation where that was true.

I must finish my statement now.

I wish to urge the Members of this House to study the comparison of these bills shown in parallel columns in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 2260, because I find there is a great deal of lack of understanding of what the Norton bill proposes to do. I think it goes just as far as we ought to go in amending this law. I do not believe we ought to make further exemptions from the wages provision of the act, which now provides 30 cents an hour for a 42-hour week. The most that can be imposed under this law today is $16 a week. Insofar as the operations that are involved in this controversy are concerned, $12.60 a week is the maximum the law requires today, because no industry committees have fixed higher wages, as they might do if that procedure were followed.

We are faced with this situation: We have to choose between a bill which completely exempts from both wages and hours people who to my mind are nothing in the world but industrial workers processing agricultural commodities in packing plants and in canning plants and in plants like the Borden Milk Co., places of that sort, where they make cheese and things which this Norton bill does not exempt. I wish to say here that perhaps I was in error about my reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin a while ago, that perhaps canned milk is given a 60-hour week under this act.

I hope the Committee will see fit to vote down the Barden bill and limit these exemptions to hours alone. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman take 1 minute from this side to answer a question?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; I will take more, if you will give it to me.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In view of the gentleman's statement with respect to his own bill, and the particular section in his bill with reference to mining, what does the gentleman propose to do? I have compared the bills and I believe the section in the gentleman's bill on mining is extremely important.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I intend to offer an amendment either to the Norton bill or the Barden bill, or both, containing that amendment in the language which appears in H. R. 6406, which limits it to mines which are inaccessible due to high altitude or remoteness from cities and towns. The amendment I propose to offer is one in which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] and others are interested, and it is, I think, a perfectly sound amendment. [Applause.]

The wage and hour law, in my opinion, by raising the income of the workers who are lowest paid, will help to bring better health to these citizens.

To show that this may be true, I include herewith a part of a statement made by the Surgeon General of the United States.

[From Alliance (Ohio) Review of April 12, 1940]

NEW TYPE OF FAMINE IN UNITED STATES

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., April 12.—A new kind of starvation—due to faulty nutrition—is gripping more than one-third of the Nation, Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, said today.

Declaring "more than 40 percent of the people of the country are not getting a diet adequate to maintain good health and vigor," he said in a lecture at Massachusetts Institute of Technology that improved nutrition should be recognized as a "national problem."

"The new kind of starvation," said he, "may be even worse in its ultimate social effect than the ancient famines which periodically killed off a large part of the population."

The foods of which the Nation has an apparent surplus, he said, "are those in which the national dietary is deficient—milk and milk products, citrus fruits, green vegetables, and meats."

It seems to me that one certain result of increasing wages to those in the lowest income brackets is to increase their consumption of farm products.

In support of this statement, I include with my remarks an article by Charles G. Ross, which is as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of March 4, 1940]

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Charles G. Ross)

HOW THE FARM PROBLEM IS LINKED WITH INDUSTRIAL UNEMPLOYMENT—"SURPLUSES" SEEN AS ONLY "A SMUG NAME FOR A SHOCKING AMOUNT OF UNDERCONSUMPTION"

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The problem of what's the matter with the country, from whatever angle you view it, gets down in the end to the matter of unemployment. Along with the new ideas and the new tools of government that this administration will hand along to the next, there will go this terrible legacy—barring an economic miracle—of some 10,000,000 unemployed. Till the deep-seated ailment represented by these figures is cured, or at least greatly alleviated, there can be no real health in our economy. If the evil of unemployment can be ended, we shall have no trouble in taking care of the lesser of our ills.

These are truisms, and precisely because they are, there is danger that their significance will be overlooked or forgotten in our preoccupation with the side shows of the political campaign, and, at the moment, with foreign affairs. No national candidate seeking the favor of the people should be allowed to dodge the great underlying domestic issue of unemployment.

What has brought this problem of unemployment to the top of the writer's mind is a speech which Milo Perkins, president of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, made recently to a farm institute at Des Moines. We are accustomed to think of the farm problem as one thing, and the problem of getting men back to work in industry as something entirely different. Mr. Perkins shows vividly how interrelated are the two.

He approaches the subject from the angle of the farmer. The farmer's troubles stem from his production of more than he can sell in the present market at a profit. There are three reasons behind this condition. One is the fact that scientific methods have enabled the farmer, without extra labor, to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before. He doesn't know where to sell that additional blade.

The second reason pointed out by Mr. Perkins is the dislocation of our foreign trade. Incidentally, he says that the present war is certain to hurt our agricultural exports in the long run, and he fears that after the war things will be even worse. This is the unhappy prospect because the Allied nations, fighting fire with fire, are going more and more on a totalitarian basis and adopting centralized controls of their foreign trade. After the war, Mr. Perkins thinks, we are likely to find ourselves in a world reluctant to give up its barter economics.

The third great cause of farm surpluses has to do with the 10,000,000 unemployed. Here is where the plight of the farmer and the plight of the jobless industrial worker are seen to be integral parts of the same problem. For the term "surpluses," as Mr. Perkins says, is simply a "smug, polite name for a shocking amount of underconsumption."

He states the case very simply and very graphically. Notwithstanding the fact that industrial production rose last December to the 1929 level, we continued to have an army of unemployed not much smaller than that of the bleak days of 1932–33. The reason for this was twofold: The growth of population and the increased output per worker—something like 20 percent in the last 10 years. We have been smart enough to make amazing mechanical improvements. Are we going to be smart enough to provide jobs for the jobless? Mr. Perkins does not exaggerate when he says that "on our answer to that question—not in words, but in jobs—hangs the future of our industrial democracy. In other lands it has lost its race against time; if we have the courage to make it work here, then we shall be in truth a chosen people."

We can produce almost anything. The problem is to learn how to distribute what we produce so that we can wipe out this black plague of the twentieth century—underconsumption. Ahead of us is a job of national pioneering which has barely been started.

The trade-agreements policy of Mr. Hull is excellent; we need all the foreign outlets we can get, both for our farm and our industrial products. But, there's a tremendous potential market here at home beside which the foreign market, at its best, shrinks into insignificance. Mr. Perkins tells some of the possibilities from the viewpoint of the farmer with the miscalled "surplus." A few of his figures will illustrate the point.

In 1935–36, nearly two-thirds of all the families in the United States had incomes of less than $1,500. The average for this group was $826 a year—$69 per month for the whole family. "That," says Mr. Perkins, "is the story of underconsumption in one figure."

Some Utopian figures could be given, but let's see what would happen if all the families getting less than $100 a month in 1935 had been able to raise their incomes to that level. The increase in expenditures for food would have been $1,900,000,000. The national food bill would have been increased more than 14 percent, farmers would have received directly nearly a billion more in income, the extra demand would have increased their income by a large additional amount, the improvement in the farmers' status would have contributed to the general well-being, industrial unemployment would have been decreased.

To provide jobs for the jobless in private industry and so end underconsumption—that's the crux of the great economic problem that bedevils us, and none of those holding or seeking national power should be allowed to forget it.

Mr. Chairman, if we can improve the health of the workers who are paid low wages, and can enable them to buy more food and clothing, we will have brought assistance to the unemployed and to the farmer.

As I have stated, the farmer must sell his products largely to the citizens of the cities and towns. They can buy only from the wages received for their labor. Therefore the farmer is interested in seeing that industrial workers are properly paid.

Persons employed in canning factories, packing plants, and in similar activities, which the Barden bill seeks to exempt from wages as well as from hours, need the protection of this law.

I cannot give my consent to vote to exempt these people who now are required to be paid only 30 cents per hour. How can any Member of Congress, making as we do a sum equal to 2 weeks' wages for them for each day, face those people and say that they do not need to be protected from a situation which places their meager earnings in competition? Wages that low should not be a matter of competition.

The Norton bill keeps the floor under these low wages. It gives longer hours to take care of the small plants. The large plants work under contract with labor unions, so their employees are protected.

It seems to me that the Norton bill is an answer to any valid criticism in the present law as to these processors of agricultural commodities. The Barden bill goes too far.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the remarks you have just heard coming from a Democrat from the South ought to have a great deal of effect on the minds of those who are at least on the borderline and who have retained an open mind on whether they would support this humanitarian legislation or whether they would oppose the whole wage and hour law, not only because he comes from the Southland but because he comes, I assume, from an agricultural district. I, too, come from an agricultural district of the North, and I voted for the wage and hour bill. I believed then it was sound and meritorious legislation. I believed it was constitutional, although I knew at the time it was an invasion of the rights of the States. I am convinced that most of the American people have made up their minds now that it was proper and needed legislation; that it was constitutional; and that it was in the interest of all the American people and particularly in the interest of what we are apt to term the forgotten men and women, the millions of wage earners who are not organized, who have no voice and little representation, including the colored people who are not represented here from Southern States.

I have the highest respect for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. He is a distinguished Member of this House, and has the courage of his convictions. He is a first-rate fighting man, and there is hardly a better one in the House. He is honest and sincere in his opposition and I do not impugn his motives. He is opposed to the entire program of wages and hours. He opposed it when the bill was up. Therefore, when he comes before the House and leads a fight to amend the bill I advise the Members of the House to remember that old story about Greeks bearing gifts. To my mind, this Barden proposal is the Trojan horse that the opposition are trying to insert in the walls to break down, to undermine, and to ruin and destroy the wage and hour law that was enacted by the Congress of the United States to lift up the wage scale of those unfortunate American wage earners who were receiving 5 and 10 cents an hour and to give them, little enough, 30 cents an hour.

If I have any criticism of this bill it is that it should have been enacted years and years ago to maintain a proper American standard of wages and of living. I do not agree with some of my friends on the Republican side, even from my own State, who have opposed the bill from the beginning. We on the Republican side have always stood for an American standard of wages and of living, and when we refuse to vote at least a 30-cent-an-hour wage we are certainly not upholding that great ideal of the Republican Party which we have adhered to for so many years, the protective tariff which aims at establishing a proper and an adequate American wage scale and standard of living.

I hope my Republican friends listened attentively to the remarks of this Democrat from the South. I, too, come from an agricultural district of the North and do not believe that there is any discrimination against American farmers in upholding a $12-a-week wage scale.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FISH. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. The gentleman to whom the speaker refers as coming from an agricultural district of the South is the one Representative who comes from the great city of Atlanta, of which the South is proud.

Mr. FISH. I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. COX. Of course, I join with the gentleman in the compliment he pays my colleague, whose friendship I appreciate and as to whose understanding and fine patriotism I gladly testify. Now, it has become somewhat of a habit on the part of members of the Labor Committee to make me the object of attack. They seek to point me out as a labor baiter, altogether opposed to the doing of anything that might improve labor. The constant attack made upon me by the chairman of the Labor Committee, and the ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH], reminds me of a story. When I was a small boy living far out in the country, my mother had an old hen that was always sitting. She had, however, a most contrary disposition. We would duck her, but she would go back on her nest. However, in indulging her disposition to quarrel she somewhat neglected her nest, and the eggs grew cold and never hatched. We had also an old rooster. He was the handsomest thing in the barnyard. [Laughter.] He was always crowing in response to the cackle of the hens, but in all the years that he reigned in the barnyard there was never a chick that looked like him. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FISH. I have never questioned the gentleman's motives and do not propose to do so now. I commend the gentleman from Georgia because he has the courage of his convictions to oppose this type of legislation on every occasion, and there are those on our side who have opposed this legislation likewise, but I feel that the American people themselves have already determined that this is sound and wise humanitarian legislation and is deserving of the support of all the Representatives in Congress who want to maintain American standards of wages and living.

Now, as I said yesterday, I believe in certain modifications and in certain amendments to this bill, particularly as far as seasonal hours are concerned. Up in New York State, where they grow tomatoes, and the tomatoes get ripe at a certain time, of course, there must be an amendment to the bill so that those canneries can operate without paying overtime. Such amendments are proper and should be in order, and no Member should oppose them.

The reason I have risen here today is simply to insist that the Members on both sides realize that an attack is being made on the whole fabric of the bill. The opposition is seeking to undermine, destroy, and ruin the wage and hour bill. This is the last chance to undermine and wreck this humanitarian legislation, and every kind of amendment will be offered with the sole purpose of breaking down and ruining the wage and hour law, which is based on the principles of social and industrial justice in the United States.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For a brief question, yes.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman understands, of course, that there is a division between certain labor groups in this country and quite a controversy. I have got the impression from the reports that come in here and the way these bills have come to the floor of the House, as well as from the debate, that the Norton amendments are aimed at heading off the Barden amendments and that the Barden amendments are aimed at the wrecking of the bill.

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] can speak for himself. He is going to follow me, I believe, but the Labor Committee has reported out the Norton bill which carries the amendments that they think are meritorious and would be helpful.

Mr. MAY. And they have reported two other bills.

Mr. FISH. No; the Committee on Labor has reported out only the Norton bill. They have considered this issue for a long time and they have reported that bill out by either a unanimous vote or a very large and substantial vote. Therefore, if they are for this bill, it certainly should have the right of way ahead of the Barden bill.

What I am arguing about is this—not that we should not amend the law in certain instances, but we want to make sure that those who are trying to destroy the bill shall not creep in under a Trojan horse and destroy the whole bill by their efforts to go too far and sabotage and wreck existing law.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Rules Committee did not report out the Barden amendment?

Mr. FISH. I was talking about the Committee on Labor.

Mr. MAY. I was talking about the Committee on Rules.

Mr. FISH. The Rules Committee reported all three out, but there have been no hearings on the Barden bill or on the Ramspeck bill. The only hearings that I know of were held on the Norton bill, and that is the bill that I am supporting today, and I hope that those amendments will go through and that Members of the House will not try to enlarge on them and add to the amendments so that wage earners who are not farmers, who are not agriculturalists, who are in no sense tillers of the soil, but who are industrial workers, will be excluded from the provisions of this law. I am in favor of any honest, fair, and needed amendment, but I oppose right here and now any and all efforts to destroy this sound and humane legislation, which I think is the fairest, soundest, and best piece of legislation that the New Deal has enacted into law.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In order to make this Wage and Hour Act effective, will the gentleman favor an amendment which will require that imports from foreign countries under the Hull New Deal American sell-out trade treaties, to be produced under the same wage and hour limitation? Many of those imports from foreign countries are produced by people who work 20 hours a day and who receive much less than 5 or 10 cents an hour.

Mr. FISH. I think the Republicans are all agreed to that proposal—that we have to protect the American wage scale against the sweatshop and pauperized labor of Europe and Asia.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. We should not permit low-wage and long-hour foreign imports to continue. The workers in many foreign countries work 20 hours a day and for as low a wage as 1 cent an hour. If we continue to import the products which they produce we are really hitting the American workers in competing industries below the belt and doing far more damage than we will ever correct by the Wage and Hour Act.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. The gentleman pointed out that there should be some seasonal exemptions, for example, in the tomato-processing industry in his State.

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. May I suggest that the Fair Labor Standards Act already has a seasonal exemption of 60 days, so far as time and a half is concerned.

Mr. FISH. That is what we are primarily concerned with, the time and a half, and not the wage scale. I think the objections on this side from the farming districts are probably all on the time-and-a-half proposition and not on the wage scale, but the amendments in the Barden bill are on the wage scale, and more than 1,000,000 wage earners would be exempt from the minimum-wage scale if that bill is adopted. In conclusion, as far as any amendments are concerned, I do not propose to vote for an amendment to the existing law that lowers the wage scale by as much as 1 cent. That ought to be the test of all amendments. If any amendment lowers the wage scale, then I think those in favor of this legislation ought to vote it down. If the amendments have to do with seasonal hours, that is a different matter, and they ought to be considered upon their merits.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Having in mind the position of the gentleman from New York, as well as myself, and I have favored the wage and hour bill from its very inception, does the gentleman believe that the purpose of this bill is to include the higher-brackets-income people or is it promoted for the purpose of taking care of the low-wage-scale people?

Mr. FISH. Oh, the higher brackets ought to be excluded.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The great mistake that we are making is to force that proposition in the higher brackets.

Mr. FISH. That ought to be excluded. This law is meant to lift up the wage scale of millions of low-paid and impoverished people in America, both North and South, and if we Americans do not believe that an American citizen is worth 30 cents an hour, then we have not very much faith in America or in American citizens. If $12.60 a week is too much for an American worker, in the greatest and richest country in the world, then we have not much faith in our own country, in its citizens, or in its great destiny. The main defect in the bill, I think, is that it does not increase the wage scale to more than 30 cents an hour, or $12 a week, immediately.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. The gentleman is familiar with the exemption from overtime penalties that were granted in the original bill to the livestock processors for 14 weeks during the year, in the aggregate. In that industry they pay from 60 cents to $1.27 per hour, but the wage and hour Administrator's ruling has nullified that exemption.

The shipper who ships cattle or hogs or lambs to the processor cannot pass that extra cost on to the consumer.

Mr. FISH. Well, all I can say is I am in favor of doing away with all of these inequalities and injustices. I would favor any such amendment to do away with them. [Applause]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter in which I am very, very sincerely interested. I never have on this floor, nor do I now, propose to indulge in personalities or in questioning the motives of anyone. I like to regard this House as a body of men and women who are here with the sincere purpose of representing, to the best of their ability, the people of this country. For my part I am willing to account to my people or my Maker for my conduct in that respect.

There has been some bitterness about this bill. Why I do not know. There has been much confusion.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a question of cutting someone below $12.60 a week. Lord knows $12.60 a week is too small for any family to live on during these times, but I am sorry to report to this House that there are millions who have to live on less than that.

Why did they leave the farmers out to begin with? [Applause.] Somebody answer that question in an intelligent manner. Was it because his income was so small from the products that he feeds the folks of this Nation that he could not pay a pittance of $12.60 per week? Yes, my friends, I have them in my district who are making 4 cents, less than 4 cents, per hour. I visited my courthouse recently and there the walls are plastered with notices by the Federal land bank, the joint-stock land banks, money lenders, banks, and otherwise foreclosing these homes. Why? Listen to me. Why? Because the people of this country have been eating their products and paying them approximately nothing for them.

Now, let us get to the practical side of this thing. I, opposed to $12.60 a week? I despise the thought of it, as a principle; but I say to you if you are going to put a floor under those who handle agricultural products, then for God's sake do not put the farmer under the floor. [Applause.] Where is the floor under him? Oh, yes. You like ice cream with strawberries. You like strawberry shortcake. You like strawberries with cream. Here is a report of what those berries cost the man, just from the bush: Two cents a quart to pick them and to examine them and to pack them and to put them in the crate; 40 cents for the crate. What does it cost him to take a crate of berries from the bush to the platform? It costs him $1.42, and they were selling for $1.50 to $1.75 and $2 in my district, and I represent the greatest strawberry-producing district in the United States.

Pray tell me how is he going to pay for the fertilizer, the hoes, plows, and other supplies and equipment that he buys from the manufacturing companies? Every time you add handling charges to those products, whether it be strawberries or vegetables or other agricultural products, you do not put them under the farmer; you put them on top of him. Now, let somebody deny that. You have only to refer to the fact that in 1937 we were 21 percent above the 1910–14 level on agricultural prices. In 1938 down we went 26 percent. In 1939, 7 percent more. How long can the farmers endure that?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I would like so much to go along with my statement.

Mr. DIES. I want to get a little information.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Please let me go along with my statement.

Take a quart of strawberries. Do you know that when the price of strawberries reach 15 or 20 cents a quart, people will not pay another penny for them; yet that quart of berries brings 3 or 4 or 5 cents or possibly 8 cents down where it is grown. You can add on all the handling charges to that quart of strawberries that you want to, but when New York wires down to their buyers on that market, they say "Pay $1.75 for berries this morning," and that is all they pay, my friends. All the handling charges deducted and the farmer gets what is left. When the "ducks" get through with him, the "ducks" have got it all. Now, that is a general proposition.

I am very serious about this. I represent a district 200 miles in length and approximately 100 miles in width. It is populated with agricultural people, rural people, honest, hard-working people; yet the farmer can sit up 24 hours a day, day and night, curing his tobacco, and when he takes it to the warehouse the man will come in there at 8 o'clock and make more money on his tobacco from 8 o'clock to 4 o'clock than the farmer will make in a week. And tell me they do not pass that on to that farmer; why, they walk right up to the window. Over here is all the handling charges. Over here is what the tobacco brought. Right in front of his eyes they deduct that from the price of his tobacco and he gets what is left. Now deny that.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. No, I do not care to yield at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. With regard to the large cities I would say that New York City, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington have taken more from my people and paid less for it than any group of people in the world today. I recall getting up one frosty morning thinking I would make a little money. I cut 22 baskets of nice lettuce and shipped them to Philadelphia. I started cutting at about 3:30, and finally got them on the train at 7. A week and a half later I got a check for 16 cents—16 cents. They might have paid me 1 penny a basket for a 50-pound basket of iceberg lettuce, it seems to me, but I got only 16 cents.

Mr. Chairman, they, the farm producers, are the folks I am talking about. Maybe I am wrong. If I am, God knows I have never been more sincere and honest in a conviction in my life.

I want to say this about these amendments: I wiped out of the law the term "area of production," yes. I challenge any man or woman in this body to justify the Administrator's interpretation of area of production; I challenge any man or woman in this House to justify leaving the term "area of production" in the law in such way that the Administrator can make it 10 miles this week, 5 miles next week, or 30 miles next month. How can an industry, in which 32,000,000 people in America are engaged and working, survive any such uncertainty?

I do not want to hurt the industrial worker. I deplore the statement. I deny it emphatically. There is no disposition on my part to want to hurt the industrial worker. But, Mr. Chairman, it does not sound well to me to be told that they are paying $1.80 an hour to the person who cuts up the hog that my folks sell for 4 cents a pound. In 3 hours the man in the factory cutting up a 100-pound hog can earn enough to buy one, a hog that it took a farmer 6 months to grow. And then we want to keep adding on and adding on. I do not see how we can do it.

I wiped out the term "area of production." I thought it was the only safe thing to do.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Just briefly.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman made the statement that he wiped out "area of production." Is it not a fact that they wiped it out down in the Department, that they struck it out by administrative interpretation?

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. They wiped out the exemptions which were granted by Congress and by Congress put in the bill.

Mr. COOLEY. That is what I mean.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I just struck out "area of production" in my amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, let me say that I do not believe this body wants to leave the destiny of agriculture and the agricultural people in the hands of any one man who is an Army colonel and does not even pretend to be an agricultural man. We passed an act which, among its provisions, stated that the Administrator was to report to this body and recommend amendments to this act. Congress expected that amendments would be needed. Why should I be maligned and abused for suggesting the very thing the House ordered the Administrator to do when the act was passed, to make recommendations to this body as to how the act should be changed? I suggest you read the act.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I am advised that my time has expired. Would the gentleman from California grant me a little more time? I have been working an awfully long time on this.

Mr. WELCH. I may be able to later in the day, but I cannot do it now.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. May I not have just 5 more minutes?

Mr. WELCH. I cannot disappoint Members whom I have already promised time, much as I would like to accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Will the gentlewoman from New Jersey grant me a little time?

Mrs. NORTON. I am sorry; I have not even a minute left that I can grant. I am sorry.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I am awfully sorry. I have worked about a year and a half on this. I would like to discuss my amendments individually, for it is rather difficult to try to cover a subject like this in a few minutes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Time for debate has been fixed.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I thank my colleagues for their attention. [Applause.]

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I receive a good many letters and telephone calls congratulating me on the enlightened statesmanship I have shown in proposing my amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Acts. I also receive in the same mail an equal number of letters and telephone calls accusing me of wanting to trample down the lowest and most unprotected workers in the United States. Just to make it clear for the RECORD, I think I ought to start by stating that I am the Mr. BARTON of New York who in this particular instance is supporting the bill and upholding the hands of the chairman of the Committee on Labor, and not the Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina who is causing her such mental and spiritual anguish. [Laughter.] On many other matters the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] and I find ourselves in agreement; and I am convinced that if we went back far enough we would discover that we had a common ancestry and that probably one of our ancestors, his or mine, just did not know how to spell.

Mr. Chairman, my quarrel with the New Deal administration is not at all with respect to its so-called social objectives. I have been sometimes criticized within the ranks of my own party for being too sympathetic with and too friendly toward those objectives. My quarrel has to do, first, with what I regard as the grave danger involved in the New Deal's unsound and extravagant fiscal policies which I believe are jeopardizing the credit of the Nation, and will eventually harm most seriously the very people—the poor and the weak—whom it is the professed object of the administration to help. My second quarrel with this administration is that it is so much enraptured with reform that it has altogether too little interest in sound administration.

Now, I want to say, in all justice to the administration, that when it came to finding an administrator for the Wage and Hour Act, the President of the United States made an honest, earnest effort to get the ablest men who could possibly be put in that position. I happen to know something about that, because curiously enough through a mutual friend my help was enlisted to see if we could not persuade one of the leading business executives of this country, who was persona grata to labor, industry, and agriculture, to become administrator of the Wage and Hour Act. Unfortunately it was impossible to secure him because of commitments he had already made to his associates. In his place the President appointed Mr. Andrews. Subsequently, the gentleman who had been first approached, had a conversation with Mr. Andrews, in which he put forth some very sound advice. He said:

> My suggestion to you, Mr. Andrews, is this, and it is what I would do if I were in your place—go in there and apply this law at the beginning to just as few people as you possibly can. Start slowly; build your organization slowly. The law was enacted to get rid of sweatshops, child labor, and chiselers. Clean out those sore spots first, then feel your way along, and do not try to stretch out and include everybody at once.

Now, I believe that Mr. Andrews was well intentioned, but he had the misfortune to find himself surrounded in the division of wages and hours by a group of lawyers with a pretty rigid legalistic turn of mind. Many of us here in the House who had to do with the administration during his incumbency discovered how difficult it was to get any sort of reasonable rulings out of the Wage and Hour Division. My own mail, last year, was loaded with complaints and pleas for amendment to this law. I cannot speak for any other Member, of course, but my own experience, peculiarly enough this year, has been that I have received almost no complaints as contrasted with the overwhelming volume that poured in on me last year. I attribute this in part, and I think rightly, to the fact that Colonel Fleming came into the administration of the Division and brought a more flexible attitude, a better understanding of the problems of industry as well as of labor, and is trying earnestly to iron out the sore spots even in advance of the enactment of these amendments which the Labor Committee has proposed.

Specifically I know that a study is now going on seeking to arrive at a more workable definition of "seasonable industry." It may well be possible to liberalize this definition in such a way as to provide reasonable exemptions to the smaller canning and processing industry, not in the matter of wages, which nobody proposes to do, but in the matter of hours. For example, a plant canning cherries in the spring might be exempted also as to the canning of apples later in the season. A plant in the citrus-fruit country might be granted 14 weeks' exemption from the hours regulations during the season of certain early oranges and a similar exemption during the season for grapefruit or some other kind of oranges. In other words, by redrawing the definition of "seasonal industries" not in terms of plants, but in terms of products, it may be easily possible to remove many of the hardships against which there has been most complaint and without dangerous amendments to the law. I know also that studies are taking place looking toward a redrafting of the definition of those workers employed in executive, administrative, professional work, or as outside salesmen, or in a retailing capacity. These definitions the former administrator made unnecessarily tight. Hearings are presently being held, for example, as to the application of these definitions to the wholesale distributing trade, with every promise of a sensible and satisfactory agreement by all parties concerned.

Of course, it was never intended under this act that the $5,000 or $10,000 or the $20,000 a year executive should be punching a time clock. The whole argument in 1937, as those of you know who were then in the House, was that we should once and for all eliminate child labor and the chiselers, as well as the sweatshops from this country.

In reassurance to the House, from my experience with the Division, which has been very close, I say again that I am impressed with Colonel Fleming's desire to be reasonable, cooperative, and willing to deal with situations in an open-minded way. He must have made this impression on both business and labor, for I understand his administration is entirely satisfactory to the leaders of organized labor; and certainly the complaints of industry and the pleas for relief which so loaded my own mail during the last session have largely disappeared.

My position in regard to the proposed amendments is clear. I favor the Norton amendments, which were worked out with painstaking care and after long deliberation in the Labor Committee. They remove hardships without weakening the act. Further than these amendments I am not willing to go.

The Barden amendments would, in my judgment, exempt hundreds of thousands of the poorest paid and most helpless workers, including large numbers of Negroes and other underprivileged white workers, especially in the South, for whose protection the act was especially designed.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of New York. I yield to my cousin from North Carolina.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I am most highly complimented. I notice in the gentleman's figures, and I notice in the report which has been put in the RECORD that I am charged with exempting 325,000 "white collar" workers. In my provision it says if they have a guaranteed salary of $150 a month or a guaranteed yearly salary of $1,800 and are not required to work any minimum number of hours—in other words, they work when they please and keep their own time—then they are exempt. Does not the gentleman agree that there is considerable merit in that provision?

Mr. BARTON of New York. I may say to the gentleman from North Carolina I entirely agree with him on that.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. This bill was passed to protect people working in sweatshops and the industrial workers generally, was it not?

Mr. BARTON of New York. That was the plea under which it was enacted. May I say in that connection that in the Norton bill the exemption is $200 a month, while in the Barden bill the exemption is $150 a month.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. The fellow down in my country who gets $200 a month is a big shot.

Mr. BARTON of New York. I understand that.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman from North Carolina in his speech pointed out the sufferings of the farmer and the disadvantages under which the farmer labors. Does the gentleman from New York agree with the position taken by the gentleman from North Carolina by implication that the way to solve these ills is by taking it out on labor in this country?

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. The gentleman did not understand me to say that.

Mr. BARTON of New York. May I say to the gentleman from New York that I believe he must have misunderstood the inquiry addressed to me by the gentleman from North Carolina; he asked about the provision in respect of executives.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I was not referring to a statement in his inquiry, I was referring to the implications that were to be drawn from the speech the gentleman from North Carolina made on his amendments.

Mr. BARTON of New York. I would rather have him explain the implications of his speech.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If this bill had in the first place been drawn right for the benefit of labor in this country, why did they not include farm labor and why did they not include labor employed in establishments employing less than eight people, so that all the people would be taken under the bill, and thus make it the right kind of a bill in the first place?

Mr. BARTON of New York. We are trying to make it a better bill now.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The answer to that is very simple, that we recognized the special plea of labor on the farm. We also exempted those employed on the farms from the Social Security Act.

Mr. BARTON of New York. You also exempt from the Social Security Act, do you not, concerns having less than eight employees?

Mr. McCORMACK. From some aspects of it; yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The language on page 15 of the Norton bill in subsection 12 reads as follows:

Any employee employed in the cleaning, packing, grading, or preparing of fresh fruits and fresh vegetables in their raw or natural state when such operations are performed immediately off the farm.

May I ask the gentleman if the word "immediately" refers to time or distance or both?

Mr. BARTON of New York. I should say both, subject to correction.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Then to what extent would that make this bill conform to the statement of Colonel Fleming published in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 2260, that the Norton bill eliminates the area of production under which, as I understood, the clear intention of the Congress to exempt those rural workers engaged in packing fresh fruits and vegetables from the operation of the bill, they were brought under the bill by saying the area of production was 10 miles. Now, when you say, "immediately," have you not made a tighter area of production than we have under the present law? How far is "immediately"? Would it be 10 miles or would it be 100 feet?

Mr. BARTON of New York. I would like permission to discuss that when we reach that point in the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I might suggest as a yardstick that the gentleman inquire of the Secretary of Labor, who fixed the locality or the vicinity under the Walsh-Healey bill as including 13 States.

Mr. BARTON of New York. Summing it all up, I believe we have now and can congratulate ourselves on having a reasonable, intelligent, and cooperative Administrator who appreciates the problems of both employer and employee. For this reason I favor adopting the conservative amendments recommended by the committee and giving him another 6 months or a year to deal with such individual situations as can be ameliorated by changes in the regulations and definitions. At our next session the Administrator, who, under the act, is directed to make recommendations from time to time to the Congress, may have discovered certain other ways in which the act can be perfected and unnecessary hardships and criticisms removed. But such changes, I believe, will be minor. Neither the next session of Congress nor any session will be willing either to repeal or undermine this legislation. It has commended itself to the social conscience of our people and has even in these few months been cheerfully accepted by the overwhelming majority of forwarding-looking employers throughout the land. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I believe this issue is very clear in the minds of most Members. We have now come to a time when we can vote either to destroy the Fair Labor Standards Act or preserve the law in its present form.

In order that the record may be clear and so there will be no misunderstanding as to where the American Federation of Labor stands on this measure, I desire to state that I am just in receipt of a letter from Mr. Hushing, the national legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, which encloses a copy of a letter that President William Green wrote to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN]. The letter of Mr. Green reads as follows:

A study of the amendments which you have proposed to the Fair Labor Standards Act leads me to write you and frankly state that most of the amendments you propose are highly objectionable to the American Federation of Labor.

For instance, one amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act which you propose provides that all wage earners who earn $150 per month would be excluded from the provision regulating the hours of labor which is embodied in the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Such a provision is economically unsound because at the present time most thinking people agree that the number of hours worked per week must be lessened if we are to overcome widespread unemployment. We must distribute the amount of work available among a larger number of people. That objective can only be realized through a reduction in the number of hours worked per day and per week.

The section which provides for the incorporation of the 44-hour week in the Fair Labor Standards Act cannot be regarded as unreasonable. It provides a uniform, standard workweek for all who are subject to the provisions of the law. If we are to exempt a large number of workers from this provision of the Fair Labor Standards Act, we will suffer indefinitely from unemployment.

It is my opinion that the Fair Labor Standards Act should at least remain as it is. Time will demonstrate the soundness of the provisions of this social-justice statute. It has only been in operation about 1 year. Sufficient time has not yet elapsed in order that we might test the soundness and practicability of the regulatory provisions of this act.

I wish to register in behalf of the membership of the American Federation of Labor and in the name of the American Federation of Labor our opposition to the amendments which you offer to the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mr. Chairman, I also have a letter from the Railway Labor Executives' Association, which reads as folows:

RAILWAY LABOR EXECUTIVES' ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, Ill., April 19, 1940.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The Railway Labor Executives' Association composed of the 20 standard railroad labor organizations, representing approximately 1,000,000 employees, is unalterably opposed to H. R. 7133, and some of the outstanding reasons are:

This bill practically destroys the real spirit and intent of the original scope to protect the lower paid and also to reduce excessive hours. In our railroad employee groups are approximately 90,000 who receive less than 40 cents per hour—certainly not a decent American wage standard.

To enact the provisions of H. R. 7133 into law will tear down every vestige of progress made under a law which, in any event, has as yet not been thoroughly tested by experience.

Sane reasoning always justifies allowing experiences to govern. Our association has found itself in vexing and unreasonable positions again and again by some one or groups advocating something new or different prematurely, and in all such instances opposition and defeat of these movements have served to the best interests of the vast majority.

The Railroad Retirement Act, for example, has had many amendments offered to it, some meritorious and others detrimental, but since the meritorious amendments offered were completely overshadowed by those obnoxious and of greater evil than good, the correct position to take has been, and with success, to await time to learn from a fuller experience the correct avenue to follow to keep the Railroad Retirement Act whole.

Fair logic convinces us that the viciousness of H. R. 7133 leads in the direction to destroy rather than to constructively build and improve on that now in effect.

We urge that H. R. 7133 be defeated and that you will use your good judgment to accomplish that purpose.

Very truly yours,

J. G. LUHRSEN,
Executive Secretary.

The question has been asked, Why should we not include the farmers in this legislation? The Members of this Congress know that all social legislation passed by any State in the Union or by this National Congress affects the industrial worker. The agricultural workers are always exempted, because it is not intended to cover agricultural workers. There have been some very brilliant assertions made on the floor of this House in behalf of the farmers of this Nation, but I am sorry that those same impassionate speeches could not be made when the question comes before us of parity prices for farmers, low-interest rates, and legislation enabling farm tenants to purchase farms and homes. I have not heard any of those impassioned orations when such legislation was being considered by the House. I have not received one single letter from a farmer in my district in opposition to the Fair Labor Standards Act. The farmers who are talking about it belong to that type of farmer who farms the farmers.

Here is a letter I have from the Federal Cold Storage Co., of St. Louis, and I have hundreds of letters from like institutions. The letter reads as follows:

My advice is that the Barden bill, H. R. 7133, may come up for consideration in the near future. It is urged that this bill amending the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 be favorably acted upon for the benefit of the individuals and companies engaged in the handling and marketing of agricultural and horticultural products.

These are the people that an effort is being made to exempt from the operations of this law. If the Barden bill is passed, it will exempt from the operations of this law probably one million and a half workers now under the law. There will not be a packing house in this Nation or a processing firm or milk producer under the law. The Borden Milk Co. and many other similar companies will not come under the law. There will not be a single one of those manufacturing institutions under the law, and a million and a half workers will be deprived of the benefits of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The Labor Committee endeavored to arrive at some reasonable amendment to this act, because there was a hue and cry for amendment; but the Labor Committee went further than I wanted to go, and I will say to you that I cannot support this bill. I cannot support either the Barden bill or the Norton bill, because they have allowed home work to creep into this law, and by an amendment they have legalized that dastardly system of sweating by allowing the Administrator, by order or regulation, to investigate home work in so-called rural communities; and if it be found that the elimination of home work curtails work opportunities, the Administrator is authorized and empowered to issue an order allowing home work to be done, a thing we have been fighting to eliminate in this country for the past 40 or 50 years.

I cannot see any reason for the adoption of either bill. The committee bill, the so-called Norton bill, extends the hours of some million and a half workers. The main object and reason for the passage of the Wages and Hours Act was to raise the standard of living and to spread the work and to eliminate unemployment. There is no other reason for reducing hours of labor from 44 to 40 hours a week or from 54 to 40 hours a week except to spread employment.

Now, here is the type of farmer who is affected by this law, and they are really not farmers. They are processors rather than farmers. I have in my district several processing institutions that have contracted with their employees and the hourly provision in the wage agreement is in accordance with the limitation of the Wage and Hour Act, but it provides that in case the Wage and Hour Act is repealed or processing institutions exempted from the operations of the law, then the hourly workweek will automatically be increased to 54. There are three such wage agreements that I know of in my district that affect some 700 or 800 employees that have never before been able to sit down across the table and negotiate with their employers for a wage agreement. So, if we relax the hourly provisions, we will merely create more unemployment, and we will force an additional burden on a million and a half or two million workers who are now being protected.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman think that white-collar workers receiving $150 a month ought to be exempted from the hour provisions of the act?

Mr. WOOD. I do not think the so-called white-collar workers, just because they are called white-collar workers, should be exempted, whether they receive $150 or $200 a month. The bank clerks and many other so-called white-collar workers are among the most sweated people in some instances. There is no industry that requires its employees to work longer hours than some bankers require their bank clerks to work. They should be privileged to be protected by this Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mr. HEALEY. Just one question further, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. WOOD. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HEALEY. And such an exemption would defeat one of the purposes of the act, namely, the spread of employment, would it not?

Mr. WOOD. Of course, it would. I am glad the gentleman contributed that. The main purpose of the Wage and Hour Act is to spread employment, to bring more enjoyment to those underprivileged, and raise their standard of wages to somewhere near a living wage.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I live in a district where there are small banks, and I do not think any bank has much more than $100,000 capital stock. I have a great number of young men who have entered the banks with a view of learning the banking business who have told me that under the operation of this law they did not have the opportunity of learning the business, but were required to do a specific job, which they were employed to do. They stated to me that unless this law was changed they would have to go out and find something else to do, because there was no future in banking if you are going to post a machine all of your life.

Mr. WOOD. Oh, that is a stock argument that I have heard for 20 years before I came here, before the Missouri State Legislature, when we were going to pass a woman's 9-hour law. Since that time we endeavored to pass a woman's 8-hour law. Invariably the manufacturing associations, the State chambers of commerce, would bring a number of women to the legislature who would beg to be allowed to work 9 hours a day, and they would also say that if they passed this 9-hour law it would destroy their business. They have been working 8 hours for the past 7 or 8 years and they are still doing business at the same old stand.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I bring this point up, not because it is a stock argument but because young people in my district have come to me and called attention to it and they have protested against the regulations which prevent them from making progress in banks. That is the only reason that I mention it.

Mr. WOOD. I would not be so seriously opposed to that amendment standing alone.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that, but to pass that amendment together with the homework proposition and the relaxing of hours of the workweek, relaxing the law for a million and half workers in processing industries, would be wrong. To require them to work more than the required workweek under the law is wrong, and we should not encourage home work.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. SACKS. Is it not true that after all, these arguments are merely subterfuges by those who would like to destroy the principle behind the legislation?

Mr. WOOD. They are merely subterfuges.

Mr. SACKS. Which the employers are merely setting forth because they do not want that principle established, but they want to go back to the old days where they could control the hours and the wages and everything else.

Mr. WOOD. I would say to the gentleman that a great many employers in my district who were in opposition to the wage and hour law before it was enacted, are now in favor of the law. Many of the garment manufacturers in my home town and in other places in the district, and other manufacturing institutions, have come to me and have said that this law is a benefit to them, because it has enabled them to compete with cheaper districts in the South and other places, and it has enabled them to carry on their business and now they are for the Fair Labor Standards Act. They are the very same manufacturers who wrote to me 2 years ago saying they were against the law. They are importuning me to protect the law as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I think I can speak on this bill probably as a man closer to the soil than most of the men here. Speaking of exemptions from the wage-hour law, Puerto Rico, I notice, shall have a complete exemption under the proposed legislation. That has been made possible, I understand, because of a $150,000 lobby. It so happens that the farmers in the Federal Land Bank of Baltimore are also carrying along Puerto Rico. This is unfair. We can find the answer to our problem in the application of just plain common sense.

I am very happy to know how many friends farmers have here on this floor who live in the heart of the great cities.

I wonder how many of them ever stood around a cannery in the evening with a load of corn, peas, beans, or tomatoes when the whistle blew to find that they had to let their load stand there, go home, and come back the next morning to find that the load of produce had heated or the tomatoes rotting, and take heavy dockage, which was a serious loss.

I wonder whether they know that we farmers harvest only once a year.

I wonder if they know how light tomatoes are when they sell for $1 a bushel and how heavy tomatoes are when they sell for 10 cents a bushel.

I wonder how many of them ever had cattle or hogs in the stockyards on a Monday when the run was double the normal run, to find that the wage and hour law prevented a packer from buying more than he could use; to have their livestock lying around at the yards for several days until the packer could adjust himself and use them and find that they had a heavy charge for corn at $2 a bushel, or hay at $40 a ton, regardless of market price. To find that they had a terrific shrinkage in weight, and, in many cases, particularly in hogs, some deaths, until the packers could take them at $1.00 per hundredweight near the week end.

These things could be amended by minor amendments to this law.

An exemption in the hours would help here.

Then there are thousands and thousands of piece workers, particularly in the cigar industry, who always work on a piece-work basis. If they had an exemption on wages the fast worker would have the privilege of really going ahead and the slow worker would have the opportunity to keep at his job and off of relief.

Area of production has always been a thorn in the flesh. No one seems to know where to draw the line.

Here, again, the application of common sense would help.

These farm commodities are generally the property of the farmer until—as in the case of milk it goes into the bottle; and in the case of livestock it goes into the cooler; and in the case of farm crops when they enter the package or state in which they are finally passed on to the consumer. It then leaves the farmer's care and his interest and becomes a commercial product, and its entire status changes and then, and only then, can it enter into any kind of a market and transaction without affecting the farmer.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I have not the time. Secretary Wallace is tremendously interested in this bill. Why was he not interested last summer when we were threshing our wheat and selling it at 60 cents a bushel? When we farmers wanted to hold it he was shouting surplus and urging us to sow less, and killed our beliefs that we could get more, and just as soon as it passed out of the farmer's hands we saw that price advance. Today wheat is selling above a $1 a bushel—when the farmer has none to sell.

Now it does not make any difference under what administration or what rule a farmer loses money. He is just simply licked.

I remember when I put 6,000 pounds weight on a bunch of steers and sold them for $40 less than first cost. That was under Hoover. But I remember that in 1937, when the New Deal had pegged up the price of beef to where the consumer began to squeal and we farmers had loaded up with fat cattle, that at the instigation of the Department of Agriculture here in Washington a meat strike was declared and 5,000 butcher shops closed in New York in a single night, and we lost again.

Now, it does not make any difference whether a farmer losses $1,000 under a Republican administration or whether he loses $1,000 under the New Deal. The cold fact exists—he is licked.

What the farmer needs today is encouragement and an opportunity to produce, and the American market.

When times are hard and prices are low the farmer does not put into effect the John Lewis method of striking. He has a lot of fixed obligations to meet. He is an honorable man, and the lower the prices get the harder he works, the more he plants in order to meet his obligations. Knowing full well that it does not get him a single dollar to put in the bank, but just to keep his credit good so that he can look his creditors in the face and feel happy.

It is not the Department of Agriculture or the New Deal that keeps the farmer in his job. It is his abiding faith in God—his loyalty to the Government—his love for his work, and the eternal hope that next year will be better.

If the farmer was not kept at his work by these high motives, he and America would starve.

The Labor Committee, of which I am a member, operated for many months under a determination to do nothing. And refused to hear the appeal of the agricultural leaders of the country. More time was spent listening to the lobbyists for the New Deal—paid employees of the Government, who claim that their calendars were so full that they needed increased personnel to catch up. They always had time to crowd the Labor Committee and help the leadership to stagnate our work.

How well I recall that the leadership of the committee declared that no bill could go out of the committee before that "pack of wolves"—meaning this House.

There is no man in this House that believes more in labor unions than I do. There is no man in this House that wants to see the American working man receive higher wages any more than I do. But I want those same opportunities afforded to the farmers of this country.

I know that $1.50 a day is not enough for the working man. But here again I would employ common sense, and if it is the case of $1.50 a day or nothing, then I am for the $1.50.

These workers in our canneries that work a few weeks or a few months each year are not concerned about hours. They are usually occupied at some other things most of the time and look forward to this opportunity each season to earn money on the side to pay their winter's coal; buy shoes for the children, or pay rent, and so forth. And while we are told that they are sacrificing, they are willing to sacrifice in order to get that. These are honest, hard-working people, good at heart, and willing to make what they can and resent being interfered with or this privilege taken away from them.

The application of just plain common sense, a few minor amendments to the wage and hour law, will remedy the evils that I have referred to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I point out in connection with the gentleman's statement about Puerto Rico that Puerto Rico has about 1,800,000 people down there, and that in the last 5 or 6 years the Treasury of the United States has forwarded $160,000,000 to that island. There are probably 250,000 workers who are out of jobs today. The Wage and Hour Act put about 70,000 people out of work. You will either let the Puerto Ricans work for themselves or feed them from the Federal Treasury and place the burden on the backs of the farm people of this country. Which does the gentleman want to do? The lobby had nothing to do with that. The Congress of the United States failed to carry out its duty to the Puerto Rican people.

Mr. GROSS. I was in Puerto Rico last fall and I do not believe all the money we could appropriate, whatever we do, will help those people.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let them go back to work and help themselves and quit feeding them out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GROSS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY]

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry there has been so much sectionalism introduced into the debate on this bill. I deplore the fact that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] yesterday discussed the pending legislation from a sectional standpoint. I do not intend to say anything that would in any way inject any bitter sectionalism into the debate upon this bill. There are too many Members of this House from the same section of the country as the gentleman from Georgia who have been kind and generous to me in my associations with them as a Member of this House. Too many of them have given me their friendship to permit me to say anything that would give personal offense to them. The chairman of my own committee, the Naval Affairs Committee, Mr. VINSON, is from the same State as Mr. Cox, and he has been more than kind in extending cooperation with regard to matters of interest to the people of my city and my district.

Secondly, I do not think this is a sectional issue. We have as many chiselers in the industries of Pennsylvania as there are in any other State in the Union.

I must, however, pay some attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] when he discussed the political complexion of this House in his speech of yesterday. He said the House was composed of Republicans, Democrats, and so-called Democrats. I infer that he places those of us who defend the wage and hour legislation in the classification of "so-called Democrats." I do not know what claim he has that his democracy is more simon pure than ours. I know that I and many of my colleagues from the eastern industrial States have been Democrats for years in districts where it was impossible for us to seek political office with any chance of success.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] has been a Member of this Congress for some 15 years. I do not want to quarrel with him about his democracy, but I wonder if he would have been a Democrat if he were geographically situated differently during those 15 years. I wonder if, for instance, his democracy would have stood the test the same as ours has, when we were willing to battle for the ideals and principles of Jefferson and Jackson, knowing that we had no hope during those years of reaching a position wherein we could look for reward in holding political office, because there was no chance of our being elected to one.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. No; not now. I think perhaps because the philosophy of the gentleman from Georgia is so much different than ours, if he were in our locality, perhaps he might have found that his views were more in sympathy with those who control the Republican Party in our State. If so, he would find himself in the company of Mr. Pew and Mr. Grundy, president of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association, who is a bitter opponent of wage and hour legislation; and if he found himself in the political company of those men he would, I fear, have to accept all their philosophy, too.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Not at the moment. The gentleman had an hour yesterday. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. COX. I was wondering if the gentleman assumed to speak for Pennsylvania democracy?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I am speaking for my own democracy and the democracy of many of my colleagues from Pennsylvania, and it has stood a more severe test than has the democracy of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. [Applause.]

I am not going to discuss this thing along sectional lines, because, as I said, there are just as many chiselers in Pennsylvania as there are in Georgia, North Dakota, North Carolina, or anywhere else in this Nation. If there were not, we would not need any enforcement agencies in the State of Pennsylvania. God knows, we need more inspectors and investigators to prevent these exploiters from chiseling in Pennsylvania than we now have. That is the reason why I favor the wage and hour law; why I view with apprehension any attempt to emasculate it in order to return to the conditions which existed prior to its passage. I want to tell you ladies and gentlemen of this House that you make a mistake if you think the sentiment of the people of this country, no matter whether from the East, the South, the North, or the West, is not for the wage and hour law. The Gallup poll of a year ago showed that 71 percent of the people of the United States approved of the Wage and Hour Act. It showed that 56 percent of the employers were in favor of it, and showed that 59 percent of the people in the southern part of the United States favored the wage and hour law.

The Barden amendment is designed to help agriculture. I do not question the motives of the gentleman——

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Not now.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. On the Gallup poll; the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I only have 10 minutes, I do not think so. I have correctly stated the Gallup poll on this question.

The amendments of the gentleman from North Carolina are designed, he says, to aid agriculture. I do not wish to question his motives, but you and I know it is merely going to open the door; it is going to throw it wide open.

It is going to lead to emasculatory amendments or to amendments that will nullify many of the provisions of the present act. I ask you men and women of the House, Democrats and Republicans, to face the situation squarely whether you favor 30 cents an hour or whether you favor a return to conditions which enable the exploitation of employees and the forcing of men and women to work for longer hours and at wages of 5, 10, and 15 cents an hour. I hope the answer of the membership will be that this Congress will not turn the people back to these wolves but that they will be allowed to have the continued protection of this beneficial law, that industry in all parts of the country will be on an equal basis and that all employees will receive fair consideration.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield if I have time.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman favor the enactment of the Norton amendments?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. There may be certain of the Norton amendments which have merit. I believe the Norton amendments should be discussed on their own merits, each and every one. I certainly do not favor the Barden amendments. There may be some necessary changes that we should make with regard to certain provisions of the wage-hour law, but we should approach it with the idea of ironing out the known difficulties that exist and not with the intent of allowing conditions to revert to their former state where exploitation was rampant in certain industries.

Mr. KEEFE. I agree with the gentleman's philosophy, but can he point out what there is in the Norton bill that he objects to specifically?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I have not said I object to anything specifically. The gentleman asked me if there was any merit in the Norton bill.

Mr. KEEFE. I asked the gentleman if he favored the Norton bill.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. At the present moment I cannot say that I favor each and every provision of the Norton bill, but as the debate goes on and I hear different provisions explained I may be influenced one way or the other. I want to be fair, but I want to see the law continued in operation because it has brought good to the low-paid workers of this country.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. Yesterday in the debate the impression was given to the House that business, little business, was opposed to the wage-hour bill and to the Fair Labor Standards Act. Is that true?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. That cannot be true because I have received more communications from businessmen in my district emphatically saying that they favored the wage-hour law than I have from labor organizations. And these have come from many men who originally had stated their opposition to it. They have seen its beneficial effects, however, and are now giving their active cooperation, and they have united with labor in supporting it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been threshed over pretty thoroughly. I shall not attempt to begin at the beginning and follow through with what might be termed an "orderly discussion of the whole issue," but later will call your attention to certain things which I think stand out in this controversy. At the risk of being charged with bad taste in bringing in my own personal experiences—let me say that my business is farming—and with a little better luck than I have had the last 6 or 7 years, I hope to stay in it the rest of my life.

I have watched these industries engaged in the processing of agricultural products for 40 years. It has fallen to my lot to be deeply interested in them, because I sell products to them in my home neighborhood. When the proposal was first made that we should have a so-called wage-hour law, I doubted that it could ever be successfully enforced or applied evenly to the whole United States, regardless of the character of the vocations in which people are engaged. There is such a remarkable difference between the method of life in the country and the method of life in the city and in the industrial centers that I doubt if it is possible for any legislative body to draft a law which will place all of those vocations and occupations in a single strait jacket. My dread from the beginning of this discussion, which started about 3 years ago, was that the attempt to enclose all these people, all these groups, all these communities in a single strait jacket would develop conditions unexpected and inflict injury in places which most people did not realize could be injured by the enactment of the law.

There can be no doubt about it that the Congress, when it passed this act, intended to exempt from its provisions what I might term "the country industries," the industries in the rural districts, or closely adjoining the rural districts, engaged in the processing of agricultural products. The language of the act made perfectly plain the intent of Congress. It provided, in effect, that the act shall apply—

> To any individual employed within the area of production as defined by the Administrator engaged in handling, packing, storing, ginning, compressing, pasteurizing, drying, preparing in their raw or natural state, or canning of agricultural or horticultural commodities for markets or in making cheese, or butter, or other dairy products.

Most of you are familiar with the interpretation made by the Administrator of the phrase "area of production." He defined it in effect as meaning the farm upon which the agricultural products were produced. If the plant at which the man was employed was not situated on the farm upon which the crop was produced, then the plant should not be exempt. That, of course, completely destroyed the intent of Congress. I think no one will deny that. It denied the whole exemption with one stroke of the pen, and the Members will remember that when that interpretation was announced protests spread throughout the country districts and reached many Members of Congress, and many Members from both sides of the aisle hastened to Mr. Andrews' office to endeavor to point out to him the intent of Congress and how his interpretation absolutely destroyed it. Hearings were held before him or some of his examiners, but no ground was gained apparently until finally an amended interpretation was brought out. I shall not read it all to you, but it is headed "Area of production as used in section 13 (a) of the Fair Labor Standards Act," and it proposes to exempt from the operation of the law a person if he performs those operations on materials all of which come from farms in the general vicinity of the establishment where he is employed and the number of employees engaged in those operations in that establishment shall not exceed seven. Of course, again, that denied exemption to any establishment worthy of the name. If they must be down as low as seven employees, then I could not find an establishment within 20 miles of my farm that could handle the crops I want to sell to them and have processed. What the number of employees has to do with area of production passes my comprehension. The Congress did not say anything with reference to the number of employees as the guiding rule, but he makes it the guiding rule. If the plant employs eight men it is subject to the law. If it employs less than seven it is not. As a matter of fact, you cannot find plants worthy of the name that operate with so few employees.

I greatly regret that the Congress or the men interested in this matter should find it necessary to bring before the House a piece of legislation like the so-called Barden bill. The author of that bill and those who helped him have perforce tried to make up a list or catalog of those avocations or industries, great or small, which shall be specifically exempt under certain circumstances. The author of the Barden amendment had to have recourse to that type of bill because apparently no matter what the Congress intended in the original act, the Administrator does not intend to admit it. He just throws it out. He has done it twice. That is perfectly apparent. So while some of us may regret, as I do, the procedure under which we are acting, those of us who are convinced that this thing is doing a great injury, and certainly doing no good anywhere upon the face of the earth, and I refer to these rulings, have no other recourse; thus we have to bring to you a list of these industries engaged mostly in the processing of agricultural products and ask you specifically to exempt them under certain circumstances. So much for the cause of all the disturbance. The whole disturbance, if I may say so, or nearly all of it, has been caused by the Administrator. I dare say that the author of this bill was just as much surprised as I was by his interpretation of the words "area of production."

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Does the gentleman feel that the Barden amendment defines "area of production" or does the thing which gets away from the necessity of defining "area of production"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Barden amendment does not refer to any "area of production." We do not dare do so. The Administrator has destroyed it twice by his interpretations; so we have abandoned any effort to use the phrase "area of production." The Norton bill, I notice, uses a most peculiar phrase that some of these people shall be exempt from the operation of the law if the products are processed "immediately off the farm." Who in the heavens knows what that means? What is "immediately off the farm"? I do not know. I suppose 1 foot away, perhaps 10 feet away, perhaps the adjoining farm only, not the second adjoining farm. Nobody can tell.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WOOD. Does the gentleman believe there is any method by which you can define "area of production"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. I would like to have the gentleman's views on that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had not intended to go into that.

Mr. WOOD. We have been unable to do it or to arrive at any conclusion in the last 2 years and I would like to have the gentleman's views on that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had not intended to inflict this on the Committee. I really preferred to omit it in the interest of brevity but on June 13, 1939, I took it upon myself to write a letter to Mr. Andrews, Administrator, protesting against his first interpretation of the term "area of production," and after reciting the act as it stands, including the phrase "area of production," I went on to say:

Omitting any discussion of your exemption of persons employed in plants with less than seven employees, which exemption has nothing whatsoever to do with area, but rather the mere size of the plant, let me take up for discussion as briefly as possible the meaning of the phrase "area of production," and the intent of the Congress in using it.

The debate in the House of Representatives, held at the time when the matter of exemptions was before that body (May 24, 1938, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 7401 to 7423) is illuminating in the extreme. A reading of that debate makes the intent of the supporters of the exemption and, finally, of the Congress itself in enacting it, perfectly clear. Several amendments relating to the exemption of persons employed in plants, processing agricultural products of one kind or another, were offered upon the floor. While these particular amendments were not adopted, nevertheless the language in which the exemption was expressed in the final enactment of the bill carries out almost exactly the intent of the amendments considered in the House, so that the explanation of those amendments during the House debate and the contentions of their supporters throw a very clear light upon the intention of the Congress in finally enacting paragraph 10 of section 13a.

Let us see what the Members had in mind when they offered these amendments, and what the Congress had in mind when it finally approved the contention of these same Members by enacting the language of paragraph 10. Member after Member, in referring to conditions prevailing in country districts, explained the intimate relationship which must ever exist between the farmer who produces and the neighborhood plant which processes certain products of the soil. While it was not contended that the farmers in any way own or control the neighborhood plant, it was pointed out again and again that governmental regulation of the plant would and must have an immediate and direct effect upon the farmer. The customs and practices of the farmers, and the customs and practices of the plants, the subjection of both to weather conditions, the fact that the work of both is seasonal, were all pointed out. Moreover, labor conditions in the plants were described in some detail and the near impossibility of the regulation of hours of labor (including overtime) pointed out. All of these amendments and the pleas of their supporters were based upon the contention, first, that there is no need whatsoever, from the standpoint of good public policy, to include these country plants under the provisions of the act; and, second, that their inclusion would be highly injurious not only to the plants but to the farmers themselves. In adopting the language found in paragraph 10 the Congress very clearly intended to exempt the typical country canning factory, refrigerator warehouse, milk plant, bean-picking plant, and similar rural institutions now in existence and serving in the normally and generally understood way the men who till the soil. In using the words "area of production" the Congress envisioned a stretch of country from which the farmer normally, and in obedience to his necessities, hauls his crop to the plant where it is to be processed. The picture which the Congress had in mind can be found in the rural areas all over the United States. The picture is essentially that of a neighborhood, and when the Congress used the phrase "area of production" it used it as descriptive of the circumstances and conditions with which it intended to deal. That this picture has not been envisioned by the Administrator, that this intent has not been recognized by him, is a matter of great surprise to all of us who took part in those discussions in the House. It has been more surprising to me, due to the fact that my business is farming; that I raise sweet corn and peas, and sell them to the neighboring factory; that ordinary common sense drives me to the conviction that my farm, upon which the sweet corn and peas are raised, is situated in the area of production surrounding the plant. If my farm is not in the area of production, where is it?

I do not know. It does not make any difference how many men are employed in that little factory up there. Of course, there are more than seven men employed. It makes no difference how many men are employed. The question is, Is the factory in the area of production of the goods? The Administrator could have gone around this country, region by region, with no reference or attention paid whatsoever to the number of people employed in a plant, and he could have described the regions by metes and bounds, or in some other way. Finally, after experience, running perhaps over some few years, he could have worked out a reasonable interpretation of what "area of production" was, instead of which he destroys the whole thing above the seven-man limitation.

I have done my best to give you my ideas as to what the definition should have been. I have answered the gentleman's question to the best of my ability. May I proceed with an attempt to show the practical effect of this thing?

In the first place, let the men who live in the great cities and industrial centers get it out of their heads that there is any sweat-shopping in these country plants. There is no such thing as sweat-shopping there. There is no such thing as chiseling or oppression of labor. How do these plants run? There are five canning factories in the valley in which I live. They can peas, sweet corn, tomatoes, carrots, beets, spinach—yes, spinach—succotash, and lima beans. The plant that has run the longest over the past 10 years has averaged only 20 weeks a year, 20 weeks out of the 52. The average of the remaining four is only 14 or 13 weeks a year. There is no sweat-shopping about it. The conditions of labor are exceedingly healthy. Most of the work is done in open-sided sheds. The work is not heavy. Nearly all the heavy work is done by machinery. If you ever go through a vegetable-packing plant you will see that uncanny machinery does nearly all the work.

The time comes, however, when a crop becomes ripe. The sunshine has been bright and hot for a couple of days. The superintendent of the factory, who must be an expert on the condition of crops as well as an expert in the management of the plant, sends word to me, "WADSWORTH, we will have to have your peas cut and brought to the factory by day after tomorrow. They are getting ripe, and they must not go beyond day after tomorrow."

What do I do? I have to hustle. Perhaps I have to hire a couple of extra trucks. Those peas are mowed with a mowing machine and pitched green on the truck and hauled to the factory. Twenty to fifty other farmers get the same message. Obviously the factory cannot schedule them on a 40-hour week. It cannot be done. There are times, 2 or 3 days in a week, occasionally, when they have to go beyond the normal workday, and everybody in the factory understands it. They are all country people. They know that the sun and the wind and the rain are our masters. They make no complaint about working overtime. They rather welcome it, because they get more money in their 14 weeks' period of work. There is nothing oppressive about it. And it has to be done.

Would any opponent of the Barden bill insist that agriculture itself go on a 40-hour week? Think it over. Can anybody run a farm on a 40-hour week, doing no work at all on Saturday or Sunday and only 8 hours on the other 5 days? Let us not be silly. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI].

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, being a member of the Labor Committee since 1933, I have served with Billy Connery through the hearings on all the acts which have been enacted. The Labor Committee at that time, the same as today, at least certain members, feel the same way, that the act should not be amended. I realize that there are certain portions of that act which could be corrected, but with the attitude of the House what it has been shown to be just a little while ago, in cutting down the appropriations for enforcing this act, I personally cannot see any reason why we should not vote down not only the Barden amendments but all amendments.

The act itself has not had time to prove where the inequalities are. Industry, of course, wants the act to be emasculated, that is, certain portions of industry. They not only have not complied with the act but they have carried cases to the Supreme Court, and when they lost there they have still refused to comply with the act.

Only last Saturday, April 20, a headline in the Washington Times-Herald stated very plainly—

Brutality laid to Ford firm by N. L. R. B. aide—Union men beaten and threatened, he says.

The Washington Post, in a headline the same day, stated—

Ford chiefs fought unions, aide tells N. L. R. B., charging "brutality"—Examiner urges rehiring of two after Dallas hearing.

At the bottom of the article appear certain questions which were put to the attorneys of the Ford Motor Co. and some of the men who are in charge of the plant. They are as follows:

Question. What do you mean, "Gave them a working over"?
Answer. We would whip them; beat them up.
Question. With what?
Answer. Put the fear of God in them, as they put it.
Question. What would you whip them with?
Answer. Some with fists, some with blackjacks.
Question. Anything else?
Answer. One or two of them we whipped with a regular whip we had made out of rubber with cord and some of them—one of them—was whipped according to whether we thought he could take it or not, with brushes off of trees, limbs.

Then at the end of the article is a statement by the Ford attorneys.

Mr. Chairman, I happen to have the Ford motor plant in my district. I happen to know certain things about their service department. First, when this act was enacted, the Ford Co. organized a company union. That did not work out.

In answer to the attorneys from Dallas, Tex., who are defending the Ford Motor Co., I will state that when this act became law one of the first companies who refused to abide was the Ford Motor Co. They attempted to organize a company union, which, of course, the law forbids, and then they organized another union called the Liberty League, which was organized by Judge Leo Schaefer, who did all of the attorney work for this organization, under the direction of Harry Bennett, of the Ford Motor Co.

During the campaign last fall, when the judge was running for reelection, there were many rumors circulated that he organized the Liberty League, and where did the money disappear? It has also come out through the campaign that the money was handled by Harry Bennett's brother, and about $90,000 was supposed to have disappeared. This alone shows what the Ford Motor Co. has attempted to do as far as the act is concerned.

Harry Bennett heads the service department of the Ford Motor Co. and many of his service men are disbarred attorneys, convicts, and anyone who could be used to intimidate labor. These men are used to spy on the workers, and if any of them attend a political meeting which is not to the liking of the Ford Motor Co. or Mr. Bennett, they are discharged from their employment by merely being told that their department is being shut down and that they will be called back to work later, but they are never called back. They even go to the extent that if a man attended a labor meeting, they would immediately brand him a Communist, and if a man carried the name of Communist in the Ford Motor Co., he is unable to get a job anywhere else because the employment departments of other companies interchange their data on their employees.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, this is not the Wagner Act or the National Labor Relations Act, it is the Wage and Hour Act, and labor is not divided on this act. The American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. are against the Barden amendments to this act.

Before we begin to destroy the Wage and Hour Act let us forget about the leaders of our great labor organizations and think about the millions of wage earners in America. We jump on the poor American wage earner that makes 30 cents an hour. If you reduce these low-wage earners' pay 5 or 10 cents an hour, you will reduce farm income just that amount. It is impossible for him to buy many farm products at that wage scale.

It may not be consistent to have a wage and hour law when our American laboring men and farmers have to compete with cheap foreign labor. If I had my way, they would not have to compete with cheap foreign-made goods.

We lend millions to foreign countries to buy our goods. Most of these loans are never paid back. Why not spend some of these millions in solving the unemployment problem? We have from ten to twelve million unemployed today. At this rate, it will not be long until we will have fifteen or twenty million unemployed.

We should begin at the source of the unemployment problem. We should see that the youth of our land has the opportunity to become a skilled or semiskilled worker. This is one way to raise incomes which, in my estimation, is sound educational philosophy combined with economic sense.

Why jump on those poor workers who are only getting three square meals a day? Why not find a way to care for the other millions that are undernourished and ill-clad?

I would like to read you just one paragraph about the Norton amendments, which to my mind will take care of the agricultural situation. It sets forth in detail the operations in connection with the movement of agricultural and horticultural commodities from the farm, including their preparation for market, which are to be exempt from the hour provision of the act. This exemption is limited to 60 hours a workweek unless overtime compensation is paid except that for a period of 14 workweeks such hours exemption is complete and the 60-hour workweek limitation is inapplicable.

Indiana canners of fruits and vegetables would be placed at a serious disadvantage with respect to their competitors in Maryland, Virginia, and other States if the Barden bill should pass, as the canning industry in these States had a considerably lower wage scale prior to the Fair Labor Standards Act than prevailed in Indiana. It is to be expected that these substandard wage levels which prevailed prior to the act will be reestablished should this bill, granting complete exemption from the act's wage standards, became law.

Examples: Indiana canned tomatoes compete for a market with tomatoes canned in Maryland, Virginia, and Texas, and other States. Indiana cannery workers averaged more than 29 cents an hour in earnings in 1938 prior to the effective date of the act (October 24, 1938) as compared with 23 cents in Maryland, 17 cents in Virginia (1939) and 20 cents in Texas (1939). More than 92 percent of the Maryland tomato-cannery workers earned less than 30 cents an hour in 1938 as compared with 45 percent in Indiana.

Farm labor is exempt as long as the farmer engages in farming. The question here is whether a farmer is a farmer when he works in a canning factory or in an industrial concern. The strawberry farmer is exempt from the bush to the platform, and I would like to give my interpretation of "immediately off the farm." By "immediately off the farm," according to my opinion, is meant that the farmer would be allowed to cultivate and produce his goods and to pack them, take them to the packing plant, and, if a dozen farmers wanted to get together and pack the apples or pack the peaches or pack anything else, they would have that right under this law.

There is another question involved in all three bills, and that is the question of Puerto Rico. We grant a special exemption to Puerto Rico for wages and hours. Is it a discrimination between the farmers of Puerto Rico and the farmers of America?

Most of the canning people I have talked with are satisfied with the hour exemption, and they will stand for the wages.

The farmers in America today have to compete with W. P. A., which is on a higher scale than the Wage and Hour Act.

A situation that may come up in our district next year is this: Take a glass manufacturing concern, as an example, that works four 6-hour shifts, 7 days a week, making a total of 42 hours a week. That comes under the wage-hour provisions today, but next year if they change it back to 40 hours, there should be some leeway in the glass-manufacturing industry.

It is impossible to solve the farm problem by repealing the Wage and Hour Act. In my opinion, if you want to help the American farmers, you will preserve the American markets and let him alone and let him run his own business. [Applause.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad to hear the gentleman make that statement, but the way the laws are being administered today, our farmers are being compelled to compete with cheap foreign labor that does not have any wage and hour law and, consequently, our farmers are being destroyed when they are forced to operate under the laws that we have in this country. I believe the gentleman will also agree that in addition to that protection, if we can get it, we should see to it that they have laws under which they can live and successfully operate in this country.

Mr. LANDIS. I thank the gentleman for his observation. I also believe, to be consistent with the wage and hour law, we should have a tariff to protect the American employer and the American farmer and the American employee against 25 cents a day labor in Japan or other foreign countries. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, in the past 7 years, under the Roosevelt regime, many constructive, progressive, and humanitarian laws have come into existence. One of these is the Fair Labor Standards Act. I take great pride in the fact that I had the opportunity of being one of the members of the Labor Committee who reported the measure to the House for consideration. I was happy when I learned that President Roosevelt had signed this bill. I was happy because I knew that such an act would go far in abolishing child labor and sweatshops throughout our country. Ever since its enactment, efforts have been made to change the act in order to give many big corporations exemptions from the law—in other words, permit them to operate their factories at a slave wage. The minimum wage—30 cents an hour—which is now provided in the act for employees is, in my opinion, insufficient compensation, nevertheless it has laid a foundation on which a permanent structure can be built. Prior to the enactment of this law it was known that many industrial establishments throughout our Nation paid as low as 5 and 10 cents an hour to their employees. These conditions were outrageous, especially in a country like ours, where there is a great abundance of everything that is necessary to promote the welfare of mankind. I do hope that instead of exempting people from this act that we will be able to perfect it by increasing the wage scale to that point where every man and woman who is required to labor for a livelihood will obtain an adequate wage.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the Barden amendments.

They strike at the very heart of wage-hour legislation, which has for its purpose the setting of reasonable hours at reasonable wages in all industry.

The Barden amendments would strike out the working-hour limitations, and make it possible for an employer to work his employee any number of hours in a day without paying the overtime specified in our present wage-hour law. They would prevent that wider spread of work for which we are striving in all of our legislation.

Before coming to this session, I spoke with representatives of some of the large canning industries in my section.

In line with other enlightened employers, certain canners have worked out schedules so that they are able to operate on a 40-hour-week basis, except for a period less than 16 weeks each year, when they must work overtime in order to take care of perishable products. The present wage-hour legislation permits this necessary exemption.

As long as the wage-hour board sees fit to allow such necessary exemptions under the present act, together with present area of production regulations, these employers have nothing to gain by any such amendments as those proposed in the Barden bill.

The canners further advise that they have consistently paid higher wages than are required under the present wage-hour legislation. The minimum in one plant is 40 cents an hour. The average is 50 cents.

No matter what action is taken by Congress, these employers will not voluntarily go back to lower standards because they have proved to themselves that a fairly paid worker, laboring reasonable hours is a better investment than a poorly paid workman laboring excessive hours. They also have an interest in seeing that a maximum number of people in their communities are employed.

What the Barden amendments would do to all progressive and enlightened employers is easy to understand. It would place them in direct and ruinous competition with other less scrupulous canners in other sections who would have no hesitancy in taking every advantage of their exemptions from provisions of the Wage and Hour Act.

This is the situation in my district. It is much the same in regard to the entire State of Ohio.

The minimum wage rate required by the Wage and Hour Act is 30 cents an hour—while the act provides for the advance of this rate in 1945 to 40 cents an hour, there is no unconditional requirement that the higher rate be paid. It will not be required where the Administrator and industry committee find it to be burdensome.

In 1938 and 1939, the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor made a survey of the wage rates prevailing in the canning industry. The results of this survey which are set forth in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 2265, show conclusively that the passage of the Barden bill would place Ohio canners of fruits and vegetables at a disadvantage with respect to their competitors in other States, where, prior to the Wage and Hour Act, wages were lower than in Ohio.

For example, in 1938, prior to October 24, the effective date of the law, workers in Ohio tomato canneries earned an average of more than 41 cents an hour.

Workers in New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Iowa, Indiana, and Illinois averaged from 5 to 11 cents less than Ohio workers. And no Ohio worker in the tomato plants covered by the Women's Bureau survey earned less than 30 cents an hour.

Other important tomato-canning States which compete with Ohio are Virginia, Wisconsin, Texas, and Florida, where in 1939, when the 25-cent rate was in effect, the average wage of tomato cannery employees was 17 cents, 27 cents, 20 cents, and 22 cents, respectively.

More than 15,000 workers are employed in the canning industry in Ohio. Other important industries, employees of which would be exempt from the act under the Barden bill, are the beet-sugar industry, the dairy-products industry, the poultry handling and dressing industry, and the livestock handling industry.

The State of Ohio and other States which are paying decent wages should not be made to suffer the loss of business to low wage competitors in other States.

The fact that the average hourly wage for tomato-cannery workers in many States in 1939 was considerably less than the 25-cent rate which the law required at that time either shows that the law was not being properly enforced or that the area of production exemption as defined by the Administrator is already excluding too many workers from the benefits of the act.

The Barden bill adds further confusion and infinitely worse discrimination to this already beclouded field.

In paragraph (F) on page 5, it seeks to exempt all seasonal or perishable canning operations from both hours and wages, but the drafting is so awkward that it falls far short of doing so.

If the Barden bill were limited to the packing of perishable or seasonal commodities alone, it is my understanding that some 35 percent of all foods canned would still be subject to the law. This would include the so-called dry lines and fabricated products. It is this 35 percent which is not subject to the whims of nature, but whose packing can be controlled by the canner.

So the wording of paragraph (F) puts, roughly, half of the perishable canning in the exempt class and the other half in the nonexempt class. Such a result has no reasonable justification.

Wholly apart from the question of whether such exemption should or should not be afforded, I think all will agree that no exemption should be written which would be discriminatory in its effect. I am satisfied that to make the test of any proposed exemption dependent upon what is done in some other place, at some other time, is unwise and unfairly discriminatory.

To summarize, I believe that a bill which jeopardizes our aim of greater employment considerably hampers the efforts of those honest employers striving to realize this aim, and paves the way for uncontrolled discrimination in the matter of wages and hours is manifestly unjust to both employer and employee. I believe, Mr. Chairman, the Barden amendments should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, the administrative Division of the wage and hour bill should be given more discretion in the promulgation of rules and regulations to meet the many problems involved in the enforcement of such a measure. The purpose of this legislation is fundamentally sound, but it is impossible to measure every case and problem with one standard yardstick. I shall support the Barden amendments because I am convinced that certain activities which involve the farmer and his income and which are seasonal and apply to certain areas should be exempted from this act, or such discretion given the administrators as to allow rules and regulations to be made in reference to these activities which would prevent unjust and foolish requirements.

I shall briefly call your attention to one of these unjust requirements under the present construction of this law. A small merchant living near my home in North Carolina, who owns some pine forest and who wished to have same cut and corded for sale to a pulp mill, contracted with local labor to cut same for so much per cord. Some of his employees, who were much more diligent than others, cut and corded much more wood and, of course, he settled with them, paying for the amount of the cordwood cut. The Wage and Hour Administration sent its representative down to see this merchant and told him he was violating the law and that he should determine the time engaged in cutting this wood and pay his labor 30 cents per hour, and also check his invoices and charge these laborers no profit on merchandise they had bought at his store during the time they were engaged in the performance of this contract. In other words, that the merchant and landowner had no authority to contract with this labor for the performance of a duty, and was compelled to pay the worthless labor the same price that he paid the diligent labor, if he works the same period of time. I recall another instance where a landowner contracted with a small sawmill operator to cut some timber owned by the landowner at so much per 1,000 feet. It was cut and the landowner sold and delivered it to a planing mill in his vicinity and in the State of North Carolina. Whether it was transported out of the State of North Carolina there is no way to ascertain except that the planing mill often shipped its products in interstate commerce. It is contended, I am informed, by the administrators of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, that this landowner is equally liable for the wage hire of the laborers employed by the mill owner who cut this timber at the rate of 30 cents per hour and can be penalized if he fails to make good the schedule hour price under this law. Of course, this compels many hundreds of farmers, as well as small ground sawmill operators, to stop their operations and correspondingly many hundreds of willing laborers go upon the relief rolls.

The value of labor is determined not only by the time engaged but also by the result obtained. A competent laborer is worth much more than an incompetent one, and to attempt to standardize their pay by a work-hour only is unfair to a large percent of the labor as well as to the employer.

There should be vested in those who administer this act some discretion to meet and deal fairly with various circumstances which arise in our complicated industrial life. Those who are interested in the agricultural prosperity of this Nation have a right to demand that this industry should not always carry the financial burden which assures success for every other business. If you require that higher prices be paid to nonexpert and indifferent laborers who process our wheat, our corn, our dairy products, our tobacco and cotton, and various other agriculture products, then this cost is reflected in the diminution of the farmer's prices, and he alone pays the cost. I shall protest against this unfair and indefensible treatment as long as I remain in Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, the House is now engaged in the consideration of one of the most serious domestic questions which has come before the Congress during this session; namely, proposed amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act. The rule adopted for the consideration of this question permits action on three measures which seek to amend the so-called Wage and Hour Act. Under this unprecedented rule, one set of amendments, the so-called Barden bill, comes before us without ever having been acted upon by the standing committee of the House which has jurisdiction over such matters. It is to this bill that my remarks are addressed because I believe that its provisions are destructive of the basic principles of the wage and hour law. In addition to sweeping exemptions from the protection of the act, the Barden bill provides for changes in administrative procedure which would cripple the effective operation of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

In the self-assumed role of defenders of the "traditionally free American farmer," a logrolling combination of lumber operators, canning and packing interests, and dairy-product processors are seeking, through the Barden bill, to deprive over a million American workers of the protection of the wage and hour law.

It would appear from the broad contentions of the proponents of the Barden bill that an intolerable burden is imposed upon American industry by the wage and hour law. Let us consider what is roughly the sum total of the protection provided by this act to the American worker. The law provides for a minimum hourly wage of 30 cents and a maximum workweek of 42 hours. If the worker is employed for the full week, he is guaranteed that he must be paid a minimum of $12.60 for 42 hours of toil.

It is estimated that, under the Barden amendments, over a million workers will be deprived of the protection of the wage provision and over a million and a half workers will be denied the benefits of the hour provision. And let me point out, in this connection, that in most instances these processing workers do not enjoy year-round employment but only employment of a highly seasonal character, and in many cases the work is only of a few weeks' duration.

It should be noted that the law already specifically exempts agricultural workers from the terms of its provisions and the farmer is in no sense subject to the present law. However, I believe that the American farmer has a very vital interest in defeating the Barden amendments. Any loss of purchasing power by the masses of the American workers directly curtails the farmer's market for his products. The class of workers sought to be excluded by this bill spends, according to statistics and estimates, half of its pay in purchasing agricultural products and any loss in his income is immediately felt by the farmer whose products he can purchase in only reduced amounts. The farmer, therefore, stands to lose as much by this assault on the protection afforded by the Fair Labor Standards Act to his brother in the industrial plant as does the industrial worker himself.

The purpose and net result of these amendments will be to exclude from the protection of this law great masses of workers who are employed in the advanced stages of processing and preparing for markets agricultural products. These persons work in establishments that are essentially industrial in character. Their problems and conditions of employment are virtually in all respects equivalent to those of any other factory worker. Throughout these establishments run the conveyor belts and the assembly-line technique which is characteristic of modern industry and manufacture. In no substantial sense can these workers be considered as having anything to do with farms or with the actual process of farming. It is impossible to find any reasonable line of distinction between these workers and persons engaged in work on any other normal factory assembly line.

In the North Whittier Heights Citrus Association case (109 F. (2d) 76) the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit used the following language:

> When the product of the soil leaves the farmer, as such, and enters a factory for processing and marketing, it has entered upon the status of industry.

It would seem, therefore, that there is no sound and substantial reason for discriminating against these persons and denying them the safeguards of the act. On the contrary, it seems clear that they are the persons who are most in need of its protection; and I believe the real question involved in the Barden amendments resolves itself into this: Is $12.60 a week too much for over a million American families to subsist on?

Yesterday the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] occupied the floor for over an hour after the previous question on the rule had been voted down. He attempted to defend the extraordinary, unprecedented, and autocratic action of the Rules Committee in bringing a bill before this House for action which had not received full consideration by the proper committee and for which no rule had been asked by a vote of that committee. This arbitrary and arrogant usurpation of the functions and prerogatives of a standing committee of this House was motivated solely by the desire to effect emasculation and destruction of the wage and hour law. The gentleman—for whose ability I have the highest regard—injected into the debate a sectional issue, and stated, in effect, that established industrial sections have attempted, through legislation of this type, to stifle the industrial growth of the South. I cannot believe that the abolition of the sweatshop and starvation wages is a sectional question or that the people of the South are less concerned with the elimination of the evil than are the people of the rest of the Nation. Yesterday I asked the gentleman whether it was his contention that the development of industry in the South depends upon cheap wages and long hours. The gentleman replied:

> Well, I want to say to you that your sections of the country have certain advantages that make it impossible for us to compete with you on an absolutely even footing, and you are undertaking to take away from us the natural advantages that we have.

Mr. Chairman, since the Fair Labor Standards Act seeks only to abolish the exploitation of labor on starvation wages, unconscionably long hours of work, and sweatshop conditions of employment, it is fair to assume that these are the "natural advantages" to which the gentleman refers.

I cannot agree with the gentleman that the future of Southern industry—or of industry in any section of the Nation—is inextricably bound up with unconscionable labor standards. I am inclined to believe that the people of the South as well as the people of other sections of our Nation would class such conditions as a liability rather than an advantage—a blight rather than a benefit. Certainly such conditions cannot be considered as an advantage to the million or so employees who are sought to be denied the protection of this act by the proposed amendments. I doubt that the employers in the South who maintain decent standards consider sweatshop competition as an advantage. And it is difficult to see how any community benefits by an industry which is unwilling to pay its workers a wage sufficient to provide the barest means of subsistence. Certainly it cannot be said that a weekly wage of $12.60—which is the minimum wage established under the terms of this act—constitutes any more than the absolute minimum necessity to sustain life, if, in fact, it amounts to even that. It seems to me that an industrial establishment which is unwilling to pay the barest sort of living wage is a scourge to the community in which it locates—tending to pre-empt genuine progress and development in that community because it got there first.

New industries are developing in the South which will bear an important and integral relationship to our national economy. The industrial interests of the North, South, East, and West are not in conflict. Each of these sections enjoys certain natural advantages which will enable it to fill an industrial function which is complementary to those of other sections and not antagonistic to them. Sweatshop conditions, starvation wages, and labor exploitation have no rightful place in any section of this great Nation and constitute an evil which should not be tolerated by the people of our Nation.

It is generally recognized that the most serious defect in our national economy is in the failure of purchasing power to keep pace with the productive power of our Nation. This is one of the major causes of unemployment and was the principal cause of the disastrous economic collapse of 1929. There was no lack of ability to consume the products of industry and agriculture in this country, there is only an inability to buy those products. It is recognized that the primary need of American economy is a restoration of the power of the American people to purchase the products of the farm, mine, and factory. The problem of unemployment as well as all other economic problems hinge on this fundamental problem—restoration of the power of the people to purchase what they produce.

And yet these amendments run directly contrary to that need. Their direct result is to reduce the purchasing power of approximately a million persons now employed, persons whose wages go directly into the economic channels of our Nation because they are necessary to purchase indispensable products of the farm and the factory.

If this initial assault is successful, I believe that a full-fledged offensive will be launched on all fronts, having for its objective the complete destruction of the protection furnished by this act to American labor and to American purchasing power. This will be the beginning of a campaign to unleash again upon American industry the sweatshop, labor exploiter, and saboteur of purchasing power.

In the American market, the decent employer would be forced to meet the competition of the sweatshop and it is doubtful that he could do so without engaging in wage cutting. Any widespread wave of wage cutting would be disastrous to American industry, and I hope that it will not be the sense of this House to say to the American people that America is destined to go backward.

Mr. Chairman, the development and the future of America lies ahead and not behind. The greatness of America lies in her determination to develop and progress toward better things and toward a better and more abundant life for her people. No worse enemy to the future existence of American democracy exists than the extreme economic reactionaries—the bitter-end defenders of the practices which led up to the collapse of 1929. Even the most casual glance at contemporary history will demonstrate that democracies have tottered and been swept aside whenever they failed to keep pace with the changing needs of industrial civilization—whenever they have neglected to provide for the economic welfare of the masses of their peoples. Under the lash of economic need and distress, peoples have been lured by demagogic promises of economic security into surrendering their liberties to dictatorial systems of government. It was provided by the founding fathers in the preamble to the Constitution that our Government should provide for the general welfare of our people and on the faithful observance of this admonition rests the security and future of our democracy. The prevention of necessary reforms, the road back to the practices prevailing before 1929, is the road back to obsolescence and decay. History has not been kind to obsolete governments and economic systems and the scrap heap of history is strewn with their remains. [Applause.]

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is no more reasonable for those who oppose amendments to this act to charge those who offer amendments with seeking to strike down the $12.60 per week minimum or to charge them with being in favor of sweatshops than it would be for those of us who advocate amendments to charge that our opponents belong to the same class and were the same kind of people as are those labor racketeers, two of whom have recently been sent to jail.

Neither those who favor amendments to this act nor those who oppose all such amendments are getting anywhere by questioning the motives of the opposition. I do not know of anyone in this House who has advocated the theory that $12.60 per week was too much to pay for 1 week's labor. I do not know of anyone in this House who advocates the continuation of the sweatshop; yet every time an amendment is proposed to this law, those who propose it are forced to meet the unjust, the unfair, and the unreasonable charge, made by inference at least, that they are seeking to lower the minimum wage of $12.60 per week; that they are in favor of the sweatshop; that they believe in denying to labor a living wage.

If I understand the proposed amendments correctly, none is directed toward the lowering of the minimum wage; none is directed toward any provision that makes possible the sweatshop. All amendments to which I have given any consideration are supported with the idea of making the law workable; toward making it easier for the employer to pay a living wage; easier for the employee to earn a maximum; all are directed toward creating a more friendly relation between the man who receives the wage and the man who pays that wage.

One proposed amendment in particular would make it possible for an employee to take time off one day, or one week, and make it up the next without demanding that he be paid for time and a half for the overtime while making up for time lost a previous day or week.

Today the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] stated that he regretted that yesterday the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] had injected the issue of sectionalism into this discussion. I have no desire to have that issue brought in, but you cannot discuss this question without discussing the manner in which the law operates on all those who fall within its provisions. It is futile to take up and consider the law as it applies to only one class. The law in its operation affects the farmer as well as the industrial worker and it is pointless to ignore its effect upon the farmer. I would like to take up for a moment where the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] left off.

One of the purposes of this law was, of course, to increase the wage of the industrial worker. That was sought to be accomplished not so much by establishing a minimum wage as by the limitation of hours and the requirement of time and a half pay for overtime. Let us see now how it affects the farmer, and I recall the words of the gentleman who said that under the law a farmer was a farmer only when he was working on the farm. I believe the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] made that argument. He stated further that the farmer could not be a farmer when he was processing his products. The gentleman forgot, of course, that sometimes a farmer converts hogs into hams, shoulders and side meat into sausages, sowbelly into bacon, cabbage into sauerkraut, milk into cheese, and so on down the list.

Going back now to the argument of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN]. He told us about lettuce. Let me give you an illustration on how the apple grower becomes an industrial worker subject to the provisions of this law. Thirty years ago on land which my grandfather cleared from the forest I set out 1,500 apple trees. Every year those trees have been trimmed, they have been sprayed, and when necessary they have been cultivated and fertilized. For the last 10 years the men who did the trimming, who did the spraying, who did the picking and the packing, were paid more than the minimum wage and some years received in addition their living on the farm.

When those apples were picked and packed they went to the market. Those who handled the apples under the present ruling are industrial workers, although the farmer or his boy or the hired man drew them to market. I recall a season not very long ago when some of those apples went to the city of Detroit from which comes the gentleman who spoke a moment ago. Four hundred bushels of No. 1 apples, in baskets, went down there. They had been picked at my expense, they had been packed and were hauled to market. For the 400 bushels came back a check—and mind you they got my baskets too—a check for $5.55. That experience can be duplicated all along through the history of the farming occupation or industry, and I shall be glad to show any Member of the House the account of that farm where over a period of 10 years not one single dollar has gone to the owner but always there has been a loss. And we did not count out of the income anything for depreciation, or anything for insurance, or anything for interest on the investment.

Why is there no profit there? The moment the apples left the farm, what happened? They went into the hands of a truck driver to get them into the city of Detroit or to some other market, or into a packing house or a storage plant. You had to pay $50 membership in a union before your apples could roll along the highway. You had to pay dues and assessments before the fruit could be hauled over the highways, and when they got into the city of Detroit or the city of Chicago they had to be unloaded. Although the farmer or his boy was on the truck, they had to be unloaded by a union handler, and you had to pay the man who took them down there on that truck time and a half if he worked more than the hours prescribed by the bill. And the man in the packing plant or warehouse was drawing a wage several times greater than the return received by the owner of the farm or fruit, and if he worked overtime, then he received a wage and a half for overtime. So you see where the money went—the money that was finally paid to the farmer for the product was but a small percent of the selling price.

Once before I called your attention to a farmers' cooperative located in the little hamlet of Hamilton in my home county. They send to the Chicago market by truck what would amount to between two and four carloads of eggs every day. The trucks get down to Indiana and at New Buffalo, and they change drivers because of the length of the haul, yet it is not over 175 miles from Hamilton to the Chicago market. They operate two trucks. This means four drivers and means a union driver if you want to get into Chicago and union membership of $50 each, or $200 a year, with union dues of $5 per month each.

When the eggs get to Chicago they must be unloaded by a union man, they must be recandled, mark you, by a union candler, although they have passed State and Federal inspection the day before in Michigan, and the farmer must stand the cost of $1.10 an hour for the recandling, and he must pay for the transportation. And if the candlers or anyone connected with the marketing of his eggs works overtime he must pay time and a half no matter how much the man lays off during the preceding week, no matter how many days he is idle; if there is overtime in any one week it must be paid for at the rate of the usual wage plus one-half additional. Every man who touches those eggs from the time they leave the farmer's coop, or even while they are in the farmers' or cooperative packing house, receives a wage far in excess of the amount the farmer realizes for his toil and in addition to that, the overtime provision of the law applies to all those who handle the farmer's products and for that overtime he pays at the rate of time and a half.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If we were to exempt the class of labor the gentleman is now speaking about why should not those engaged in the transportation of these products from the farm to the market be likewise exempted as they participate in getting the products from the farm to the consumer?

Mr. HOFFMAN. My argument is that never by legislation are you going to equalize matters of this kind. Tell me, if you please, why the man who drives the truck to take the produce of the farm to market, the produce on which the farmer makes a wage of less than 10 cents an hour—every man who handles that produce from the day it leaves the farm until it is consumed—should receive 3, 4, 5, or 10 times the wage or return or compensation that the man who produces the food itself receives?

I can sympathize with the argument that the wage of the man in the factory or the industrial center should be raised; but until you fix the price that the farmer is to receive for his product, where is the justice in the legislation which, for example, in the motor industry in Detroit gives an average worker 90 cents per hour, while the farmer receives an actual cash return for his labor of no more than 10 cents per hour. You speak of increasing employment by shortening the hours and thus give more men jobs, though the total number of hours worked is no greater, but what about the farmer, who has no minimum working day, no minimum working week, whose hours are not and cannot be limited?

The argument that the farmer is benefited by paying a higher wage to the industrial worker as by so doing the purchasing power of the worker is increased and the farmer's market broadened and his price raised sounds well but it does not work out that way. If to the legislation which raised the wage and shortened the day and the week of the industrial worker you added a provision requiring him to spend his increased wage for farm products, there might be something logical in the argument. But when the increased wage goes for radios, shows, amusement, vacations, and things of like nature, all in themselves desirable perhaps, neither the price of corn, wheat, pork, beef, nor dairy products is raised nor are more consumed.

Not a man in this House but who knows that the wage of the average industrial worker is far greater than that of the average farm laborer; be he owner or hired man.

If by legislation, we are to increase the wage or the income of any one group then why not follow the process through to its logical conclusion and fix the minimum price of the farmer's products so that he, too, shall receive a minimum wage; work no more than maximum hours. If the industrial worker is to receive no less than 25 cents an hour, in many cases far more, and if he is to work no more than 40 hours a week or as some now demand, 30 hours per week, why not extend the law and say that no farm product shall be sold at a price less than will give to its producer, the farmer, a wage of not less than 25 cents per hour, based on a working week of 40 hours?

Under such a procedure, what do you figure the price of butter, milk, meat, or bread would be? Is there any logical reason why because a man works in a factory where he is protected from heat, from cold, where he has sanitary surroundings, where provisions are made to protect him from dirt and industrial hazards, and where he receives an average wage, let us say, of 50 cents per hour, the farmer, who works through winter's cold and summer's heat—out in the rain, the sleet, and the snow—who follows the plow or the harrow through the dust and the dirt, not 6 hours a day, not 8 hours a day, 5 or 5½ days a week, but 6 days a week; who does his chores not during 30 hours a week, nor 5 or 6 days a week, but through 7 days a week—why he should not receive a minimum wage and work no more than a maximum of 40 hours per week?

Yes; let us do away with sectionalism and, if we cannot treat the man in the country who earns his bread in the "sweat of his face" as we do the man who lives in the city, let us at least remedy those unfair provisions of this legislation which have to do with time and a half, which compel the payment of a wage and a half for any hours worked over a certain number. Shorten the hours which a man may work, if you wish, but do not under the guise of shortening the workweek permit him to work more than the 40 hours per week and then compel his employer to increase his wages by half for all the overtime and at the same time deny a like wage to the man who toils just as hard and just as faithfully on the farm. Let us label the bill, if we want to be candid, as a bill to increase wages and not pretend that it is one to shorten the hours and let us extend the benefit of the act to every man who works, if that be the purpose of the law. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE] such time as he may desire.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I do not share the opinion of some that either of the proposed amendments will materially affect the wage and hour law, as applied to industry. The Norton and Barden amendments apply primarily to agriculture and both attempt to clarify the "area of production" as defined by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor.

Practically everyone agrees that the definition limiting the area of production to a 10-mile radius is wholly unwarranted and the law should be amended to clarify this matter. The Administrator, Colonel Fleming, testified before the subcommittee on appropriations for the Department of Labor that it would be a great relief to him if Congress would make some amendments clarifying the law. The proposed amendments would apply particularly to small canning factories, small sawmills, and so forth. They make no reference whatever to textile or other industrial enterprises, and they will not be affected should either of the amendments be passed.

The theory upon which this legislation was predicated was to protect the health of employees in industrial plants, eliminate what is known as the sweatshops, prevent unfair and unjust competition among employers, and provide for a living wage in industry. Congress did not include agricultural labor in the law and did not intend to make the law applicable to those small activities closely associated or directly connected with agriculture, and so stated in the act, but in an effort to give the Administrator some authority to make rules and regulations for the enforcement of the act, it apparently gave him legislative authority which has made a crazy quilt out of the affair as it relates to various rural activities or those directly connected with agriculture. The amendments before us are for the purpose of correcting some of the difficulties found in an effort to administer the law with reference to these small rural activities; as I understand, they do not really amend the law; they simply restate the law and attempt to make clear, definite, and certain what Congress intended to do at the beginning. However, this problem could have been solved much easier by exempting all these rural activities engaged in handling farm products where the number of persons employed therein is 25 or less, because the working conditions there do not impair the health of anyone, there are no sweatshops in these small plants, there is no unfair competition or chiselers to amount to anything, and there is nothing fundamental to be gained by their inclusion.

Everybody admits that the Administrator's interpretation of the law as applied to the "area of production" has caused a number of small plants engaged in handling and processing perishable farm crops to go out of business and to that extent has reduced employment, both in the plants and on the farms where the crops were formerly grown. I have no particular preference between the Barden and Norton amendments, but I see no reason why one or the other should not be passed and thereby afford employment to those formerly employed in these plants, and the farmers in the vicinity thereof be justified to again begin the production of those crops usually processed locally, such as beans, peas, strawberries, asparagus, and so forth. There is also a provision in each of the amendments that will give some relief to the small saw-mill operators and it is hoped they will be able to renew their activities and furnish added employment.

It has been argued here today that to adopt either of the amendments will emasculate the law. Such an argument is absurd for, in my opinion, with some few amendments the law is here to stay. However, like other new and untried legislation, clarifying and perfecting amendments will necessarily follow from time to time to meet changing conditions and promote the interest of those involved.

I have in my congressional district between 35 and 40 cotton mills, a few garment factories, and a small number of hosiery mills. About one-third of the population is represented in these industrial activities and a little more than one-half in agriculture. So far a great many of the people interested in the textile business have been agreeably surprised at the successful operation of the law as applied to this particular industry. It has removed much of the unfair competition that formerly existed between employers over widely distributed areas and has in a measure been of considerable benefit to the average employee. The cotton mill business, if reports are correct, is more active today than any time in history. Most of the complaints have come from the small saw-mill operators and those rural activities engaged in handling and processing farm crops. It is true, there has been some complaint on the part of employers and employees in the application of the law to beginners and learners in industrial plants, but sincere and honest efforts on the part of those charged with the administration of the law should result in a satisfactory solution of this problem. However, there is a problem which commands the most profound and careful consideration of all interested parties, especially in large industrial plants where it is relatively easy to substitute machine power for man labor. It is not only important from the standpoint of the physical welfare of the employee but becomes a vital factor in the solution of the unemployment problem.

When industry installs new and high-geared machinery in a plant where one person is required to do the work of two and the other laid off, the economist refers to such a situation as "technological unemployment," but the employee calls it the "stretch out" system. This is the greatest unsolved problem in industry today. It is not a new problem and, although it may be accentuated thereby, it cannot be charged primarily to the operation of the Fair Labor Standards Act, because it has been a growing problem for the past quarter of a century and, in my judgment, will be an ever-increasing problem until some definite voluntary or legislative action is taken looking toward its solution. It is a problem to which I have given most careful and thoughtful study for the past 15 or 20 years, and it is a matter which probably should have been taken into account when the original act was being considered.

I do not know that I have a perfect or even a workable formula, but it is my thought and prediction that the next outstanding amendment to the existing law will provide that when any employer subject to section 6 of the Fair Labor Standards Act employs as many as 50 or more persons, it will be unlawful for such employer to diminish the number of his employees or the hours thereof as a result of the installation of new and improved mechanical equipment, except where a reduction of hours will not operate in a reduction of the daily or weekly wages of such employees, and it is my further impression that when such an amendment is presented it will carry a provision requiring that upon the installation of such equipment the wages of the operators thereof shall be increased in proportion to their contributions to the added market value of the increased output resulting from such installation.

I have some doubt whether such an amendment would be germane to either of the amendments now before Congress for consideration, and a point of order would, therefore, lie against it, but I want to make the suggestion as a matter of record so that employers and employees may give careful study and consideration to the matter in the hope that an amendment satisfactory to all interested parties may be agreed upon or, if possible, a solution may be reached without further legislation.

I do not share the idea of some that the practice of installing new machinery is primarily for the purpose of exploiting labor, although the result may be the same. On the contrary, the practice can be attributed to the inventive genius of the modern mind and the desire of efficient business to increase production and at the same time decrease the cost per unit by mass production. This is not only true in industry but it is also true in agriculture, the blacksmith shop, and other activities. However, there is one difference in practical application. For example, when a farmer buys a tractor or grain drill he does it with the idea of increasing production and decreasing the labor load. In industry there is generally increased production or a better product, but invariably the labor load is increased, the principal criticism being that the wage of the employee is not increased in proportion to his contribution to the increased value of the finished product.

If there had been efficient planning boards for the past 25 years, there is little doubt but what plants would have been sufficiently enlarged to take care of all employees where modern machinery has been installed, the wages of employees would have increased in accordance with their contributions to the value of the finished product, and such amendment would not have become necessary.

Of course, we all recognize the continued possibility of further inventions and a continued practice or policy of installing such machinery or equipment with the idea of increasing production with a decreased production cost per unit. This is a natural and logical economic policy in any highly competitive industry such as found in the textile business. However, the interest of the employee should not be ignored and the purpose of such an amendment is not to prevent the use and installation of new and improved machinery but to see that the employee, who has spent years and years in developing his technical skill, is not thrown out of employment and required to seek work in other fields or activities. On the contrary, this amendment has for its primary purpose the retention of such employees because, by reason of their highly developed and technical training, they should be retained in order that they may not only capitalize on their experience but that business itself may not lose their efficient capacity for increased production. It is as much to the interest of industry and the economic welfare of the Nation to retain those who have developed a capable and efficient technique after years of training and experience as it is to install new and improved machinery.

It will be observed that this suggested amendment does not in any way penalize the employer by preventing the installation and use of improved mechanical equipment, but only provides that in case such equipment is installed there should be a sufficient increase in the plant to prevent or obviate the necessity of reducing employment. We can see the possibility of machinery becoming so proficient that an employee by reason of his increased experience and skill will be able to increase his daily output of production with a possible decrease of effort. However, if the theory on which the law is predicated or based proves to be successful in every way, both to employer and employee, the practice provided for in this amendment should be followed, whether it be voluntary or in response to law.

The suggested amendment provides further that in case new and improved equipment should be installed and as a result thereof the employee should be able to increase his daily output of production, then it is only fair that he should have his proportionate share of the added value of such increased production, and his wages should be increased accordingly.

In other words, this amendment provides that if an enterprise feels that it can economically purchase and install improved machinery it should enlarge its activities or business sufficiently to obviate the necessity of reducing the number of employees and thereby take care of the people who have developed a high degree of proficiency in their work. Furthermore, if by the installation of such mechanical equipment, the output of production per employee is increased, his earning capacity or productive power has necessarily increased, and he should be compensated proportionately. That is, his wage should be increased in proportion to his earning capacity or productive power. This is reasonable, fair, and just, and legislation should not be necessary, but in order to obviate the possibility of one or more enterprises failing to follow such a practice and thereby being able to unfairly compete with other employers, we feel the policy should be made applicable to all alike, and for this reason I have suggested this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico [Mr. PAGÁN].

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Chairman, I arise to support the bill under consideration, as it refers to the amendment applicable to Puerto Rico. I regret that in the time allotted to me I am unable to bring before the House the peculiar conditions of Puerto Rico. First, I shall state that I myself am a labor man. I stand for labor, and, in fact, I have devoted about 20 years of public life in my island struggling and fighting for the common people, for a fair deal to labor, endeavoring for higher standards of living and welfare for the workingmen. We would feel happy if all our laborers could earn wages averaging $1 or more per hour, but under the circumstances, considering the deplorable conditions of Puerto Rico, its unemployment and poverty, we support the amendment to the Federal wage and hour law.

In the consideration of amendments to the wage and hour law Congress should have in mind the peculiar conditions of Puerto Rico as compared with conditions in the mainland United States.

Puerto Rico is a very thickly populated country; in fact, the most densely populated area in the whole United States and one of the most thickly populated countries anywhere in the world. A small island covering an area of only 3,600 square miles, has a population of nearly 2,000,000 inhabitants. Only very highly industrialized countries, as Belgium or England, have so crowded a percentage of inhabitants per square mile.

And Puerto Rico is essentially and predominantly agricultural. Of the 2,000,000 total acreage of land, only about 800,000 acres are practically cropland suitable for agriculture. We are very scarce in raw materials, and have no timber, nor petroleum, iron, or any minerals producing income for the island and employment for the people. Unemployment in Pureto Rico is our main problem, is chronic, is practically a plague. According to official statistics, over 400,000 workers are now unemployed.

The main crop and source of income and employment is sugar. Even sugar, in agriculture in the cane fields and manufacture in the factories, is seasonal, providing work for the people only during a few months in the year.

Due to the sugar-control program of the present administration, which fixed to Puerto Rico a standing quota for production of sugarcane and sugar, about 100,000 workers who usually earned their living in the sugar industry are idle. And over 50,000 more would be affected in their jobs by the enforcement of the present wage and hour law, which practically would force the sugar industry to bring in labor-saving devices, putting many people out of work.

Our major and nonagricultural industry in late years has been needlework and embroidery, to which industry the present wage and hour law has affected mainly. This industry employed about 70,000 workers. The wage and hour law had put away from their jobs about 45,000 workers, who are now really starving. This needlework industry of Puerto Rico is really peculiar. It can be said it is foreign, as compared with industries in continental United States, because the competition to our needlework industry comes from foreign countries, all or most of them under lower standards of living and paying very low wages. If the wages for the industry are so that they do not attract manufacturers, they simply go out and give income and employment to people of foreign countries. Our competition is foreign labor. The wages for our workers in the needlework industry depend on the selling price of similar goods imported into the United States. This factor, in fact, has limited the growth and expansion of our needlework industry.

Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, as Administrator of the National Recovery Administration, studying the peculiar conditions of our needlework industry, made a striking report, which, in part, reads as follows:

> The selling price of products are not regulated by mainland prices alone; buyers in an effort to obtain attractive products have opened to them factories of other countries. * * * If the prices of Puerto Rican products are raised excessively, it well may be that buyers will quickly be driven to the factories of other nations for source of supply. * * * In the meantime, manufacturers in the Philippines and China suffer no such handicap and are profiting at the expense of Puerto Rican labor.

Due to certain trade agreements of the United States with foreign countries, goods of this needlework industry, in competition with our industry, have been imported into the United States from foreign countries and sold at similar prices, paying wages which figured between 3 and 4 cents per hour. With this foreign industry we have to compete.

Taking in consideration these factors, especially the competition with foreign industry under low wage scales, and considering the grave problem of unemployment in Puerto Rico, we have been favoring any amendment similar to that contained in Mrs. NORTON'S bill, adequate and convenient for conditions in Puerto Rico. Supporting it, I close my remarks by reproducing the report rendered last year accompanying said bill—H. R. 5435—which in part reads as follows:

> Industries in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands now operate under many economic disadvantages not common in the United States. Per unit costs of production aside from labor tend to be high because of lack of raw materials essential to manufacturing industries, management difficulties, and the great expense of plan construction and mechanization due to distance from centers of equipment production. Conclusive evidence that such economic disadvantages do exist in these islands is found in the fact that their wage rates, which are substantially lower than those in the United States, do not attract industries from the United States to any appreciable extent. It is believed that the application to the islands of the inflexible minimum-wage rates prescribed by the act will cause serious dislocation in some insular industries and curtail employment opportunities. The object of this amendment is to fix wage rates for these islands which are high enough to discourage migration of business from the United States but which are low enough to encourage industrial development opportunities in the islands.

We favor the amendment to the wage and hour law referring to Puerto Rico, because we hope that the industry committees to be appointed pursuant to the law will fix proper and fair wages according with the conditions of Puerto Rico and because we want to see our people working better than seeing them starving or depending on relief from taxpayers of continental United States.

The working people of Puerto Rico want to stand on their feet, they want work from industries that under our peculiar conditions may be able to pay living salaries, which could fairly be fixed by the industry committees provided for in the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, when this law was enacted, the Congress very clearly intended to exempt certain agricultural labor. I read the entire discussion that occurred on the floor of the House when this bill was enacted into law and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Bierman, which the House adopted, very clearly reflected the attitude of the House and its intent to exempt certain phases of agriculture from the operations of the wage-hour law; but when the bill came back to the House after conference with the Senate there appeared, apparently for the first time, rather strange words, "area of production." If you have not taken the time to do so, it might be worth while to look at section 213 of the Code, which contains the exemption. In section 213 of the Code any employee engaged in agriculture is clearly exempt. There also was an attempt to exempt from the act any individual employed within the area of production as defined by the Administrator engaged in the handling, packing, storing, and so forth, of agricultural products.

The difficulty rose when the Administrator attempted to interpret the words "area of production" and to define them. As indicated by the distinguished gentleman from New York this afternoon, both the Administrator and his Department got into difficulty when they adopted varying and variable interpretations as to what was meant by "area of production." They attempted to exempt by the definition last adopted by the Administrator those processors of agricultural products located in communities not exceeding 2,500 in population who secured their raw material from an area not exceeding 10 miles around that plant.

This meant that a plant in a town of 2,500 population was not subject to either the hour or the wage provisions of the law, provided he got his raw material from an area not to exceed 10 miles; but a town of 2,600 population, located 3 miles away, was subject to the provisions of the law.

A further attempt to define the area of production appeared in a regulation adopted by the Administrator when he said that a processing plant processing agricultural products located in a town, city, or village of over 2,500 and employing less than 7 people was not subject to the act, provided it employed 7 or less people. A situation rose which I called to the attention of the general counsel of the Wage and Hour Division, Mr. McNulty, when he appeared before our committee, wherein a processor of agricultural products located in a city of 20,000 is processing milk, which is shipped in interstate commerce. He employs less than seven people. Is he subject to the act or is he not?

The gentleman answered me by saying in substance that first he would have to know whether he got his raw material from the general vicinity, because that is the language of the regulation. I asked him to tell me what facts would be necessary in order to determine whether this man got his raw material from the general vicinity. I understand what "general vicinity" ordinarily means, but what does it mean as interpreted by the general counsel for the Wage and Hour Division? This man was processing milk. He had to get his milk under contract from farmers wherever he could get it. Right next door to him was a processing plant employing less than seven people making ice-cream mix and this concern was fortunate enough to contract with farmers immediately adjacent to that city. The latter plant is within the definition "area of production" and is not subject to the act. The other plant operated in such a manner that it had to go out 20 miles to get the milk and bring it into the factory. That plant is subject to the act because it does not get its raw material from the general vicinity of the city or town in which located.

If they make an analysis of the situation as applied, I think you will concede both Mme. Perkins and the Administrator, Colonel Fleming, when they appeared before our committee, very definitely and clearly indicated by their testimony the necessity for some change in this act to make it workable so that the inequalities and injustices which they both admitted existed from one end of this country to the other could be wiped out and justice done, especially to the farmers; but their contention was and the contention of those who oppose any amendment or change in this act was that it could be done possibly by regulation and there should be no attempt to change the basic language of the act itself.

Mr. Chairman, we in Wisconsin have waited in vain, with plant after plant closing down, for some change in these regulations that would enable people engaged in the canning business and canning the same product and engaged in a competitive field to be placed upon the same competitive basis. May I say that it seems to me some questions ought to be very clearly answered by the members of this committee before we pass final judgment upon any of the proposed amendments.

I have listened this afternoon to all the discussion and it seems to me most of it is for home consumption, that most of it is a lot of bombastic talk that does not get right down to these bills and explain any of the amendments, but is intended as a eulogy to labor and making a demagogic appeal for the support of those who labor.

Let me ask the members of the committee some questions first, so that I may understand. May I ask that you turn to page 11 of the Norton amendment, subsection 1, which reads: "No employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a)" and so forth "making of dairy products (except ice-cream mix, ice cream, malted milk, and processed cheese) including among other things, the cooling, pasteurizing, printing, or packing thereof."

Do you intend if the Norton bill is passed to exempt those canning factories that are engaged in the processing of milk, that are manufacturing condensed milk, powdered milk, casein, and other dairy products which are not listed in the exemptions stated in that subparagraph? May I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] if I am correct in saying that if this law passes, a plant any place in the State of Wisconsin, regardless of the number of people whom it employs, that is engaged in the processing of milk, dry milk, or condensed milk, is not subject to this act except as it may be generally subject to it if these exemptions do not apply to it?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is asking me a question. The answer is that they will be subject to the wage provisions.

Mr. KEEFE. To the wage provisions.

Mr. RAMSPECK. They will have a 60-hour week all the year around, and for 14 weeks they have no limitation on hours. That is the provision of the Norton bill.

Mr. KEEFE. In other words, if I understand the gentleman's answer, a plant such as I have described, if the Norton bill passes, will be able to work its employees 60 hours a week without paying time and a half overtime?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. And you intend that that should be?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. You intend that the plants of the Borden Co. and all the big processors of milk that are engaged in the business of making skimmed milk and powdered milk and condensed milk shall be able to work their employees 60 hours a week, provided they pay the minimum?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct. May I say to the gentleman that the evidence before the committee was that all these larger plants are unionized.

Mr. KEEFE. That is exactly right.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That will take care of the situation, and the little plants will be able to have longer hours. What we are trying to do here is to get away from the difficulties of the area of production which the gentleman from Wisconsin has so ably pointed out.

Mr. KEEFE. I wish to say that I regret that I cannot go through this bill and ask some very pertinent questions in the debate before we get through, so that we will have in the RECORD and know and understand exactly what this bill means, because up to date no one has attempted to do that. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has joined a few more of us who have been trying to secure the passage of a bill in this House providing for cost of production for farmers.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard from gentlemen who profess to speak for the farmers of the country. We shall probably hear more from them.

Since when, may I ask, have these gentlemen discovered that there is a community of interest between the farmer and the big Chicago packing plants, or between the farmers and the great grain elevator operators in Minneapolis and Chicago? Since when has the startling discovery been made that the welfare of the farmer depends upon bigger profits for the railroads, the lumber barons, the big canners, and all that host of middlemen the real farmers of this country have been battling as long as I can remember? I would like to see you try to convince the farmers out in my State that their welfare depends upon bigger and better profits for Armour & Co.

I was born on a farm and brought up on a farm. I think I know the real interests of the farmers quite as well as some of their surprisingly recent new-found friends. The farmers and the industrial workers and small-business men of the Second Montana District sent me here. And I feel that I never have so adequately represented them as I do now in protesting against this attempt to emasculate the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The farmer and the industrial worker! There, gentlemen of the Congress, is your real community of interest. To whom does the farmer look for a market for his produce? Why, to the industrial workers of the country, of course. They are not going to sell any more meat and potatoes and bread and butter to the Armours and the Cudahys and the directors of the railroads. Those gentleman are getting enough to eat, anyway, and they could not hold any more even if we did sweeten up their profits at the expense of labor.

If we are going to sell more meat and wheat and other foodstuffs, we have got to find some way to get them into the hands of the millions of industrial workers who are half clad and half fed. They are the people who want and need more butter and eggs, more wool clothing, more of everything the farmer produces. But you cannot sell to people who have not got jobs or who, even if they have got jobs, do not get enough in wages to buy anything more than the most meager necessities of life.

There are millions of people in this country who do not get enough to eat. Millions, with incomes of less than $500 a year, are spending only about 5 cents per person per meal on food. In the name of Christian charity, let me ask you what is going to happen to our American democracy if we close our eyes to this injustice? Ex-President Hoover has been asking us to come to the aid of the suffering Finns. I am in favor of helping the suffering Finns; but I still think charity begins at home. If we want to be charitable, we do not need to stretch our arms and our hands, extending food to the suffering, a distance of 3,000 miles.

Let me tell you another thing: The help provided by Government for the farmers of this country—and we have appropriated billions—could not have been granted had not the urban Congressmen, representing the industrial workers, voted for it. Whenever we have asked anything for the benefit of the farmers, our city brethren have stood shoulder to shoulder with us. It comes with mighty poor grace if now that we are asked to extend just a little measure of protection to the city worker, we who speak for the farmers turn against him. The city industrial worker is not asking us to vote him a subsidy of a billion dollars; all he is asking is a minimum wage of just 30 cents an hour. Thirty cents an hour! Think of it! Thirty cents an hour, out of which to pay the rent, buy the food and clothing, pay the streetcar fare, and meet the doctor's bill. And yet they tell us that is too much for the head of an American family. Let me ask the Members of this House, who are advocating the mutilation—if you please—of the wage and hour law, what they would say if they were asked to feed themselves and their dependents on 5 cents a meal per person. Let such a thing as that be proposed, and hell would be to pay.

The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] and Mr. HOPE, of Kansas, made the statement that many farmers live on much less than 30 cents per hour. In this statement they are technically correct. Many, many farmers do not receive in cash 30 cents per hour for their labor, or anywhere near that sum, but the difference is that the farmers produce, as a rule, their vegetables, milk, butter, and meat and have a place in which to live, which constitutes a large share of the farmer's living. If he were required to buy these products, and pay rent for his house, he could not make a go of it at all. The industrial worker, on the other hand, is required, as before stated, to buy all of his food, his clothing, and pay for a place to live in, as well as other incidental expenses, such as light, water, heat, and so forth. We must not get these two problems confused.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I am sorry, I have only a few minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I suggest that the gentleman yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the lady.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I simply wanted to tell the gentleman that the thing on the farm that is raising and raising is the mortgage every year.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let me call the attention of the gentlewoman to the fact that the farmer was being kicked out of his home in the spring of 1933 by mortgageholders, but today he still has his farm even though there is a mortgage on it. There is the difference. He would not have anything left if it were not for what has been done for him during the last 7 years.

Mr. KNUTSON. Politics, politics.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I also wish to add to this point and to emphasize that the farmer's income for the year of 1939 was higher than it was in 1938. This was during a period of time when this law was in operation. I am not saying that its administration has been 100 percent, but even though the law may not be perfect, a liberal interpretation by the administrators of a law is always desirable and can take care of many imperfections and defects.

The city worker, through his representatives, has stood loyally by the farmer. How much longer do you think he will continue to stand by in the farmer's time of need if the farmer's representative now throws him to the wolves to be exploited any number of hours at the lowest pittance the most greedy employer is willing to pay?

We hear a lot of talk these days about the dangers of communism. We don't want communism or any other "ism" except Americanism. But remember, Members of the House, that millions of innocent people who are undernourished, half-clad, wretchedly housed, are not going to suffer forever in silent patience while they are ground to lower and still lower levels. They are not going to cling for long to the theory of democracy if it does not work and if its benefits are denied them.

Yet, they say, the farmer somehow is going to be benefited if we deny the workingman protection in his wage or in his hours of work. How benefited? Well, let us see what this Barden bill really does. Let us turn to lines 21 to 23, inclusive, on page 4. Here it is provided that the preparation of products and livestock, when done "at the packing plant," shall have a complete hours exemption for 16 workweeks in the year. All right, that means that Swift & Co., Armour, and Cudahy may work their employees an unlimited number of hours without paying a cent for overtime 16 workweeks in the year, even when they are engaged in the manufacture of glue, fertilizer, oleomargarine (which competes directly with the dairy), sausages, or in tanning hides, or while engaged in working on any of the byproducts that come from the slaughterhouse. That takes care of the big packers, all right, but just what does the farmer get out of that? And how about the industrial citizen? He has a plant over in the next county manufacturing glue, fertilizer, and so on, from livestock products in competition with the big meat packers, but he does not get any exemption—not under this Barden bill. He does not get any exemption because he does not operate a meat-packing plant. He has to keep right on paying his employees not less than 30 cents an hour, plus time and a half for overtime for all hours worked beyond 42 a week. You let out the big fellow and penalize the little man. In heaven's name, where is the logic—not to say justice—of that?

Then again, section 5 (b) of the Barden bill—lines 12 through 24 on page 7—would give exemption to such a gigantic corporation as the Kraft Co. from both wages and hours when manufacturing cheese and other dairy products made from milk. The Kraft plants are situated in the big cities, such as Chicago and New York, and they employ thousands of workers, many of whom probably never saw a farm. If you reduce the wages of these people, how do you expect that the farmer is going to sell them more butter and eggs and milk, or anything else? It cannot be done. Again, the production of casein, which is used to manufacture synthetic buttons and the like, also is exempt under this provision from both minimum wages and maximum hours. But the fellow who is manufacturing buttons from some other material is not exempt. How are you going to justify that sort of discrimination? How is that going to help the farmer? If not, is it going to help the worker?

Let us move on to page 8, lines 3 through 5. Here an exemption from both wages and hours is granted to the compressors of cotton. You and I know that the machinery for compressing costs a lot of money and that these compressors employ a lot of people. They are situated at the big shipping centers like Savannah, Atlanta, and New Orleans. Once more, the people who are denied the benefits of the act are not farmers or farm laborers. They are city industrial workers, and it is proposed to knock down their buying power so they cannot buy the farmer's produce. I do not believe there is a compressor in the United States so small as to employ less than 100 people.

Then take pages 7, 8, 9, and 10, and the first half of page 11. Read that over and what do you find? Here is a measure to deprive employees engaged in handling and transporting from the protection of minimum wages and maximum hours—both of them. This does not mean the transporting the farmer does when he steps on the starter or hitches up his mule to drive to town with a load of potatoes or corn. The farmer's transportation already is exempt in the law. Any hauling that he does, or his hired man does, is not touched. Here is an exemption for the employees of the railroads—and the big trucking companies. What this part of the bill means is that if a railroad or trucker is transporting any of these products—such as casein, butter, cream, cotton, sugarcane, maple sirup, any kind of nuts—I am speaking of the edible type—sirups or canning fruit or vegetables, all the employees of the railroad or trucking company are deprived of the protection of the law. I have not included a tenth of the products the transportation of which would render these railroads untouchable. Virtually every train and truck carries some of these things, and the scheme here is simply to bar from protection all railroad employees engaged in operating trains.

This thing gets worse and worse the more you study it. Let us go back for a moment to page 8, lines 21 through 24 at the top of page 9. Here is an exemption for employees engaged in canning fruit and vegetables if in the same calendar year the employer does not engage in any recanning operations or does not can any nonperishables. The effect here is to discriminate against about 500 canneries in the country which can both perishables and nonperishables. In other words, if we approve this, we say to the fellow who operates a canning factory just a few weeks in the year, all right, we will give you as a premium the right to pay starvation wages. But to the conscientious fellow who tries ingeniously to keep his people employed on a year-round basis so that they are able to keep off relief and become better customers for the farmer, we say, We will penalize you; we will fix it so the wage cutter can take your business away from you. How is that going to help the farmer? Who can it possibly help but the fly-by-night canning operator? Does anybody dare tell me it is going to help the worker?

I am not through yet. I could go on for hours, but at least there are two or three more other things that I want to mention. Now, back to page 3—lines 24 to 25 on that page—and then over to page 4, lines 1 and 2. Here it is provided that a wholesaler of fresh fruits and vegetables may work his employees up to 56 hours a week without paying them a penny for the overtime. But, on the other hand, the small wholesaler of canned, dried, and nonperishable food products must pay time and a half for all time worked in excess of 42 hours. Nonperishable products were at some time perishable products, which, in order to convert them into nonperishable products, required time and work. Why this discrimination?

On page 7, and running through to the middle of page 11, we find a complete exemption from both minimum wages and maximum hours for all warehouses, regardless of size, in cities of less than 150,000 population, while handling products listed in section 5 (b). Note that term "local storing." It is defined in lines 12 to 14 on page 11 to include all storing outside of "terminal markets" as defined in section 7 (c). The definition is on page 5, lines 9 to 17.

Now we come to a real atrocity. Page 14, lines 13 through 19. Here is perhaps the final death blow to this legislation which the Congress enacted to bring at least a small amount of protection to the helpless working people of this country. Here is a proposal to apply a 6-month statute of limitations to employees' suits for the recovery of their unpaid legal wages. As you know, State statutes of limitation already apply to such claims, and they usually run from 3 to 10 years, depending upon the State. The statute of limitations for real-property suits is 20 years. The philosophy of the Barden amendment is that where an employer is withholding from his employee the wages that lawfully belong to him, and in addition is violating a Federal statute, the period within which redress may be sought is 6 months—just 24 weeks.

Not only that, but the statute of limitations starts running when the violation occurred, irrespective of when it was discovered. One of the purposes of granting the right of private suit was to make wage and hour law self-executing, and reduce the cost of administration. Everybody knows that this provision of the law is having a highly salutary effect in bringing about compliance. Suits for back wages totaling close to $10,000,000 are now pending in the courts. And yet we are asked to let off scot free the employer, who may have been violating the law for years—except for the last 6 months of the cheating.

I will say that my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], whom I regard as standing on a high pinnacle in this House, as a lawyer, would not stand for such language in any bill limiting the right to sue within 6 months from the date of the accruing of the action regardless of when the lapse or fault was discovered.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield so I may answer?

Mr. O'CONNOR. If I have time I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

I doubt if any other piece of legislation has ever come before this House representing so hopeless a hodgepodge of discrimination and injustice. Let us strip from it the pretense that all this is going to benefit the farmer and recognize it for what it is—a license to the most unscrupulous elements in American business to oppress and exploit the poor and helpless—at the expense of both the farmer and the worker.

The test of whether democracy works is whether the humble folk—not the rich and powerful, who are amply able to take care of themselves—are fed and clothed and housed. And today our democracy is challenged by unemployment and want. Both are stalking the country. We, who claim to be a Christian nation, dare not reimpose these hardships upon millions of our people. I am amazed when I find gentlemen arguing that any group of industrial workers should be forced to feed, clothe, and house their families on incomes of less than 30 cents an hour.

I do not think the farmers of this country are going to be duped on this matter. They know that their market is here at home, provided we will, in simple justice, continue to vitalize that market with even so small a measure of buying power as 30 cents an hour represents. Underconsumption is the cause of farm surpluses today. It is not overproduction. Give the American people enough to eat, and that will solve the problem. We must not forget that about 85 percent of farmers' products are foodstuffs. Millions of ill-fed, ill-clothed people, farmers and city workers alike, look to us, and have a right to look to us, for help. They are the people of whom, and for whom, I speak. [Applause.]

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. JENKS].

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, when I came to be a Member of this honored body I asked the privilege of being appointed to membership on the Labor Committee, and during the period that this wage and hour bill was being considered and brought up I have been a member of that committee. My reason for asking to be a member of the committee was this: I had been advised that that committee was full of dynamite, but I said, "I have handled dynamite all my life" [laughter], and there has been no exception to that since I have been a Member of this Congress. [Laughter.]

I wanted to be a member of the Labor Committee because for a good many years I had worked in the capacity of a laborer. I had worked for substandard wages, 60 hours a week, and later on, as I have told this House before, I was a rather large employer of labor for more than 30 years. When this bill was considered in the committee my one thought was to vote for a measure whereby no man or no woman would work for wages of less than $10.60 a week, and I do not care whether that man or that woman is in the South or the West or the North. He lives under God's blue canopy. He has to earn a living for his family, and that family is entitled to a living, and I ask you, Can any man support a family as it should be supported on less than $10.60 a week, whether he works on the farm or in the factory?

In the manufacturing industry the cost of labor that goes into a product varies very substantially, from 10 to 50 or 60 percent, and it has been my experience that the people who wanted to undersell, who were not willing to meet fair competition, were the men who were cutting down on their labor, which was the only thing they could cut down on, as raw-material costs are the same to one man as another.

There may be, of course, some variations in overhead, but the only place he could really save was on labor, and the chiselers of this country are the ones who have brought wages down and brought about unfair competition until this wage and hour law was put on the statute books.

If there is not another thing I have done while I have been a Member of this House, at least I shall always remember and be proud of the fact that I cast my vote to give a fair living to the people of this country and also to abolish child labor. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have given much thought and study to the proposed amendments that we have under consideration here to the Fair Labor Standards Act, and I have listened most attentively to the discussion relating to them.

We have heard much about the disadvantages the operation of this act has imposed on the farmer, but, since neither the farmer nor his hired help are subject to the requirements of the Fair Labor Standards Act, I fail to see how he can be adversely affected by the operation of the act, although it is very clear to me that the interests of the farmer could be hurt by decreasing the wages of those who buy his products.

I submit that we are dealing with amendments here that, if passed, would destroy the effectiveness of the Fair Labor Standards Act because those amendments would rob that vast group of underprivileged and defenseless workers of the protection that the act affords them. In my opinion, $12.60 for a 42-hour week of manual labor is not too much for any worker, regardless of where he lives—North, South, East, or West—nor is $655.20 a year too much for any worker to maintain his family on. For that reason I stand unalterably opposed to the passage of any amendment that will weaken and ultimately lead to the destruction of the protection that the fair labor standards law affords to the workers who must need protection. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER.]

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I am not injecting the sectional issue into this problem as the gentleman from Georgia did here yesterday. Yesterday when the very able gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] was speaking, he had much to say for the poor of his section of the country. He expressed great concern for the exploited classes. I asked him to tell us of the laborers who are unable to vote because of the poll tax. Instead of answering my question he made some remark about going into the barber business.

I do not blame him for not telling us of the havoc wrought upon labor and all who toil by this ingenious device of the Middle Ages. It was apparent yesterday to all who had eyes to see and ears to hear that the spear head of this attack came out of the sections where labor may neither punish nor reward at the polls on election day. Labor desires no change in this act and these southern gentlemen who are opposing this social legislation cannot possibly speak for labor—nor scarcely anyone else so far as numbers go.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS] also assisted yesterday in the smoke-screen activity by making reference to his own "arkies" that the great State of California now must contend with. I do not blame him either, for changing the subject away from the poll tax. He probably knows that his State in 1936 voted but 18 percent of its adult population, while the neighboring State of Missouri without this tax sent 80 percent to the polls.

In eight poll-tax States labor has virtually no vote. Barely 5 percent of the people cast a ballot in those States, as against 32 percent elsewhere. The wage and hour law may have enabled a few persons to pay a poll tax. Weakening the law would prevent those workers whom the law now aids from voting to keep the law strong—because they could not pay the poll tax on their lowered wages. But the people who can pay the poll tax and some of the Representatives they send to Congress want both low wages and a poll tax: low wages to prevent labor from paying a poll tax; a poll tax to prevent labor from voting for Representatives who favor higher wages.

From the beginning of this struggle 3 years ago, poll-tax Representatives, with a few notable and courageous exceptions, have opposed the Fair Labor Standards Act. They fought against it; they voted against it; when it was passed they tried to weaken it—now they want to kill it.

I tell you labor all over the country has its eye on this House today. If the poll-tax Representatives vote against the wage-hour law, labor will know that these Representatives speak not with the voice of labor. And labor will also know that the poll tax must go if the voice of labor is to be heard.

I received 56,000 votes in the last election—more than the combined ballots of 12 poll-tax Congressmen, each of whom got less than 6,000 votes. These 12 include two gentlemen from Georgia who are the chief opponents of this labor law. Twenty-five thousand more votes were cast in my district at the last election than were cast in the entire State of Georgia with 10 Representatives. They have 10 votes and I have 1. Is that democratic government? Is that justice to my people?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield with reference to the figures from Mississippi?

Mr. GEYER of California. I know they are interesting, and I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. By reason of this "polecat" tax, the total vote in the 7 Mississippi congressional districts in 1938 was less than 36,000 votes, which is less than one-half of those cast in each individual congressional district in most of the other parts of the country.

Mr. GEYER of California. If every one of the five-thousand-odd votes cast for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] were a worker's vote—and I doubt if even 500 were—what about the other 23,000 employed workers in that district who could not vote? Does he speak for labor or the oppressed?

In almost every case the gentlemen from New England who support the wage-hour law and are fighting to preserve it received as many or more votes even than I. Each of them secured personally more votes than all 7 Representatives from Mississippi or all 6 from South Carolina. At least 3 of them each got more votes than all 13 Representatives from South Carolina and Mississippi together. One of the strongest supporters of this law from Illinois received more votes in 1938 than 21 poll-tax Congressmen all put together. Not one of them got votes from as much as 4 percent of his people, yet the gentleman from Illinois got votes from over 40 percent of his. Yet some call my bill, to abolish these poll taxes, outside interference.

So, gentlemen from the poll-tax States, I say the eyes of all the people in your district—and not just those of your constituents—are on you today. Vote against the wage-hour law and you will confirm the conviction in the heart of the laborer from all sections of the country that the poll tax must go if his family's bread basket is to be filled. And when the poll tax goes, along with it may go its present supporters. [Applause.]

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHNS].

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I have stayed on the floor today and listened to the debate on these amendments because they are very important to the country, and as I listened to men get on their feet and say they were going to vote against these amendments, the Norton amendments, especially, I could not understand whether they have read the bill or have any interest in the country or not. Very few bills are perfect when they first pass the House of Representatives. Many bills are repealed because they are not workable, and many bills of this social order will have to be amended in this House before they will be workable. As I see it, some five or six or seven lines will cover to a large extent what is contained in the law; but since this bill was passed, about five volumes have been written on the interpretation of language in the law, which is quite clear. So that what we want to do here is to try to get these amendments in such language that nobody, no matter what his mind might be, can interpret it in any other way other than as the Congress intended it. I do not believe there is anybody here who says that he does not intend to vote for these amendments, the Norton amendments, who would think of making a statement of that kind and go back home to his constituents and say that he had voted against the farmer having the right to prepare, cure, grade, or bag raw-grease wool.

Every farmer wants to do that, and it should be clear that he has the privilege of doing it; or of handling, grading, loading, slaughtering, or the dressing of livestock, or of the handling, storing, grading, picking, dressing, or packing of poultry. I do not believe anybody will want to go back home and say that he had denied the farmer that privilege, or of the handling or storing and grading or drying or packing of eggs. It is clear that that is exempted and I do not believe anybody would want to vote against that. If anybody votes against these amendments that is what he will be doing, or the hatching or handling or boxing of chicks, poultry, ducklings, goslings, or wild fowl.

There is one thing in these amendments that I feel ought to be made clearer, because it is language about the making of dairy products. That should extend not only to the making of these dairy products, but also to the transportation to the point where they are processed or taken care of, because as the language is now it might include a farmer who is hauling his milk to a cheese factory that may be 2 miles or more away. I see a gentleman on the committee shaking his head as if to say that it does not mean that, but the interpretation of the Administrator——

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the farmer himself takes it, or anybody employed directly by the farmer takes it, it is exempt.

Mr. JOHNS. But suppose he should hire somebody from the city and pay him 15 cents a hundred for hauling this milk, as many of them do, would he not involve himself?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It may be somewhat complex, but if the farmer himself by his own employee or through his own efforts transports it, it is exempt under the present law.

Mr. JOHNS. Is there any ruling to that effect?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It happens to be directly in the law.

Mr. JOHNS. I do not see it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman will find it in section 13 of the act, the present law, where a farmer himself is exempt and dairying is exempt.

Mr. JOHNS. That is what it says here—the "making of dairy products," but that is different from transporting them to the market.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Anything done incident to farming. Agriculture is defined as anything done by a farmer on the farm, incident to farming, and it includes dairying. The gentleman will find it in the definition of this language. It includes farming, and the harvesting of any agricultural crop, and so forth:

> Any act performed by the farmer on the farm as an incident to or in conjunction with such farming operations, including preparation for market and delivery to storage or to market, or to carriers for transportation to market.

Mr. JOHNS. I see. Well, that would cover it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY] such time as she desires.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, if you will study the Barden bill and determine the precise employees who are to be removed from the protection of the law, you will discover an appalling fact. Of the some million-odd workers which it would deprive of the protection of a 30-cent wage, about half of them are women. In the industries of canning and packing of fruits and vegetables alone, the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor estimates that approximately 176,000 women would be exempted by the Barden bill.

This country has striven for more than a quarter of a century to secure legislation to protect the woman who is required to leave her home and work in industrial occupations from the evils of the sweating system. Because of the attitude of the courts and the opposition of various industrial groups effective minimum-wage legislation exists only in a few States. In 1938 Congress passed the Fair Labor Standards Act. This act specifically provided that it should apply to both men and women. No discrimination is permitted on the basis of sex.

The passage of this law was a great gain for the working women of this country, hundreds of thousands of whom are so weak in bargaining power that they are at the complete mercy of the employer. Their needy circumstances force them to take any wage that is offered. Many women have been working for a starvation wage ever since women entered industry. They have been the victims of the "greedy and overreaching employer"—Chief Justice Taft in the Adkins case.

What character of work are the women engaged in whom Congressman BARDEN of North Carolina would exempt? For the main part they are toiling in commercial canneries, in packing sheds, stripping and stemming tobacco, and in other processes in connection with the preparation of food products. If you have ever been in a cannery, you know how women work over steaming cauldrons of hot tomatoes for hours—working in intense heat and often with blistered hands. Is a bare 30 cents an hours too much for such work? Most of these workers are mothers—heroic mothers—who are buying their food with their sweat. There are hungry mouths at home that must be fed.

The passage of this law gave new hope to hundreds of thousands of these women. Are we going to take it away from them now? To me the passage of this bill would be a national disgrace. Surely we have not arrived at a point in our national life where the profits of the cannery, the packer and the tobacco merchant, the cheese factory are more important to the legislator than the protection of our women. The sponsors of this bill should be forever shamed by the misery and distress which they propose to legislate upon several hundred thousand defenseless women. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] 3 minutes.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, tomorrow I expect to propose an amendment to whichever of the substitutes is offered first, and thereafter to the Norton bill, if the substitutes are defeated, embodying an amendment to section 3 (f), "Agriculture," and changing the definition of "agriculture and agricultural labor" to conform to the definition which was written in the social-security law by the Congress a year ago. This amendment will not conflict with the provisions of any of the pending bills. It has had the approval of both Houses and has been approved by the Senate. I am going to do this primarily because I think it will overcome the confusion that exists in interpreting what "agriculture" is under this act. If we have one definition in the Fair Labor Standards Act, one in the National Labor Relations Board Act, and one in the Social Security Act, obviously every employer of agricultural labor is going to be at his wit's end to know what to do. The definition which was adopted a year ago in the social-security amendments of 1939, which is now law, is clear, it is comprehensive, and it has withstood the test of several months' experience in the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

I might add that the Ways and Means Committee gave several weeks' study to this definition before it was submitted to the House, and the Bureau of Internal Revenue has now been operating successfully under that definition.

Let me suggest that uniformity is one thing that ought to be desired, even by those who are most interested in the success of the wage and hour bill. Let me add that I voted for that bill. Let me add that I hope it will continue to be a success and will not be emasculated by any amendments that are proposed tomorrow.

I think that basically agriculture is the same, no matter whether it is under the Wage and Hour Act, the Labor Relations Board Act, or the Social Security Act. Therefore, when the latter bill comes before us, I propose to offer the same amendment. Anyone who wants to know what that amendment is only has to consult the social-security amendments of 1939 to see what I propose to offer tomorrow.

Mr. Chairman, "agriculture" is defined in section 3 (f) of the Wage and Hour Act, but it is not a comprehensive definition. The law on minimum wages is laid down in section 6 of the act, the law on maximum hours in section 7, but in section 13 (a) (6) it is set out that the provisions of sections 6 and 7 shall not apply with respect to "any employee engaged in agriculture." It is therefore important that an accurate definition of agricultural labor be made in the act itself.

We had the same trouble with the Social Security Act. We exempted from tax what we classified in general language as "agricultural labor." The same difficulty existed with the Treasury Department that has existed with the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor. The difficulty was to make the Administrators understand what agricultural labor was. In issuing its regulations the Bureau of Internal Revenue produced a great many conflicting and often ridiculous rules and regulations. I commented on these at some length when we were discussing the Social Security Act. For instance, labor in connection with fur-bearing animal farms. The Bureau of Biological Survey in the Department of Agriculture classifies farms of that type as agricultural. The Bureau of Internal Revenue did not. As I told you a year ago, I have a fairly large acreage of fruit. I pack— that is, prepare for market, put in crates and boxes— that fruit on my own farm. That labor was classed as agricultural and exempt. However, if 10 or 20 of my neighbors, who own small farms, got together and built a cooperative packing shed on the railroad line, washed their pears, packed their fruit, and used the same type of labor, even the same people perhaps at times, under the same circumstances, they were not exempt. There is no justice in making the small producer suffer under those circumstances.

Tomorrow I may cite other instances of these peculiar distinctions that have been worked out which produce inequities among people operating in the same commodities in the same localities, which is certainly an injustice. It seems to me, therefore, well for the Congress to make uniform its definition of what agriculture and agricultural labor are. The fact that the Congress has already passed on this question once and then rejected a motion to strike out this particular definition overwhelmingly on the floor of the House, and the fact that the legislation has been approved by the President, seems to me to furnish a criterion for the adoption of a similar definition in the wage and hour. I may add that I intend to offer the same amendment in connection with the National Labor Relations Board Act when it is presented to the House. There is no sense in leaving a definition of agricultural to administrators who may know nothing of what agriculture is or how it operates when we already have set up a standard.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Has the gentleman that amendment with him?

Mr. BUCK. I do not; but, as I said a moment ago, if you will look up the social-security amendments of 1939——

Mr. REED of New York. I thought if you could obtain it and insert it as a part of your remarks it would be available to all the Members.

Mr. BUCK. I shall ask for that permission in the House. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

(The amendment is as follows:)

Amend section 3 (f) of the Fair Wages and Hours Act of 1938 to read:

"SEC. 3. (f) 'Agriculture' includes farming in all its branches and includes all service performed—

"(1) On a farm, in the employ of any person, in connection with cultivating the soil, or in connection with raising or harvesting any agricultural or horticultural commodity, including the raising, shearing, feeding, caring for, training, and management of livestock, bees, poultry, and fur-bearing animals and wildlife.

"(2) In the employ of the owner or tenant or other operator of a farm, in connection with the operation, management, conservation, improvement, or maintenance of such farm and its tools and equipment, or in salvaging timber or clearing land of brush and other debris left by a hurricane, if the major part of such service is performed on a farm.

"(3) In connection with the production or harvesting of maple sirup or maple sugar or any commodity defined as an agricultural commodity in section 15 (g) of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, or in connection with the raising or harvesting of mushrooms, or in connection with the hatching of poultry, or in connection with the ginning of cotton, or in connection with the operation or maintenance of ditches, canals, reservoirs, or waterways used exclusively for supplying and storing water for farming purposes.

"(4) In handling, planting, drying, packing, packaging, processing, freezing, grading, storing, or delivering to storage or to market or to a carrier for transportation to market, any agricultural or horticultural commodity; but only if such service is performed as an incident to ordinary farming operations or, in the case of fruits and vegetables, as an incident to the preparation of such fruits or vegetables for market. The provisions of this paragraph shall not be deemed to be applicable with respect to service performed in connection with commercial canning or commercial freezing or in connection with any agricultural or horticultural commodity after its delivery to a terminal market for distribution for consumption.

"As used in this subsection, the term 'farm' includes stock, dairy, poultry, fruit, fur-bearing-animal, and truck farms, plantations, ranches, nurseries, ranges, greenhouses, or other similar structures used primarily for the raising of agricultural or horticultural commodities, and orchards."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise at this time so as not to leave the RECORD unchallenged with regard to the statements made by the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in his advocating the exemption of Puerto Rico from the wage and hour law. I shall offer an amendment to strike out this exemption and will set forth at that time in full the reasons why the workers of Puerto Rico should have this protection.

At this time I simply want to point out that Puerto Rico has been the dumping ground for every needlework chiseling manufacturer from my city. They have gone down there and by a system of contracts they parcel the work out to one contractor and then the contractor parcels it out to a subcontractor, the subcontractor parcels it out to a sub-subcontractor, and that goes all the way down the line to women and children who work for hours and hours in their homes, receiving no more than $30 per year, while profits go from sub-subcontractor to subcontractor to contractor to chiseling labor exploiter. You have there a needle industry where women and children receive as little as 25 cents a day and less. This law would have forced the payment of a decent wage to what I consider to be the most exploited people under the American flag.

And yet I find that the representative of Puerto Rico takes the position that this protection which the Congress has given his people should be eliminated.

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Not now. I have only 3 minutes. I decline to yield.

During the period in which we have had this wage and hour law we have heard a great deal about the needle trade running away from Puerto Rico; that it was going to China and Japan. The fact is not only did it not run away, but the export figures indicate that during the fiscal year 1939 the needle-trade manufacturers in Puerto Rico did 26 percent more business than in 1937. I think that should put a stop to the fountain of tears which representatives of entrenched interests in Puerto Rico are shedding over the plight of the "poor" labor exploiter in Puerto Rico. Why not spend some time over the plight of the exploited workers?

The real argument here is whether you want to protect Puerto Rican workers, whether or not you are for a decent wage for the workers in Puerto Rico. The gentleman from Puerto Rico seeks to justify the elimination of this protection for workers in his country by telling us about unemployment in Puerto Rico. Certainly there is unemployment in Puerto Rico. How can you charge unemployment to the wage and hour law when everybody knows, except the gentleman from Puerto Rico, that the Fair Labor Standards Act has been sabotaged, not enforced, and flagrantly violated in Puerto Rico? The cause of unemployment in Puerto Rico is due to a virulent and oppressive imperialism, against which the gentleman from Puerto Rico should be fighting, instead of training his guns on the wage and hour law, which was enacted for the protection of his people.

This committee has not heard from a single genuine representative of Puerto Rican labor on the question of the Puerto Rican amendment. Labor has not been given an opportunity to present its side of the case to this committee. I propose, before the discussion on this bill is over, to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of labor unions in Puerto Rico which have written me to keep up the fight against eliminating Puerto Rico from the protection of this law.

Mr. PAGÁN. I speak on behalf of labor.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman is speaking in behalf of his political party.

Mr. PAGÁN. I speak on behalf of labor.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, may I have order? I did not interrupt the gentleman when he had the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman is speaking in behalf of his own political party, and not all of it at that. Labor union after labor union has met only recently in Puerto Rico. They have gone on record to appeal to Congress not to remove this small protection which Congress has given the exploited workers of Puerto Rico. How can the gentleman say that he speaks for labor? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the Barden bill to be introduced at the proper time, which is of particular importance to several groups of people, one group of which is located in my district. The proposed amendment is as follows:

That subdivision (a) of section 13, of Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (U. S. C., title 29, sec. 213) be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking the period following the word "products" in the last line of said subdivision (a) of section 13, and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "Or (11) to any individual employed by a corporation or association, the activities of such corporation being located outside of the corporate limits of any incorporated city or town, when not less than two-thirds of the capital investment of said corporation is in real and personal property used by it in its agricultural pursuits, when two-thirds of its employees are voting stockholders in said corporation, when no individual stockholder in such corporation may own or vote more than one share of voting stock owned by him at any stockholders' meeting and when each holder of voting stock shares equally in the profits of the corporation after satisfaction of prior obligations.

About 1714, in the Province of Hesse, now Frankfort, Germany, there was founded an organization known as the Community of True Inspiration. To hold the religious group together against the destructive forces of outside oppression, the wealthy members of the community gave liberally of their money to help support the poorer members.

In 1842, about 800 of the group migrated to America and to a tract of land near Buffalo, N. Y. In that location they were organized formally under the name of the Ebenezer Society. They formed three small villages on the New York tract and two on the Canadian side of the Niagara River. All property was held in common. In the fall of 1854 the need for locating a cheaper and more extensive tract of land led them to move westward to Iowa, where they settled about 20 miles west of Iowa City. The organization had about 18,000 acres in one contiguous tract, and this land has been held and operated by them continuously from that day to this. The tract has now increased to 26,000 acres.

The first village was given the Biblical name "Amana," and 6 other villages have been established at different locations on this tract of land. Today there are 7 of these villages with a total population of approximately 1,500. The farmers as well as the mill workers all live in the villages. Members of the society are assigned to mill work and to farm work more or less with the seasons, and farmers and mill workers live together under identical conditions.

The Amana Society is today famous for many of its products, principally Amana hams and Amana woolens. The processing of meat and the processing of wool and the production of the famous Amana blankets and dress flannels is carried on in these small villages. The Amanas were quiet, peaceful, and prosperous until the present depression struck them, but the effect of the depression on them in and of itself has been mild compared with the terrific repercussions from the intrusion of the Federal Government seeking to divide the community and to make a part of it subject to the wage and hour law.

The Amana Society reorganized in 1932 with a view to accomplishing a transition from the old communal enterprise to a purely modernized, orthodox corporation for profit at some date in the future. The wage and hour law has struck them while they are squarely in that transition stage of their development, and it is my contention that until they completely leave the form of organization wherein the workers themselves are the joint owners and until they complete their transition to the corporate form, they are not or should not be within the provisions of the wage and hour law. Nevertheless, representatives of the Amana Society have pleaded their case before the Wage and Hour Division in vain, and the Amana Society today faces on the one hand a division of neighbor from neighbor within these villages, classifying some as coming within the wage and hour law and others not within it, even though they all live under identical conditions, or on the other hand the society has the choice of classifying all of its members, both farmers and mill workers, uniformly within the wage and hour law. I am told that the application of the wage and hour law to the mill workers only will cause considerable strife because of the unfair and unequal compensation paid to neighbors living under identical conditions whereas the alternative of placing both farmers and mill workers under the wage and hour law will mean financial disaster and spell the doom of the society as an economic enterprise. The Amana Society has never objected to placing all employees who are not members within the wage and hour law. It is only the matter of applying the wage and hour law to the joint owner-workers that they object to.

But the Wage and Hour Division, in order to bring the members of the Amana Society within the wage and hour law, has ruled that if in the joint enterprise third persons who are not joint owners are employed, then the relationship of employer and employee exists not only between the corporation and the third person but also between the corporation and the joint owner-worker. The members of this society cannot see, and I cannot see, how that should or could draw the owner-workers themselves within the wage and hour law.

The Wage and Hour Division has ruled further that if the direction of the labor is vested in any one member or group, then the relationship of employer and employee is considered by the Department to exist. In other words, the joint owners cannot arrange for the proper direction of their own work without placing themselves within the wage and hour law, regardless of the relationship of the member to the organization and the mutual obligations existing and based upon centuries of existence of that relationship. Furthermore, it is well nigh impossible to measure the values of the existing relationship and the compensation paid in the form of security not measured on a simple dollars-and-cents basis. All these good people ask is that they be left alone and not molested. Nevertheless, the ruling of the Wage and Hour Division that has already been made may mean the closing of the Amana woolen mills in these villages and the expulsion of those mill workers from membership if the farm holdings of the society are not extensive enough to furnish them employment.

This amendment I offer is broad enough to cover all organizations similarly situated, and it is my understanding that there are approximately six or eight similar organizations in the entire United States.

We had a very similar situation before the Committee on Agriculture in connection with the bill H. R. 3800, which bill, as you will recall, amended section 8–E of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. In that case the Committee on Agriculture accepted my amendment as a committee amendment and the bill has passed the House and Senate so amended. The acceptance of this amendment will not open the gate to all cooperatives. Just as in the case of H. R. 3800, the amendment has been drawn to carefully limit its application to organizations of this particular kind. The amendment has been drawn in this instance to limit its application to organizations which combine agricultural and industrial pursuits under a joint owner-worker relationship, wholly located outside of the corporate limits of any city or town and where not less than two-thirds of the capital investment of such organization is invested in property used by it in its agricultural pursuits.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, this concludes general debate on the bill.

Certain of us desire permission to include matter in the speeches we made, but, as I understand it, such requests will have to be submitted in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe the agreement was that the first paragraph of the bill was to be read before we concluded today.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], let me state that I understood there was no such agreement. The agreement was that no part of the bill should be read, that only general debate should be concluded today, that we would proceed with the reading of the bill next week.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the Chair's understanding of the agreement that was made today.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COOPER, having resumed the chair, Mr. PARSONS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5435) to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, had come to no conclusion thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made today in the Committee of the Whole and to include therein letters received from the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace; also, from the National Consumers' League and the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I also ask that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD] may have permission to include certain letters and excerpts in the remarks he made today in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1940

Mr. LEA submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask uanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, under present law, railroad employees never have had adequate protection against loss of employment resulting from railroad consolidations, mergers, and abandonments. S. 2009 proposed substantial changes in the present law relating to these subjects but did not remedy this inadequacy of protection to employees. I offered, and the House adopted by a large majority vote, an amendment to S. 2009 designed to cover this defect in the bill.

Two hundred and seventy-five Congressmen signed a request urging the managers on the part of the House to retain the Harrington amendment, or report the same in disagreement so that a separate vote on this amendment could be had in the House. The joint conference committee on S. 2009 did not retain that amendment, but instead they struck out the entire consolidation section of the bill, including the Harrington amendment. The Transportation Act of 1920, as amended, however, still contains provisions under which mergers and consolidations may be effectuated yet which provide no specific protection for the railroad worker. For this reason I am offering today a bill (H. R. 9563) which would prohibit the Interstate Commerce Commission from approving any consolidation, combination, abandonment, pooling contract, agreement, division of traffic, and so forth, which would result in the displacement of railroad labor. My bill would also protect many communities from the economic disaster that results from railroad consolidations and abandonments.

The friends in Congress of railway employees are, therefore, being given the opportunity to support and vote for the principle of protecting railroad labor against railroad banker desires, which was the basic philosophy embodied in the Harrington amendment which the joint conference committee did not see fit to retain.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I made today in the Committee of the Whole the amendment I propose to offer to the bill H. R. 5435 when it is read for amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from John J. Miller, president of the Shenandoah Disaster Relief Committee, which accompanied a petition of 6,327 citizens, and also to include therein the foreword of that petition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial from the Washington Evening Star on the subject of educational orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include a resolution from the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, as well as a letter I received from the Air Line Pilots' Association.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial entitled "An Appeal to Reason."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON]?

There was no objection.

FARM-TENANCY PROGRAM IN JEOPARDY

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the indulgence of the House at this late hour to make a brief statement and then an announcement that will be of interest to those who are especially concerned about the welfare of the farm-tenancy program. I have reference, of course, to the future of the Bankhead-Jones farm-tenant program. Judging from the record of those who have supported it in the past, an overwhelming majority of the Members of this House are in favor of continuing it. That splendid program that has just begun to get under way is now in jeopardy.

As Members will recall, the House, by a very narrow margin, failed to make the appropriation when the agricultural bill was being considered in the House. The vote came late in the day when there were nearly a hundred Members absent. The bill had previously passed by such a wide margin that, frankly, the friends of the bill were caught napping.

It will be recalled that practically every opponent of the bill stated then that he favored a farm-tenancy program, but that the House proposal of $25,000,000 was only a drop in the bucket and would not begin to do the job. Others stated they would support a loan of $50,000,000, or even a larger sum, that would really make a start on a worth-while program, but would oppose a straight-out appropriation because of the then alleged economy program.

When the bill reached the Senate that body inserted $50,000,000 in the measure to continue the farm-tenancy program, not as a direct appropriation from the Treasury but authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to advance $50,000,000 for the next fiscal year for the Bankhead-Jones tenant loans. It provides only 5 percent for administrative expenses. This amount was approved by the Senate without a single dissenting vote. It is generally understood that the House conferees have refused to accept the Senate amendment and are evidently willing to wipe out one of the most successful and important parts of the entire farm program. As I understand the situation, this matter will be brought back to the House for a vote probably Tuesday of next week.

Now, the announcement I wish to make is that after conferring with several Members who have been especially interested in this farm-tenancy program in the past, it has been decided to call a meeting in the caucus room of the House Office Building next Monday at 10:30 a. m. All who are interested in continuing this worth-while program are invited and urged to be present, at which time we will devise and discuss ways and means of carrying on this farm-tenancy program.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include, with the extension of my remarks relative to the Barden bill, a copy of the amendment which I propose to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHWERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief editorial, and my reply thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHWERT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole certain excerpts and letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. When will the wage and hour bill, that we have considered in the Committee of the Whole this afternoon, be brought up for consideration again?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As far as the present occupant of the Chair is advised, it will be brought up again on Monday next.

ADJOURNMENT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, April 29, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, APRIL 29, 1940

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 24, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O most loving God, our unseen guide and teacher, who dost impart to us the lessons of life by voices and by silences, in moments of illumination as in hours of dimness and obscurity, through pleasure and through pain, in the animating thought which brings us strength, and in the temptation which sorely tries us: We commit ourselves to Thee in the faith that, because of Thee without whom there is nothing, all is well even that which seems to us most ill. Thou art the fountain of justice and mercy, and dost ever guard Thy children with Thy tender, watchful care, for even in the darkness Thou abidest and aboundest, and we walk the while in the shadow with our God.

Harken, therefore, to us in the midst of all the pain and strife of these dark days and comfort us, but teach us everyone to shun all vain delights and to live laborious days for the sake of our country and the restoration of peace to a sin-sick world. We ask it in the name of Him who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Friday, April 26, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO COAST GUARD ACADEMY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who was heretofore appointed by the Chair, under authority of the act of July 15, 1939, a member on the part of the Senate of the Board of Visitors to the United States Coast Guard Academy, has submitted his resignation. The Chair, under authority of the act, appoints the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] a member of the said Board of Visitors to fill the vacancy.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to announce an appointment to fill a vacancy in the Board of Visitors. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], heretofore appointed by me under authority of the foregoing act, having also resigned, I appoint the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to take his place. I ask to have this announcement appear in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate letters from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of War, Justice, and Commerce, the United States Civil Service Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Works Agency, Work Projects Administration, the Federal Security Agency, Social Security Board, and the administrative office of the United States courts, which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. GIBSON members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Parent-Teacher Association of Central High School, Washington, D. C., favoring amendment of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act of the District of Columbia so as to forbid the issuance or renewal of license or licenses under said act to any person or persons to conduct a liquor business within 600 feet of a public or private schoolhouse or house of religious worship, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the department of Christian social service of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Long Island, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called Walsh bill, being the bill (S. 3579) to extend the Federal old-age and survivors' insurance benefits of the Social Security Act to certain employees of religious and charitable organizations, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of several citizens of Lost Creek, Wash., praying for the preservation of peace, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. AUSTIN. From the Committee on the Judiciary I ask consent to report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 3233) to repeal certain acts of Congress (pocket vetoed), and I submit a report (No. 1548) thereon. This bill was introduced in the House by Representative SUMNERS of Texas, and it is to repeal certain acts of Congress which have been pocket vetoed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received and the bill placed on the calendar.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was rereferred the bill (S. 458) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional, probationary, or temporary officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who served during the World War, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1549) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 3650) to require the payment of prevailing rates of wages on Federal public works in Alaska and Hawaii, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1550) thereon.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6782) for the relief of James Robert Harman, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1551) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on April 25, 1940, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2635. An act to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act; and

S. 2661. An act to provide for rearrangement of the location of the several boards of local inspectors.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 3873. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N. Y.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BULOW:

S. 3874. A bill to amend the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, by providing for the reduction of civilian personnel of the Government by use of the seniority system; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 3875. A bill for the relief of Monroe Short; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. BARBOUR introduced Senate bill 3876 which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and appears under a separate heading.)

EXCLUSION FROM MAILS OF MATTER TENDING TO INCITE RELIGIOUS AND RACIAL HATREDS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill prohibiting the passage through the mails of matter tending to incite religious and racial hatreds. I desire to make this brief statement:

For many months now we have witnessed a constant procession of events and seen much evidence which permits no other conclusion than that forces are at work in the United States which threaten our internal security. These forces attack our institutions, our standards, and groups of our population. At times they attack all religion; at other times particular faiths.

Regardless of origin or purpose, these movements have as their evil effect the rousing of fear, hatred, and distrust among our people. They are intended to set citizen group against citizen group, religious faith against religious faith, and to weaken our solidarity as a nation. They fan flames which, unless checked, could in time consume us all.

Some of these activities appear to spring from a purpose to divide and rule. Others as clearly are a natural outgrowth of man's inhumanity to man—the harvest of the seeds of intolerance.

I have been appalled to discover that material of this character is finding its way even into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The pages of the RECORD abundantly support what I say. They have contained forgeries, such as the spurious letter signed "Col. Edward M. House"; attacks on individuals which, if uttered elsewhere, would have been punishable under the libel laws; and material which, if not of foreign and hostile origin, had all the earmarks of having been inspired and prepared by enemies of our own country. Much of it is so plainly unworthy of credence as to be dismissed with contempt by any person of intelligence. Placed in the hands of those who are unable or unwilling to subject it to analysis, however, it becomes inflammatory and dangerous. It could lead to betrayal of our own country by some American Vidkun Quisling—subjecting our own people to the fate of those who were sacrificed by this betrayer of the Norwegian people.

In my opinion, the time has come to put the sponsors of these poisonous, vicious, and unscrupulous attacks on notice that they may not henceforward pursue their activities with impunity, so far as they involve the use of the mails. I see no reason why we should close the mails to other indecencies and to matter tending to incite to murder and arson, while allowing matter to be mailed which certainly incites mass hatreds and could lead to mass murder and arson.

Those who are guilty of these activities have never heard the voice of America or they are this country's enemies. If there is one thing which sets Americans apart from less favored peoples of the world, it is their heritage of freedom. Tolerance is a part of that freedom. Though we have in our population all of the bloods of the world, and the faiths of the world are our faiths, we have learned to live together in peace and understanding, and on the foundations of freedom and tolerance have built the soundest social structure the world has seen.

While the spirit of tolerance lives, America lives. When it dies, America dies. Like the freedom of which it is a part, it cannot be attacked from without but only from within—eaten away by vermin who work in darkness and live by destruction.

It is in recognition of this danger that I have prepared this bill. It is intended to deal with a condition which, if ignored, could become a threat to all that America means.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from New Jersey will be received and properly referred.

The bill (S. 3876) to amend section 211 of the Criminal Code was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8745, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1941, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 80, line 22, under the caption "General investigations", to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$900,000."

On page 86, under the caption "Water conservation and utility projects", to insert a new paragraph, reading as follows:

"For the construction of water conservation and utilization projects, including not to exceed $280,000 for surveys and investigations, including small dam sites and reservoirs, and administrative expenses in connection therewith (of which not to exceed $40,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia), all as authorized by the act of August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), to remain available until expended, $5,000,000."

ADDRESS BY SENATOR WHEELER ON 1940 LIBERALISM

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on 1940 Liberalism, delivered by Senator WHEELER at Chapel Hill, N. C., April 23, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

PROBLEMS AFFECTING THE MOTORIST

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him at the banquet of the Regional Conference of A. A. A. Motor Club Executives, held in Knoxville, Tenn., April 22 to April 23, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF COLORADO ON THE CHURCH—DEMOCRACY'S SAFEGUARD

[Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him at Washington, D. C., on April 27, 1940, in connection with the Seventieth Annual Convention of the New York Conference of the Lutheran Augustana Synod of America, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS IN HONOR OF AMERICAN ARTISTS WHO CONTRIBUTED TOWARD DECORATIONS IN FEDERAL BUILDINGS

[Mr. THOMAS of Utah asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD radio addresses delivered on April 25 on a program in honor of American artists who contributed toward the decorations in Federal buildings, which appear in the Appendix.]

ARTICLE FROM THE BOSTON SUNDAY POST ON SENATOR WHEELER

[Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article relative to Senator WHEELER published in the Boston Sunday Post of April 14, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY AT MONTGOMERY, ALA.

[Mr. HILL asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. James A. Farley, Postmaster General, at the State Convention of the Alabama Branch of the National League of District Postmasters, held at Montgomery, Ala., April 6, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

AIR SAFETY BOARD

[Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado (for Mr. MCCARRAN) asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a telegram addressed to Mr. MCCARRAN by Moss Patterson, president of the Southwest Division of the Air Congress of America, which appears in the Appendix.]

AIR SAFETY BOARD

[Mr. CLARK of Idaho asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD editorials from American Aviation of May 1, the Christian Science Monitor of April 15, The Annalist of April 18, the Washington Times-Herald of April 21, the Cincinnati Enquirer of April 14, the Washington Evening Star of April 17, and the New York Sun of April 13, and a telegram from Carleton Putnam, president of the Chicago & Southern Air Lines, all relating to the Air Safety Board and the Civil Aeronautics Authority, which appear in the Appendix.]

SALVAGE OF HURRICANE TIMBER

[Mr. AUSTIN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to him by J. F. Campbell, Acting Director of the Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration, relative to the salvage of hurricane timber in New England, which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT OF COMMISSION ON AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP ON CIVIC EDUCATION PROGRAM

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement of the Commission on American Citizenship on the civic education program, which appears in the Appendix.]

ARTICLE FROM LABOR ON ETHYL PATENTS DECISION

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from Labor of April 2, 1940, relative to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the so-called ethyl patents case, which appears in the Appendix.]

A DISSENTING OPINION OF MR. JUSTICE STORY ENACTED AS LAW WITHIN 36 DAYS

[Mr. TYDINGS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by George Stewart Brown entitled "A Dissenting Opinion of Mr. Justice Story Enacted as Law Within 36 Days," reprinted from the April 1940 Virginia Law Review, which appears in the Appendix.]

WALTER-LOGAN BILL—ARTICLE BY ERNEST K. LINDLEY

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Ernest K. Lindley, entitled "Ironic Sequel," dealing with the Walter-Logan bill, and published in the Washington Post of Monday, April 29, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE—EDITORIAL FROM LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal of April 24, 1940, entitled "Object and Effect of Walter-Logan Bill," which appears in the Appendix.]

ARTICLE FROM NEW YORK TIMES ON INCREASE OF CORPORATION PROFITS

[Mr. BROWN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Times of April 28, 1940, on the subject of increased profits of certain corporations, which appears in the Appendix.]

AIR SAFETY BOARD

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has been advised by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] that he would like the privilege of addressing the Senate. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, in addressing the Senate today on the subject of aviation as affected by the President's Reorganization Plan IV, my remarks will be about a subject on which the Senate has heard me speak on several occasions, and to which I have devoted particular study and attention during the past 5 years. It was my privilege to act as chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce which conducted, during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, lengthy hearings on Senate bill 3420, and also to preside in the Seventy-fifth Congress over a subcommittee which held hearings on Senate bill 2 and Senate bill 1760—three bills considered by the Senate previous to the passage of the present Civil Aeronautics Act, enacted by the Congress in 1938.

Perhaps the thoroughness and detail with which these two subcommittees went into the problems affecting this legislation, which provided for the Federal control of the economic and safety aspects of aviation, make the details of this important problem stand out very clearly in my own mind. I nevertheless feel confident that the brief period of 2 years which has elapsed since Congress considered these problems in such detail and enacted the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 have not served completely to erase the recollection of the many and varied considerations which at that time convinced the Congress of the wisdom of providing for the independent and coordinated Federal regulation of aviation.

At the risk of repeating, at least in some part, information which is well known to the Senate, let me preface my remarks with a brief résumé of the development and the history of Federal regulation of the important aviation industry. Because the Congress, until the enactment of the Civil Aeronautics Act in 1938, saw fit consistently to consider separately, safety and the economic aspects of the industry, I shall first confine myself to the economic and later to the safety phases of the problem.

The need for Federal regulation of the aviation industry—when it consisted of a few poorly constructed planes held together by wire and piloted by a handful of brave but oftimes foolhardy ex-war fliers—was first brought to the attention of the Congress in legislation proposed in 1919. Between that time and the enactment of the first Federal aviation legislation in 1925, a total of 24 separate bills providing for the regulation of air commerce and civil aviation was introduced in both Houses of the Congress. The Air Mail Act of 1925 (43 Stat. 805), which marked the first actual entrance of the Federal Government into the field of Federal aviation regulation, provided only for power in the Postmaster General to contract with private carriers for carrying the mail. The methods provided in that act were proved to be unsound and impracticable. The original act was closely followed by an amendment in 1926 (44 Stat. 692) which varied the method of compensation. A second amendment in 1928 (45 Stat. 594) permitted the substitution of route certificates for not over 10-years' duration, considering the nature of franchises for air-mail contracts. The Watres Act, passed in 1930 (46 Stat. 259) gave the Postmaster General broad economic control over the air-mail carriers, including (1) route location, (2) route consolidations, (3) contract-bidding conditions, (4) service standards, (5) equipment and personnel, (6) accounts, and (7) compensation, including losses from passenger traffic. On May 5, 1930, a few months after the passage of the act, the Post Office Department issued an order calling for the installation of at least two passenger seats in all mail planes operated in the daytime. Legislation providing for foreign air-mail service was passed a short time later.

I need not remind the Senate, I am sure, of the next step in the turbulent history of this industry—the cancelation of the air-mail contracts in 1934 and the consequent loss in lives and property during the 2½-month period when the Army, both inadequately prepared and poorly equipped, attempted to fly the mail. The Air Mail Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 933), which evolved from this fiasco, made air-mail carriers subject to the control of three separate divisions of the Federal Government—the Post Office Department for contracts, the Interstate Commerce Commission for rates, and the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce for safety regulation. In 1935 the act was amended so as to prohibit off-line service if such service would compete with service available on another air-mail route. The denial of certain applications by the Interstate Commerce Commission led to the fight between the airlines for routes by bidding absurd figures—a procedure which finally culminated in a bid for the Houston-Brownsville route of $0.00001907378 against nothing per mile. Carriers without air-mail contracts ran amuck, and no Federal regulation could reach them under then existent laws. This demoralizing and loosely controlled system continued until the Civil Aeronautics Act was passed by both House and Senate in 1938. The sum and substance of the entire economic history of aviation is that the air lines have never been given a continuing policy by the Federal Government under which they have been permitted to operate for a period longer than 2 or 3 consecutive years. How can we have a successful policy for air commerce and civil aviation under such circumstances?

Mr. President, let us turn now to safety prior to the Civil Aeronautics Act. Only one law and one agency of the United States Government have to be given consideration, namely, the Air Commerce Act of 1926, as amended, and the Department of Commerce. By the terms of this law the Secretary of Commerce was given complete control of all technical and safety aspects of the air industry. Air commerce was then an infant industry. The Secretary set the standards for airworthiness of aircraft; he issued the licenses to fly; he approved aircraft construction; he provided the navigational aids and facilities; he made the air-traffic rules; he established airways; he suspended and revoked certificates; he investigated accidents and decided who was to blame for them and what caused them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is also true, is it not, that the same men responsible for the safety of passengers in the air during that time also passed on the responsibility for accidents?

Mr. TRUMAN. That is absolutely true.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In other words, men were trying themselves?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes. I will come to that in a moment and read from the report of Senator Copeland's committee on that very subject. I thank the Senator.

In short, the Secretary of Commerce was in supreme command of aviation and controlled it from start to finish. It was he who set the standards; it was he who approved and enforced their application; it was he who provided the means of navigating aircraft in flight; and it was he who went out and decided if he were to blame when accidents occurred, and they occurred all too frequently with tragic results. All sorts of accusations, charges, and countercharges as to incompetency, political control, inefficiency, and so forth, filled the air. Screaming headlines about crashes and their attendant stories of tragedy and pathos were almost weekly news items. The gradual transformation of aviation from an infant to a full-grown industry and an established method of transportation made the horrible safety record more and more retard the progress of a rapidly growing industry. Gradually a demand for more unified, more competent, and more independent control was made by public opinion. The tragic death of Senator Bronson Cutting, of New Mexico, in a crash just a few miles from my home town in Missouri, brought the attention of the public and of the Senate—with tragic suddenness—to the shortcomings of regulation by the Secretary of Commerce. Senator Cutting's death brought home to us the need for revision in Federal control of aviation.

The findings of the committee, headed by the late distinguished Senator Copeland, of New York, are too well known to all of you to warrant my repeating them in detail at this time. Suffice it to say that the Department of Commerce came in for a scathing denunciation. The need for immediate action appeared so urgent as to necessitate the appointment of a Federal Aviation Commission to complete a detailed study of the situation and make recommendations as to the steps to be taken to meet the needs of this overgrown infant industry, which was now nearing maturity. The industry was fast outgrowing the capabilities of its Federal nurse.

I do not need to dwell on the findings and recommendations of Senator Copeland's committee, which I am sure all Senators recall, other than to read the following brief extract from page 31 of its report:

Because of the lack of proper legislation, the domestic air-transport industry has not had the benefit of properly coordinated Federal regulation. With the air-mail law undergoing fundamental revision every second or third year, and with the suggestion of a periodic reawarding of air-mail contracts by a completely new process of competitive bidding, periodically raising its head, no operator can plan either confidently or intelligently. There is need for an official body which can keep in close touch with the air-transportation situation, watch developments, study the larger problems, foresee dangers which are impending, promote the cause of coordination, and advise both the President and the Congress in regard to air-transportation policies.

The President of the United States in transmitting this report to the Congress expressed the desire for ultimate creation of a Federal Transportation Commission, although he recognized the immediate necessity of giving aviation independence and recommended the control of aviation by the Interstate Commerce Commission during the interim.

I desire to read at this point the President's message transmitting the report of the Federal Aviation Commission:

MESSAGE OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Congress of the United States:

I am submitting herewith the report of the Federal Aviation Commission appointed be me last summer by direction of the Seventy-third Congress. The Commission has made a diligent study of the broad subject of aviation conditions here and elsewhere and emphasizes the excellent American progress in this new form of transportation. The Commission has also studied problems of National defense, of procurement policies, and of the extension of air transport services. I invite your attention to these comprehensive surveys.

As I have suggested on many occasions, it becomes more and more apparent that the Government of the United States should bring about a consolidation of its methods of supervision over all forms of transportation.

The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce has been working to that end for the last 4½ years.

When the Interstate Commerce Commission was created in 1887, the railroad was practically the principal method of rapid interstate transportation. Since that time this monopoly of transportation enjoyed by the railroad to a very important degree has been limited by the development of the automobile and good interstate roads. Recently water transportation by lake, by river, by canal, and by oceans has, largely through the construction of the Panama Canal and our inland waterways, definitely brought ships and shipping into the general interstate field. More recently still, air transportation has become an element. All of these developments have changed the general problem of transportation and the concern of the Government with them. A number of valuable reports have been prepared on these related questions. The report of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation has already been submitted to the Congress by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The report deals with the many problems relating to busses, trucks, water carriers, and railroads. Other reports of departmental committees on ocean-mail subsidies have been completed. This present report on aviation is a similar source of information and advice concerning transportation by air. I earnestly suggest that the Congress consider these various reports together in the light of the necessity for the development or interrelated planning of our national transportation. At a later date I shall ask the Congress for general legislation centralizing the supervision of air and water and highway transportation with adjustments of our present methods of organization in order to meet new and additional responsibilities.

There are detailed questions, however, that require early action. Our extended mail contracts with air lines expire on or about March 1 and existing legislation dealing with primary and secondary routes should be revised before that time. The Commission suggests that the Interstate Commerce Commission be given temporarily the power to lower or increase air-mail rates as warranted in their judgment after full investigation. The purpose of this is to prevent the destruction of any efficiently operated part of the present system pending suitable consideration by the Congress of what permanent measures should be taken and what amendment, if any, the present general transportation policy of the Government should undergo. I concur in this recommendation of the Federal Aviation Commission, provided always that the grant of this duty to the Interstate Commerce Commission be subject to provisions against unreasonable profits by any private carrier. On account of the fact that an essential objective during this temporary period is to provide for the continuation of efficiently operated companies and to guard against their destruction, it is only fair to suggest that during this period any profits at all by such companies should be a secondary consideration. Government aid in this case is legitimate in order to save companies from disastrous loss, but not in order to provide profits.

The Commission further recommends the creation of a temporary Air Commerce Commission. In this recommendation I am unable to concur. I believe that we should avoid the multiplication of separate regulatory agencies in the field of transportation. Therefore, in the interim before a permanent consolidated agency is created or designated over transportation as a whole, a division of the Interstate Commerce Commission can well serve the needs of air transportation. In the granting of powers and duties by the Congress, orderly government calls for the administration of executive functions by those administrative departments or agencies which have functioned satisfactorily in the past and, on the other hand, calls for the vesting of judicial functions in agencies already accustomed to such powers. It is this principle that should be followed in all of the various aspects of transportation legislation.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 31, 1935.

Senators are familiar with the various proposals made on the floor of the Senate. They are familiar with the hearings conducted, and the debates in both the House and Senate during the consideration of the many measures introduced to carry out the President's proposed policy. My colleagues will undoubtedly recall the many and varied regulatory proposals, which were all consistent in asking for one crying need for aviation—independence from political control. The culmination of all these efforts was the enactment of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. This law created the offices of the Administrator, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and the Air Safety Board. This act, in my opinion, stands out as one of the landmarks in sound transportation legislation. Under it, aviation, for the first time in its history, was independent; for the first time it was free of direct political control; for the first time it had economics and safety, both administered by the same agency; for the first time it had the power of investigation entirely separate from the rule making and the power to regulate; for the first time a definite policy permitting long-term planning and development was expressed by Congress.

This legislation has been on the statute books for almost 2 years. The Civil Aeronautics Authority, the Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and the Air Safety Board have been in office for a period only slightly exceeding 20 months. What have been the results? For the answer to this query you need only to turn to the records.

Let us consider first the economic side of the picture. We find every air line in the United States operating over a definite route between definite points pursuant to authority contained in a certificate of convenience and necessity; we find passenger-carrying records consistently broken month after month; we find air lines no longer afraid of long-term planning, readily expending millions of dollars for larger, faster, and safer aircraft; we find 15 of the 17 air lines in the United States operating at a profit during 1939; we find that passenger fares constitute over 63 percent of gross revenue to the air lines, and a consistently diminishing necessity of air-mail subsidies; we find plane manufacturers turning out both small and large civil aircraft at average monthly rates, 200 to 500 percent in excess of production 2 years ago; we find all the stocks of aircraft manufacturers, accessory manufacturers and air lines establishing new high records. In short, we find the aviation industry in the best economic condition of its brief and turbulent history. I am not including war planes in this statement either.

Now let us turn to the safety side of the picture. It is necessary to consider only a few bits of statistical data to show clearly the decrease in the number and in the rate of aircraft accidents for us to realize the tremendous advancement made during the past 2 years in aviation safety. Looking first at the domestic scheduled air carriers, we find that during the 11 years of regulation by the Department of Commerce 116 accidents occurred. Those accidents resulted in the death of 148 pilots and crew members, and 242 passengers, an average of approximately 11 accidents per year, involving the death of 35 persons. Comparable figures reveal that 3 fatal accidents have occurred during the 20-month existence of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board, with a total of 4 crew members and 12 passengers killed—an average of 1.8 accidents per year, and an average annual death rate of 9.6 persons. Such figures, though revealing in themselves a greatly improved safety trend, do not fully tell the story. Consideration must be given to the fact that the average of 11 accidents per year occurred under the Department of Commerce during an average annual operation by domestic air carriers of 45,000,000 revenue miles, while the average of 1.8 accidents per year occurred since the creation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board during an annual operation of approximately 84,000,000 miles. The average since the enactment of the Civil Aeronautics Act is one-sixth as many accidents during twice as many miles of flying.

It is interesting to note the fact that the average death rate was 35 persons per year in air-carrier accidents under the regulation of the Department of Commerce while the domestic air carriers were transporting an average of 592,000 revenue passengers per year, and the average death rate was 9.6 persons per year since the enactment of the Civil Aeronautics Act while those same air carriers were transporting an average of 1,600,000 revenue passengers per year. The average death rate under the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board was approximately one-fourth as many while transporting three times as many persons.

It may be argued that these figures represent the experience of the pioneering days of aviation and are not entirely fair in their comparisons. Let us compare the records of the 20 months preceding the enactment of the law creating the Civil Aeronautics Authority, while aviation was regulated by the Department of Commerce, with the 20 months immediately following, when aviation was regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board. The air carriers were using the same type equipment and operating substantially the same number of route-miles, yet the safety averages during these two comparable periods improved from 9 accidents under the Department of Commerce, involving 83 deaths, in 109,793,440 miles of flying, while carrying 1,852,902 passengers, to a total of 3 accidents, after the passage of the Civil Aeronautics Act, involving 16 deaths in 134,775,977 miles of flying, while carrying 2,472,979 passengers—or an improvement in safety from an average in domestic air-carrier operation of a death every 7.2 days under the Department of Commerce to a death every 37 days under the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board.

Must I remind the Senate of the publicity releases of only a few weeks ago, which were a matter of such great pride to every citizen of the United States, showing that the operation by the domestic air carriers of a full year's flying covering 87,000,000 miles and transporting more than 2,000,000 passengers without injury or death of a single passenger or member of a crew was an all-time record of safety in any field of transportation? Is any better proof to be given, or, rather, can any better proof be given, of the sheer folly of tampering with the present system of regulation under the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board?

And now we are asked to destroy the independence of the agencies which have effected these amazing improvements in the economics and safety of air transportation. We are asked to merge the rule-making functions and the authority for independent investigations into one agency. We are again asked to place aviation in the same situation in the Department of Commerce which caused its removal only 2 short years ago. No one will come to the support of a measure which will increase efficiency and decrease expenditures in the United States Government more quickly than will I, but there is also no one who will object more violently than I to any measure which sails under the false banner of "increasing efficiency and saving expenses" when in reality it decreases efficiency and increases cost.

It may be that I am from Missouri and have to be shown, but from the information I have and from the past experience of the Government in the control of aviation I can see nothing which will in any way substantiate the wisdom of what is here proposed. It is not asked, mind you, Mr. President, to combine the Civil Aeronautics Authority and Air Safety Board with the Interstate Commerce Commission, a plan which at least has never been tried and which admittedly has recognized merit and which has been recommended in numerous messages to Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President's message of June 7, 1935, be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

It is high time to deal with the Nation's transportation as a single unified problem. For many years in the past transportation meant mainly railroads. But the rise of new forms of transportation, great expenditures of Government funds for the development of waterways and for the building of great highways, and the development of invention within the railroad system itself, have enlarged the problem far beyond that conception which dominated most of our past legislation on the subject. In some instances the Government has helped a little. In others it retarded. In still others it has given special assistance from time to time—in many instances without rhyme nor reason—in all instances without considering each aspect of the problem in the light of all the others. It is small wonder that in a transportation picture so confused, the public has been inadequately served.

I have from time to time, in this session, addressed the Congress as to the necessity of various forms of Government aid and regulation of transportation. I now wish to draw together and supplement these various suggestions for the consideration of the Congress in this session.

In the railroad field there has been a growing recognition of the necessity for reorganization and coordination. To that end there was created the office of Federal Coordinator of Transportation. The Coordinator has considered various ways of effecting economies through the physical coordination of railway facilities and services, and, in addition, has studied and made suggestions for legislative measures covering both the railroads and other forms of transportation.

Another type of reorganization necessary for the sound and healthy recovery of our railroad system is financial. Many of our railroads are in a sound financial condition. Others are in need of reorganization. To enable necessary financial reorganizations to be effected inexpensively and promptly, the Congress passed, 2 years ago, certain amendments to the Federal Bankruptcy Act. Shortcomings in this legislation have appeared which have prevented an efficient and extensive use of it. In order to correct these shortcomings, the Coordinator has recommended certain amendments which are now before the Congress for action. Various differences of opinion as to these amendments are rapidly being adjusted and it is my hope that this legislation may be promptly enacted.

I have already recommended to the Congress my views with regard to the relations that should exist between the Federal Government and air carriers. Legislation has been introduced for the purpose of carrying out these recommendations. I am in general accord with the substance of this legislation, although I still maintain, as I indicated in my message on that subject, that a separate commission need not be established to effectuate the purposes of such legislation. Air transportation should be brought into a proper relation to other forms of transportation by subjecting it to regulation by the same agency.

A bill for the regulation of highway motor carriers has passed the Senate and is now before the House of Representatives. The practical unanimity with which the Senate passed this bill convinces me of the extent to which all of the difficult adjustments among the interests concerned were made and I recommend its early passage by the House.

Another bill for the regulation of intercoastal and coastwise trade and of some of the inland-waterway carriers prepared by the Coordinator has been introduced and is before the Congress for action. I recommend that this bill be considered by the appropriate committees and pressed to early passage. I can see no reason why the responsibility for the regulation of intercoastal, coastwise, and inland waterways should not be vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, with proper provision for the departmentalizing of the work of the Commission.

It is my hope that the Interstate Commerce Commission may, with the addition of the new duties that I have indicated, ultimately become a Federal transportation commission with comprehensive powers. It has been my intention to recommend this strongly to this session of the Congress, but the time remaining seems to preclude the discussions necessary for such changes. Such a reorganization should not be delayed, however, beyond the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The efforts toward the coordination of the railroads and the general improvement of transportation conditions which were begun by the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933 should proceed, and I recommend that the act and the office of Coordinator be extended for at least another year.

FRANKLIN D ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 7, 1935.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, no attempt is being made to merge the regulation of aviation and some other mode or modes of transportation; it is not proposed to transfer the regulation of aviation to some executive department which at least has a clean slate of "no errors' 'in the field. Aviation is again to be placed under the control of a department which made such a mess of it that it was removed by Congress only 2 years ago with the express consent and active support of the President. He asks that a plan which failed be substituted for one which has worked successfully.

But what about the plan itself? A close study reveals that it is not so clear-cut as it might seem to be on first reading of the order. It does not distinguish between duties directly under the control of the Secretary of Commerce and those which allegedly remain as independent functions of the Civil Aeronautics Board. The order requires that the Board report through the Secretary of Commerce, whose degree of indirect control is obviously unlimited. In fact, the Secretary is the Board. The whole set-up becomes political. Air regulation by a bipartisan board is out of the window.

Let us look now into the proposals of plan IV. It is to be noted that section 7 (a) transfers the Civil Aeronautics Authority and its functions, the Office of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics and its functions, and the functions of the Air Safety Board to the Department of Commerce.

I refer to the President's message, which is printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page 6530, and the plan itself, which begins on page 6531, and section 7 appearing on page 6532 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The date of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is April 11.

In section 7 (b) the functions of the Air Safety Board are consolidated with functions of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, hereafter to be known as the Civil Aeronautics Board, which, in addition to its other functions, will discharge the duties heretofore vested in the Air Safety Board so as to provide for the "independent investigations of aircraft accidents." The provision further abolishes the offices of the members of the Air Safety Board and provides that the functions of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics shall be administered under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of Commerce—a grant of power which, if we are to recognize judicial precedent, gives the Secretary of Commerce absolute power and control over all responsibilities placed by the Civil Aeronautics Act and Reorganization Plan IV in the Administrator. The extent of this power can be fully appreciated when consideration is given to the fact that the great majority of the present employees of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and approximately $25,000,000 of the $27,000,000 appropriation to the Authority for the 1940–41 fiscal year will come under the direct control of the Secretary of Commerce.

If we want to know what direction and supervision mean in an administrative office, I refer Members of the Senate to Knight v. United States Land Association (142 U. S. 161), which was decided in 1891. That is the case to which all questions will be referred when they go to the Department of Justice.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator say a moment ago that $25,000,000 of the $27,000,000 appropriated goes to the payment of salaries?

Mr. TRUMAN. No; it does not all go to the payment of salaries.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator said the $25,000,000 referred to went to the payment of salaries.

Mr. TRUMAN. Twenty-seven million dollars is for the operation of the whole set-up.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I understand.

Mr. TRUMAN. Twenty-five million dollars of it would be under the direct control of the Secretary of Commerce, while the other $2,000,000 would go to the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. CONNALLY. It would all be in one organization if the reorganization order were carried out, would it not?

Mr. TRUMAN. It would all be in the Secretary of Commerce, just as it was before we passed the law. The Civil Aeronautics Authority is supposed to have certain duties and authority, but I am trying to show that with the proposed transfer it will not have any duty or authority, but will do what someone else tells it to do.

Mr. CONNALLY. Most of the Government agencies do that now.

Mr. TRUMAN. No; here we have an independent bipartisan organization which regulates air traffic just as the Interstate Commerce Commission regulates the railroads.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's theory is that the Bureau will do what the Secretary of Commerce tells it to do.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. To carry that theory further, the Secretary of Commerce is supposed to do what the President of the United States tells him to do, so it finally comes back to the President.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Texas that he take the time and trouble to read the testimony before the Copeland committee. I was a member of that committee, and in the hearings before the committee we discovered a state of facts which was responsible for the passage of the act creating the Civil Aeronautics Authority—a state of facts which was deplorable, lamentable, and disgraceful. For instance, we found that under the——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Why is it that simply changing the name of this organization is going to sublimate it, purify it, or cleanse it of all political or other considerations? I think a bureaucrat is a bureaucrat, under whatever name he may operate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I went through the testimony given in connection with this matter, and I discovered some of the practices in the Department of Commerce. For instance, I discovered that the executive assistant to the Secretary of Commerce apparently knew nothing about the subject of aviation. His previous experience had been that of a post-office inspector. Under that system there were three separate heads of the Bureau of Air Commerce apparently with about equal authority. People were being killed. A situation had developed in the country for instance, under——

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean that the Assistant Secretary killed any of them?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, he was interfering with the control of the Bureau of Air Commerce. Let me give the Senator an example.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not want it to be presumed that the Assistant Secretary was doing that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not want to take the time of my colleague, but since I chanced to be a member of the investigating committee and happened to be familiar with some of the facts, I shall be glad to give the Senator from Texas some facts.

For instance, we found that when civil aviation was under the control of the Bureau of Air Commerce in the Department of Commerce they had a safety system in the Bureau of Air Commerce by which any supervisor of any district could set up any kind of lights he wanted to, so that if a pilot lost his way in a fog and did not know where he was, if he was mistaken as to where he was, he could be misled by the lights. He would find that what were landing lights in one district were warning lights in another district, and unless he knew where he was he was likely to lose his ship, his passengers, and his cargo.

Mr. President, there can be no justification for such a condition. The occasion for the creation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority was the disgraceful maladministration in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. TRUMAN. I thank my colleague.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me interrupt again to say that what the Senator from Missouri detailed could have happened under any other branch of the Government. What happened was due to the method of administration.

Mr. TRUMAN. The method of administration is what I am speaking of.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am merely asking for a little information.

Mr. TRUMAN. I am trying to give it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not an expert on aviation and know nothing about it. I do not see anything holy about any particular name, whether the organization be called the Civil Aeronautics Authority or the Bureau of Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce. Either one of them can do right and either one of them can do wrong. So I myself do not see any holiness about any particular set-up.

Mr. TRUMAN. There is none.

Mr. CONNALLY. I see no reason why the Air Safety Board and the Civil Aeronautics Authority should not all be under one authority.

Mr. TRUMAN. If we are to put it all under one authority, let us put it under the Transportation Authority and place the control in the Interstate Commerce Commission, as was suggested by the President.

Mr. CONNALLY. That may be a good idea; but I do not see why it is necessary to have two authorities managing the same activity.

Mr. TRUMAN. I agree with the Senator 100 percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. We now have two.

Mr. TRUMAN. It is proposed to transfer the control back where it was when we started.

Mr. CONNALLY. We now have two authorities operating the same activity, have we not?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are independent of each other, are they not?

Mr. TRUMAN. It is the policy of the President to put all transportation under one control.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the President is right about that. Where it ought to be put, we do not know; but we certainly ought not to have two bosses of the same industry.

Mr. TRUMAN. We have not now. The Civil Aeronautics Authority is in control of air commerce.

Mr. CONNALLY. What does the Air Safety Board do?

Mr. TRUMAN. The Air Safety Board investigates accidents, decides what causes them, and makes judicial findings.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why should not that work be done in connection with the control of air commerce?

Mr. TRUMAN. Because we do not want an agency to investigate itself. That is what the Department of Commerce did in the first place. That is what caused all the trouble.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Texas should read the present act. The Air Safety Board was deliberately set up as a separate agency to investigate questions of safety in the air and to prevent the practice which had formerly existed in the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Commerce Department under which the very men who were responsible for safety investigated the responsibility for accidents. I know that was true, because I have sat in their meetings. I attended several meetings of the committee of the old Bureau of Air Commerce when it was investigating its own responsibility.

The theory of setting up the Air Safety Board was to create a separate agency which would have responsibility for safety in the air alone. Whether or not the Senator from Texas thinks it makes any difference what we call the agency, the fact of the matter is that since the Air Safety Board was set up, for the first time in the history of the country, an entire year elapsed without an accident in the air, whereas under the old Bureau of Air Commerce of the Commerce Department accidents occurred so frequently that the Senate was shocked into action as a result of the death of a United States Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the Senator's contention that when two airplanes collide in midair and kill somebody, the man who is responsible for it is someone in the Bureau?

Mr. TRUMAN. Sometimes he is.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the argument of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TRUMAN. Sometimes that was the case, and the record will show it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Whether we call the agency the Air Safety Board or something else, the men appointed will be political appointees. They must be appointed by somebody.

Mr. TRUMAN. They are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The Board is bipartisan.

Mr. CONNALLY. The appointees in one bureau are as likely to be politicians as the appointees in any other bureau. When they are appointed in one of the bureaus they immediately become politicians—either external politicians or internal politicians. In the bureaus they are usually internal politicians.

I do not know of anything in human nature which sublimates such men, whether they are in the bureau or out of the bureau. We all know that the same kind of men will be in the organization. The present incumbents will be covered into the new organization, will they not?

Mr. TRUMAN. Let me explain the situation to the Senator. Under the reorganization plan the Air Safety Board is proposed to be abolished. The Civil Aeronautics Authority, which handles the economics, is made the Air Safety Board and the Civil Aeronautics Board, and there will be no independent safety board.

Mr. CONNALLY. The general functions of the Air Safety Board will be transferred to the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes; and it will be under the Secretary of Commerce, and the situation will be the same as it was before.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think we can assume that the situation will be the same as it was before. We are all supposed to be making a little progress.

Mr. TRUMAN. I hope we are.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not see anything in a name. I rather suspect that some of the accidents are caused by careless pilots and bad weather.

Mr. TRUMAN. I wish the Senator would read the record. I have it before me.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not the time to read all the record. We appoint men like the Senator from Missouri on committees to read the record and tell us what they learn. I am trying to obtain information from the Senator. If I must read a record of 400 or 500 pages to obtain the information, I simply cannot do so.

Mr. TRUMAN. Every statement which I have made is amply supported by the record.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. Has the Senator any figures available, or has he made any calculations as to how much money, if any, would be saved by transferring the regulation of this activity back to the Commerce Department?

Mr. TRUMAN. I have not the exact figures. I understand that the saving would be about $200,000 a year. The United States Government has an arrangement with the air passenger lines as to the purchase of aircraft. If the proposed plan goes into effect, and the passenger lines are unable to make the purchases which they should make, and if accidents happen as they did under the old management of the Secretary of Commerce, the cost to the Government will probably be $25,000,000 a year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true that if we go back to the condition which existed prior to the creation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, when people were afraid to fly and passenger traffic fell off, the amount of postal payments from the Federal Government will necessarily increase?

Mr. TRUMAN. That is true.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Everybody was afraid to fly.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is true.

Mr. President, I shall explain the situation in a little more detail. If the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] will bear with me, I think he will see the point.

The Civil Aeronautics Authority, by plan IV of the President, is stripped of its field force; and, consequently, in the discharge of its independent rule-making, adjudication, and investigating powers under title IV, is forced either to rely upon the field force of the Administrator and of the Secretary or else to duplicate such personnel. The Civil Aeronautics Board is further charged with the inconsistent functions of having to establish the rules and regulations for aviation under its rule-making power, and at the same time to provide for an independent investigation of accidents which occur and which will involve the thoroughness or correctness of the rule-making functions. It is obvious that this division of functions and assignment of responsibility is based upon the inconsistent theory that the personnel of the Authority and of the Administrator can divorce themselves from regular duties and objectively pass judgment upon their own activity in its relationship to and responsibility for the particular matter under consideration. That such an arrangement, regardless of the effort expended or the mental honesty of individuals concerned, is contrary to human nature and would place personnel of the Civil Aeronautics Board in a very unfair position goes without saying. There will be a hesitancy on the part of the public to accept the findings of a Federal regulatory agency for aviation as to its own responsibility for accidents. That has been demonstrated on numerous occasions during the regulation of aviation by the Department of Commerce. The American people have long memories, and are very dubious when human lives and safety are involved.

To look ahead a little as to the possible position of aviation in the event the President's plan IV is not disapproved by the Congress, what voice will the Civil Aeronautics Board have in the exercise of the very important functions delegated to the Authority under the present act, which are not "rule making, adjudication, or investigation"? What about the powers of the Civil Aeronautics Board to prepare cases and represent the public interest in controversies brought before it by air carriers? Is that part of adjudication? What control will the Secretary exercise over the budget of the Civil Aeronautics Board as to its independent functions? Certainly the use of the judicially defined words "direction and supervision" in plan IV lends no encouragement. Will this independence of the Civil Aeronautics Board be real, or will it be a theoretical independence, subjected to that control described by Justice Holmes in the celebrated case of Evans against Gore, when he said:

> The power over a man's subsistence amounts to power over his will.

Is the Civil Aeronautics Board to be allowed to report to the Congress as to the exercise of its quasi-legislative powers and duties without the right of change or veto of such report being vested in the Secretary of Commerce by virtue of the "reporting through the Secretary" provision contained in plan IV? How is the Civil Aeronautics Board to exercise its rule-making powers and at the same time exercise its independent investigation powers?

These and many other queries come to mind; but I need not here enumerate them further in order to illustrate the clever indirection with which the independent regulation of American aviation is being sacrificed on the altar of concentrated executive control of governmental functions.

What have the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board achieved during their 20 months' existence? I call attention to the fact that American aviation today surpasses that of every other country in the world. Our air lines are the best equipped. Our pilots are the best trained. Our schedules are the most frequent. Our air lines are the only air lines in the world flying as much by night as by day. All-time passenger records were broken during the past year by staggering margins. The number of licensed pilots has increased from 21,000 in August 1938 to more than 34,000, and at the close of the present fiscal year will exceed 40,000. The number of aircraft to which certificates have been issued has increased from 9,000 to 12,000. The safety of private flying has shown a very decided improvement. Last year the air lines showed a net profit, 15 of the 17 individual air lines operating in the black; and, last, but most important, our air lines are the safest in the world. The Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board have staffed themselves with competent, well-trained, and conscientious men, relatively free from political patronage; and today they are among the most outstanding—if not the most outstanding—agencies of the United States Government.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof. In the face of all these facts we are asked in Reorganization Plan IV to permit an efficient agency of the Congress which has achieved excellent results to be junked. In the fact of objections voiced by the public, the air-line pilots, and the aviation industry, we are to throw away the system which the Congress after 2 years has found to be satisfactory.

I sincerely hope that in the consideration of such a vital matter, involving lives and property, the Senate will not permit a proved success to become a proved failure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an editorial on this subject from the New York Times, one from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and one from the Kansas City Star.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of April 28, 1940]

SHIFTING C. A. A.

There is increasing opposition to the proposal, under the President's fourth reorganization plan, which would place the Civil Aeronautics Authority in the position of a bureau of the Department of Commerce and abolish the Air Safety Board. Protests against such action have been made from many quarters, including the air lines, which are regulated by the C. A. A.; the organized pilots who fly the air lines, the American Federation of Labor, and individuals deeply interested in the welfare of aviation, including Mayor LaGuardia. The effect of the proposed change would be to put control of civil aviation back in the hands of a Secretary of Commerce, who, however upright and efficient, is still a political appointee without fixed term.

Most disturbing is the proposal to abolish the independent Air Safety Board. None will maintain that the splendid 13-month performance of the air lines without fatality or serious injury is solely due to C. A. A. or the Board. The record, however, taken over a period sufficiently extended to be persuasive, indicates that their work has been of high value. Under the present set-up of the Authority and the Board investigations of accidents are made by an independent body. Under the proposed reorganization they would be made by a bureau of a body—itself a bureau subject to the direct, purse-string control of the Department of Commerce—charged with setting the very safety regulations to be investigated. It was precisely such a situation which the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, creating the C. A. A. and the Air Safety Board, was designed to eliminate. We should not return to it.

[From the St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch of April 24, 1940]

BUT IS IT "SPINACH"?

Greatly to the surprise of those best acquainted with problems of air transportation, President Roosevelt has recommended that the Air Safety Board be abolished and that the Civil Aeronautics Authority, now an independent agency, be placed under the Department of Commerce.

This recommendation is made as part of the President's plan to reorganize and streamline the various Government boards and bureaus. But the chief aim in reorganization is to increase efficiency and experience has shown emphatically that the C. A. A. and the Air Safety Board operate more efficiently as independent agencies.

When these agencies were created by Congress in 1938 the country had been startled and dismayed by a constant series of air tragedies. Commercial aviation, an indispensable supplement to national air defense, was in danger of being permanently checkmated by the failure of public confidence.

In this emergency Congress stepped in and abolished the old politics-ridden Bureau of Air Commerce, which under Secretary Roper had been notoriously timid and inefficient, and supplanted it with the independent C. A. A. and the Air Safety Board.

The C. A. A. formulated the rules and undertook their enforcement, and the Air Safety Board was given the function of placing the blame for accidents. Thus the Air Safety Board has been a check not only on the commercial aviation companies and their employees but also on the C. A. A.

Political and business pressures have been taboo in both agencies. Regulations requiring planes to be grounded in dangerous flying weather have been strictly enforced.

Before these new agencies took over an average of 1 pilot and 3 passengers were losing their lives each 28 days. Since the reform took place the improvement has been spectacular.

It was climaxed by the announcement on March 26 that a full year had passed without the death or injury of a single passenger or pilot. Small wonder that the Air Line Pilots' Association is fighting against a reversion to the old system.

To be sure, the President's reorganization plan must not be crippled. But the unimportance of these two minor exceptions in the plan as a whole is clearly indicated by the fact that the first three drafts of the reorganization plan left the the C. A. A. and the Air Safety Board as they are. Only the fourth and final draft proposed returning them to the Department of Commerce, where they might fall into the hands of the very men who made a tragic failure of the job before.

The task of creating the sentiment necessary to prevent the proposed change rests largely upon the air pilots and the public at large. President Roosevelt appears strangly unconcerned with objections to his scheme. "Pure spinach," is his reply to the statements of those opposing him.

But wise-cracking retorts are no answer to the salient fact that under the system he proposes to restore a disgraceful and appalling loss of life took place, while under the system which he would scrap a brilliant record of air safety has been recorded.

When a system is working not merely well, but well-nigh perfectly, why change it? Congress should give this reorganization item a resounding veto and preserve for the C. A. A. and the Air Safety Board their present independent, efficient status.

In a matter which concerns the lives of air passengers and pilots, a Congressman would be gravely derelict to give party regularity or Executive pride any consideration.

[From the Kansas City (Mo.) Star of April 23, 1940]

WARNING FROM THE PAST

The Air Safety Board was set up in August 1938 to investigate all airplane accidents, to determine their probable cause, and to report its findings to the Civil Aeronautics Authority, so that appropriate steps could be taken to correct any conditions that might lead to a repetition. The Board was deliberately separated from the C. A. A., which had been made responsible for ground services, inspections, and safety regulations. This was done in order that the latter agency should not operate as judge in cases where negligence by its own employees might prove to have caused the accident.

In the 9 years preceding the establishment of the Safety Board and Aeronautics Authority, when supervision over nonmilitary aviation was vested chiefly in the Department of Commerce, the American air lines had an average of 93 accidents annually, resulting in 40 deaths. In 1939, the first full year of the new set-up, there were 2 accidents, with 12 deaths. But these fatalities occurred early in the year, and it has now been well over 12 months since any person, crew member or passenger, has lost his life on a regularly scheduled flight.
